the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] does me unusual honor in saying it is my idea and amendment. I was not in the House when this amendment was first put on the Army and Navy bills. That was started in 1913, and I did not become a Member until 1915. So much for that. Most of the information that he gave you was wrong. This amendment was put in the Army bill to stop the efforts of the arsenal commanders or the Chief of Ordnance to introduce into the arsenal what is known as the Taylor system. I do not know whether the gentleman understands the Taylor system or not, but when this bill was before the House last February I read here a letter from a man who is at the present time the president of the American Engineering Society, which originated the Taylor system, absolutely repudiating the system and saying it was understood very well that it was not necessary and that it was disastrous to industry to put it in anywhere. I have asked on the floor of this House—and there are a good many manufacturers here—if there is any man who has heard of the Taylor system being introduced in any manufacturing institution in this country, and so far as I know no one has said they have known of such an institution.

The Taylor system is this kind of a proposition—it is little understood, but some engineers claim that they could go into a factory and by taking certain young men and finding out who was most efficient in doing a certain thing they could find that he can do it in far less time than an older employee, and then they want permission to go to the older employee and remake that man over under a new method of doing the same thing.

There was not anybody who would introduce it into their industries, and they went to the Chief of Ordnance and tried to introduce it into the arsenals of this country. I have no arsenal in my district, but I presume that I have visited arsenals and studied this industrial situation more than most of you. I know, and any man knows, that if you introduce this, what you will get will not be efficiency but inefficiency. I will tell you what it will do. If you will allow the Army officers to do this, every man who comes from West Point will serve his apprenticeship as first lieutenant in the arsenals over men with stop-watches held on them to time their movements as to how they do a certain thing. There is not a Member of this House that would tolerate for a minute a man standing over to say to him, "You are doing this wrong; you will have to start with your left hand instead of your right hand." The effect of it was at once that every efficient employee of the arsenal left there, and you increased the overhead expenses of your arsenals many, many times, because every officer that works in the arsenal is charged up against that arsenal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the gentlemen of the committee that they consider how this section would strike them if it read like this:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer of the Army while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of the marching of troops.

Would you like it? Would you not think it grossly absurd? Why, time is the vitals and essence of military affairs. time that troops can march in light marching order, the time it takes them to cover a distance in heavy marching order, the time it takes them to throw up entrenchments, the time it takes to put artillery in place, are the very things knowledge of which is absolutely essential to success in war. The very life of the Nation may depend upon the accuracy of such knowledge. Now, we pay the soldier in war $30 a month. Is he to be measured, and the man working to supply him with the things that are absolutely necessary for the successful conduct of the soldier's work for the defense of the Nation not to be measured at all? I appreciate the point of view of the employee who does not want a stop watch held over him. I know that such systems have given rise to great abuses. I know that a stop-watch efficiency system-I am not sure it was the Taylor system-has largely broken up the morale in the Post Office Department, where they would time a particular rusher and then, as the gentleman from Iowa has just said, they would try to measure and remake every other man in the office according to that man's standard. Of course, I would not favor any such system as that, and I agree that such a system would not conduce to real efficiency. But this paragraph certainly goes far beyond that when it forbids making, not only by stop watch, but by any other time-measuring device, a time study of any job. What is the job? The job is making munitions of war, things we need with which to defend this country. It may be as essential to our safety to know how much time it takes to make them as to know how much time it will take for Army lorries to take them to the Is it possible that our officers can be forbidden to battle line. make any time study of that kind of a job?

I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas

[Mr. Blanton] ought to carry.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate may be closed in 10 minutes on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. TAGUE. Reserving the right to object, I would like five minutes.

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman hold the question for five minutes, and then we will have a better idea?

Mr. ANTHONY. Then 15 minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] told you this matter had been before Congress since 1913. It is true, but it is also true that it has been before the War Department since 1912. At that time the gentleman now occupying the chair over this committee served on a commission along with ex-Secretary of Labor Wilson and one other Member of the House, to investigate the conditions surrounding the trouble at the Watertown Arsenal, where the employees had rebelled against the use of the so-called Taylor system of scientific management, and this committee rendered a comprehensive report regarding conditions in establishments where the system was employed. It does not make any difference whether it is the Taylor system, the Gantt system, or the Emerson system, or any other system of scientific management, all are founded upon the same principle. A splitsecond stop watch is held over every movement of every employee, who is driven at top speed, and the minimum time it takes to make a certain article or to do a certain particular piece of work is the time fixed for that job. And that is what you are confronted with in the Watertown Arsenal and other Army and Navy mechanical establishments where other systems were employed in whole or in part.

This provision has no relation to the proposition the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] is trying to inject into it. It relates absolutely to an inhuman system that was in vogue in the Government establishments up to the time this limitation was first adopted in 1914. The system has been tried out by the Bethlehem Steel Co. and other industrial plants in the country, and has generally been discarded as being destructive to the morale of the employees and tends to destroy initiative and efficiency on account of discontent among the workers

Mr. VAILE. I appreciate the gentleman's argument in regard to that system

Mr. NOLAN. It is all involved, and you can not separate the stop-watch and bonus and premium systems employed under this so-called system of scientific management.

Mr. VAILE. Do you prohibit any time being set?
Mr. NOLAN. You can not prohibit any time be You can not prohibit any time being set. It does not prohibit, but it is for getting a common-sense system of shop management whereby the human element in industry is recognized, at the same time exacting of every employee a good day's work for a good day's pay.

Mr. VAILE. Is not a clock a time-measuring device?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes; and it is being used in every department of the Government in connection with the work of the establishment under common-sense conditions.

Mr. VAILE. And this amendment prohibits its use.
Mr. NOLAN. It absolutely does not. And the Assistant Secretary of the Navy never testified that this provision in the naval bill reduced efficiency 65 per cent, but it was testified to, as everybody knows, that efficiency had dropped during the war, in every line of industry in this country, from a rating of 100 per cent to around 65 per cent, but this was due to the expansion of our shops, and the introduction of inexperienced men who were drawn from nonessential industries into the manufacture of munitions and war materials, and it has not gotten back to normal yet, and will not until conditions get normal, both as to the matter of wages, prices, and everything else, which will include the complete return of the workers to their prewar positions.

Every Congress since 1914, at each session, whenever it had an Army bill or Navy bill before it has carried this provision. Your Army and Navy has not suffered from lack of efficiency. Your industrial and mechanical establishments have not been run down because of this provision. On the other hand, former Secretary of the Navy Daniels repeatedly urged its retention in the Navy bills. This is a humane provision. If any Member of this House wants to know anything about the so-called Taylor system, let him read the hearings that were held before the Committee on Labor during the Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth Congresses. I guarantee that any man who studies them will come into this House and vote on every occasion for this provision. You can not apply that sort of a system to human beings. You can not time them as you time a race herse or a dog on a coursing park or the athlete on the cinder path, who trains for a particular race or game. You have got to give some consideration to the human element involved in industry. That is what this provision is intended to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The whole speed-up system is a scheme designed to throw men into the discard?

Mr. NOLAN. Exactly. As soon as they are through they are thrown on the industrial scrap heap. This Government can not afford to stand for that sort of system. Gen: Crozier and every man connected with it in the War Department and the arsenals. were unable to justify it, and the so-called experts, every one of them, that came before the Committee on Labor fell down. They could not point to a single instance where any consider- laws? [Applause.]

able number of men were employed in industry where the system was not eventually discarded; the principle underlying it is indefensible.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may have two additional minutes out of the time already fixed by the committee. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. NOLAN. Now, gentlemen, if you want to find a concrete illustration of where the Taylor system was applied, you will find it in Mr. Taylor's book on Scientific Management, where he tells you how he picked labor in the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s plant, just what he was able to do, how far they were able to apply it, and what a fine set of men he got; and he also tells you in that book about the number of men he put on the scrap heap in the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s establishment. There is nothing in this system that fits a man to a job. There is nothing in this system of scientific management as applied by Tayler, Emerson, and Gantt that tries to fit men into a particular job. If they do not hit the ball and can not follow the pace. they have to go on the scrap heap. Under it men are worth less than machines; they drive both to the breaking point, then they are discarded. This great Government of ours can not stand for that principle. The Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, Sixtyfifth, and Sixty-sixth Congresses would not stand for that prin-The Sixty-seventh will declare likewise.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes, Mr. CLOUSE. Suppose a man perfectly inefficient is put on a job. Does the gentleman contend that he should be put on the pay roll and kept there, regardless of his inefficiency?

Mr. NOLAN. No, I do not. I maintain that a man who can not do a good day's work for a good day's pay ought not to be put on any pay roll.

Mr. CLOUSE. Then, what objection has the gentleman to striking out this paragraph, so that he can be discharged in the event that he can not come up to the standard?

Mr. NOLAN. There is nothing in this paragraph that provides for the keeping of inefficient men on the pay roll. Army or Navy can discharge their employees at any time for inefficiency or for any other cause that is provided for under civil service, and this provision, either in or out of the bill, has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. CLOUSE. But the gentleman says there is a provision in there that no timepiece can be used.

Mr. NOLAN. Nevertheless, ordinary common sense is the best science of management, and that is what they are following to-day, and you can not find inefficiency in these Govern-[Applause.]
The time of the gentleman from Caliment establishments.

The CHAIRMAN. fornia has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, to the older Members of the House who have been here in the past two sessions this is no new question, but to the Members who have just come into the House I want to emphasize the fact that the opposition to this section comes from the same source that it came from on every occasion heretofore. It comes from those who do not know anything about the system, and who have admitted it on the floor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when you talk about efficiency, I want to ask, Are you going to measure efficiency by a stop-watch system? There is not a man who has ever had men in his employ in great numbers who has ever applied the stop-watch system without finding out that it not only broke down the efficiency of his men but it also broke down the morale of his

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] says it ought to go into effect. He does not tell you why. He can not tell you why.

Mr. UNDERHILL, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Does it break down the morale of the men to pay them a premium or bonus if they do extra good work?

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, it breaks down the morale of a man when you put a young man of 25 years of age beside a man of 50 years of age, whose efficiency is marked only by his speed and not by his workmanship.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then is not this an indirect way of insinuating an old-age pension or insurance system into our

Mr. TAGUE. No. Mr. Chairman; it is not. If the gentleman knows the stop-watch system-

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.
Mr. NOLAN. Let me suggest that we have taken steps to establish an old-age pension system in our Government establishments for men who have given to the Government the best days of their lives. Instead of throwing them on the scrap heap we give them a retired pension.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But we give them a pension after they have retired from their work.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the matter of giving pensions to the workmen in the arsenals and navy yards of this country has never been caused by keeping out the speeding system. The best answer to this speed-up system was given during the Great War. We had ships built for the Government in 90 days and in 120 days at enormous expense, and every one of those ships, without a single exception, that was built on the speed system has been brought into the navy yards and shipyards of the country and repaired by the Government at tremendous expense.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TAGUE. I regret I can not, although I would like to,
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield,
Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, all you have to do is to go into the navy yards and arsenals and find whether there is any inefficiency or not. I have heard a great deal about the inefficiency in the navy yards and arsenals, but the inefficiency is usually measured by the expense of the job. I call the attention of gentlemen to the discussions on the naval bill concerning the condition of the navy yards. The same thing applies to the arsenals. Young men just out of the Naval and Military Academies are brought into the navy yards and arsenals and put over men who have worked as expert mechanics for 20 or 30 years, and those young men who know little about the job attempt to teach the experienced mechanics, and their efficiency under the Taylor system is marked up by a young and inefficient man. The Taylor system, as explained by the gentleman from California [Mr. NoLAN], has been thrown out of every first-class establishment in the country. There is hardly one using it to-day. But there are some men wearing the uniform who are put over men in arsenals who would like to bring in some system to perpetuate themselves on the job.

Invariably the man who makes the test with the stop-watch system is unable to perform the work himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
The gentleman from New York [Mr. London] is recognized for the remaining three minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty with those who would like to see this provision stricken out is that they are captivated by the word "efficiency." The object of a time-measuring device is not to stimulate mental activity, is not to help develop the brain in its application to work. Its purpose is to quicken physical movement and to intensify physical effort in connection with a particular operation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LONDON. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. Rather is it not to prevent the number of unnecessary movements by showing that you can do the same work with a less number of movements? [Applause.] That is the point.

Mr. LONDON. No; the object everywhere is to multiply the number of physical movements. Every industrial establishment where there is personal contact between employer and employee, and which has attempted to introduce the so-called efficiency system, has been compelled to abandon it because of the disastrous effect upon the health and the morale of the workers. It is only in those cases where a corporation is the employer, and a superintendent who is the slave of the corporation drives other slaves, that this system is being continued. Wherever man deals with man directly in the capacity of employer and employee this system has proven to be a failure.

Will the gentleman yield for a friendly Mr. UPSHAW.

Mr. LONDON. Pardon me. I have only a minute and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LONDON. The expression "other time-measuring device" refers to a measuring device similar to a stop watch. It does not exclude the usual methods or means for measuring time. It certainly has no reference to a clock. It has no reference to any method by which the time which it takes to produce an article is measured.

On the question of a bonus you have this reservation in the bill. You are not to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in bonus or reward may be offered for anything that is the result of intellectual activity, for anything that is the product of the human brain. The so-called bonus system mercilessly applied by men who have no interest in human beings and who look upon all men in the factory as mere automata, exhausts the body, stifles all mental effort, and ultimately diminishes produc-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. Blanton. Mr. Chairman, may that amendment be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 64, line 16, after the word watch," strike out the following language: "Or other time-measuring

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Under-HILL] to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

UNDERHILL), there were—ayes 36, noes 69.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment oftered by Mr. Luce: Page 64, line 24, after the word "plant," insert a new paragraph reading:

"No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be expended for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government an hourly wage or salary larger than that paid by private employers for corresponding work in the same locality."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition to speak on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the committee all debate has been closed.

Mr. LUCE. On the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. On the paragraph and all amendments thereto, and an additional paragraph is considered as an amendment to the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The pay of cadets for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, shall be fixed at $780 per annum and one ration per day or commutation thereof at the rate of $1.08 per ration, to be paid from the appropriation for the subsistence of the Army: Provided, That the sum of $250 shall be credited to each cadet who entered the academy since June 15, 1920, and to each such cadet discharged since that date, to the extent of paying any balance due by any such cadet to the academy on account of initial clothing and equipment issued to him: Provided further, That hereafter each new cadet shall, upon admission to the United States Military Academy, be credited with the sum of $250 to cover the cost of his initial clothing and equipment issue, to be deducted subsequently from his pay.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BARBOUR: Page 66, line 7, after the word "pay," add the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter there shall be paid to any candidate for admission to the United States Military Academy, who shall be ordered to report at such Military Academy for mental or physical examination and shall be rejected, the amount of his actual and necessary traveling expenses."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman reserve it for a statement?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will reserve the point.
Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of calling attention to a condition which I think should be corrected. Under the present system of admitting cadets to the Military and Naval Academies mental examinations are held in various parts of the country, and the are held in various parts of the country, and the cadets are then ordered to report at West Point or Annapolis for physical examination. Many of the young men who aspire to enter the Naval and Military Academies are of limited means. They are the operation of any Government plant. In other words, the required to travel great distances and report at the academies for examination and frequently for some slight physical defects

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is not the gentleman entirely misinformed as to that? I am very sure that in various parts of the United States they conduct the physical as well as the mental examina-

Mr. BARBOUR. That is what should be done. But I will state to the gentleman that I recently nominated a young man for admission to the Military Academy at West Point. This young man passed the mental examination in California. He was ordered to report at West Point for physical examination, and came all the way across the continent from California for that purpose. I am informed that for some slight defect in his eyesight he was rejected. It cost in the neighborhood of $600 for him to come east and take that examination. I will say to the gentleman from New York that if the authorities at the academies will conduct these examinations, both mental and physical, somewhere near the residences of the young men, and either accept or reject them there, there will be no need for this amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman please, it is done regularly. Mr. ANTHONY. The Army authorities will take the examination near the home of the applicant.

Mr. BARBOUR. I know it is done in the case of the mental examinations.

Mr. ANTHONY. And also the physical; he will be ordered before the nearest Army surgeon.

Mr. LINEBERGER. If the gentleman will yield, I have a case in my own district. A young man was subjected to a physical examination in his district. He came to Annapolis and was again subjected to another physical examination and eliminated because of a slight defect. However, he finally got in on a third examination. But assuming that he had not been able to obtain the third examination he might have been sent home after the second examination.

Mr. BARBOUR. Is not the physical examination given in the vicinity to the young man merely preliminary, and is he not again required to go to Annapolis or West Point for a further examination? Candidates are rejected for physical defects after arriving at the academies.

Mr. ANTHONY. They have a further physical examination, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the defect will be found in the preliminary examination. Mr. BARBOUR. If that is so, my amendment would not cost the Government much, because there would be very few young men who would have their expenses paid.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. I have just appointed two young men to West Point and to Annapolis. The instructions were that they should go to some physician of their choosing near their home and take a tentative examination. The physician right there might reveal something that would save them the trouble of going to West Point or Annapolis. I have just had a letter from one young man who seems to be satisfactory in every way except a little question about his feet. The physician is afraid that he may be rejected when he gets to West Point.

Mr. BARBOUR. Does not the gentleman think it would be a whole lot better to have the final physical examination take place somewhere near the young man's home, so that he would know definitely whether he was going to be admitted, and thus save his railroad fare if he is to be rejected?

Mr. LOWREY. I think it would be much better, and that is the reason I am making this statement.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I think it was the first day that this bill was under consideration, during the general debate, that I made bold to say that in the future airplane and chemical warfare would figure in a very large way. I did this without knowledge of exactly what preparations had been made for chemical warfare. On yesterday I read a memorandum given by Gen. Fries, of the Chemical Warfare Service, to Gen. Wood on his departure for the Philippines on the probable use of gas from airplanes in the next emergency in which the United States might be engaged.

Mr. Hill, a writer on the New York Herald, has a copyrighted article which appeared in the Herald last Sunday on that subject. The memorandum submitted by Gen. Fries and the article written by Mr. Hill are so much to the point that I desire that they shall be available for Members of Congress, for the General Staff, and for the country. I therefore desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting this copyrighted

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, the question has been raised here before, without reaching any decision, as to whether or not it is proper to insert in the RECORD a copyrighted article and thus make it frankable. Has the gentleman the permission of the author?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; but I have made inquiry and men in position to know tell me that where the article is copyrighted it is proper to insert it in the Record if due credit is given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas to extend his remarks as indicated.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would be glad to consent to the gentleman's request for unanimous consent if he will allow me to put some articles in the RECORD in which I can show that any other arm of the service would put all the rest out of business. [Laughter and applause.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I shall not object to the gentleman putting such articles into the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if there is going to be a mutual agreement, I have two or three articles I want to put in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

In all, Artillery Detachment, $118,536.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the fact that the New York Herald article to which I referred a moment ago, and for which I asked unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record, was inserted in the Record yesterday in another body in connection with a speech made there. As the RECORD already contains the article, I shall not ask that it be again inserted, and I ask leave to withdraw my request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to withdraw the article. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, current and ordinary expenses, $235,475.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the sum of $235,475.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make this in the nature of a pro forma amendment in order that I may ask the chairman a question. This sum of $235,475 is made up of various items of appropriation. In the last 8 or 10 pages the expression "and so forth" is used some 50, 60, or 70 times, in connection with appropriations. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be a wise policy, as expressed by various chairmen in the House heretofore, to discontinue the use of this expression "and so forth." It takes in the whole world within the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Ordinarily, I think the gentleman's suggestion would be a good one, but the gentleman will notice that the West Point bill is itemized more than any other bill before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I know that it is, but we still use the "and so forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. For instance, in this one item of repair it provides:

Repairs and improvements, namely: Timber, plank, boards, joists, wall strips, laths, shingles, slate, tin, sheet lead, zinc, screws, nails, locks, hinges, glass, paints, turpentine, olls, and so forth, $55,000.

It leaves out the putty.
Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman knows that notwithstanding the many items specified, they might not spend a single dollar of the appropriation for any of those numerous articles he has mentioned, but could spend the entire appropriation in that paragraph for the "and so forth."

Mr. ANTHONY. But it will have to be for repairs and im-

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but I wanted to call attention to it in the way of protest. I hope we will stop using this indefinite expression. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

For the policing of barracks and bathhouses, $25,000.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 4; page 82, as I desire to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. I desire to ask the chairman if the word "policing," in line 4, is used in the ordinary sense of guarding and protecting against depredations or is used in the technical military sense of keeping clean?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is quite correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not know which way, and I am asking the gentleman for information.

Mr. ANTHONY. It means charwomen and men who clean up and keep the barracks in order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Has the gentleman provided anything for policing barracks in the various military posts?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. Ordinarily that work is done by either enlisted men or by men of the service corps, but at West Point the cleaning-up work is done by charwomen and men employed as laborers for that purpose. Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I thought it was a part of military training that required men who are being educated at the expense of the Government to learn to keep their own quarters clean. During the emergency of the war when men over the military age, and some of them holding the degree of doctor of philosophy whom I know, many of them with families, volunteered for a very serious national emergency for 90 days training preparatory to leading our armies in time of war, the valuable time of these men was partially consumed in picking up cigarette butts and match stems.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McSWAIN. Certainly.

Mr. ANTHONY. My impression is that at West Point the cadets do police their own rooms—that is, keep their quarters in order-but there are a vast number of other buildings there, such as areaways, hallways, schoolrooms, and so forth, and those the cadets are not forced to clean up.

Mr. McSWAIN. Upon the assurance of the chairman, a very fair man, I see, I withdraw my amendment; but I propose to learn more about this institution if the people keep me in the Congress.

[Applause.] TRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amend-The CHAIRMAN.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to turn over to the United States Military Academy without expense all such surplus material as may be available and necessary for the construction of temporary buildings; also surplus tools and materiel for use in the instruction of cadets at the academy.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], in charge of this bill, will at the proper time ask for a separate vote on two amendments which have been adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I desire very briefly to discuss these two amendments, and their effect as I understand them. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnesl reduced the appropriation for pay of the Army from $83,000,000 to $72,678,000. Let us go back a bit in the consideration of this matter. When the military bill for the present fiscal year became a law it provided for funds enough to pay an Army of 175,000 enlisted men. It was the expectation of the Congress that the Army would not be recruited beyond that strength. The Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, believed we should have a much larger establishment than was appropriated for by the Congress, and believing, as he stated, he had the authority to do so under the national defense act, he not only continued to accept recruits but he set up a very expensive recruiting establishment and recruited rapidly on all sorts of liberal and engaging promises. The Congress taking note of this increase beyond the number of men contemplated by the action of the Congress in making the appropriation, the Secretary of War was interrogated by the Committee on Military Affairs on the subject, and that committee expressed as clearly and definitely as it could to the Secretary their dissent, their objection to the policy he was following. The Secretary, however, continued to follow that policy, and finally a resolution was introduced prohibiting the Secretary from enlisting men beyond 175,000. The Secretary, however, continued to enlist men, continued to maintain a great recruiting organization, and to accept enlistments until both the House and the Senate had passed the resolution and until both the House and the Senate had again passed it over the presidential veto. The program of enlistments did not cease until the day the bill was passed over the veto.

In the meantime the Army had been recruited to a strength of over 235,000 men. When the committee came to consider this bill last January there was a general opinion in the House and in the committee that at the very earliest reasonable date we ought to reduce the Regular Establishment to about 150,000 men, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts and the flying cadets.

That was the view of the committee that framed this bill last January; that was the view of the House that passed the bill; and that is, I hope, still the view of the House. It is my view. But it developed after the bill had passed the House that it would not be possible-that it would not be practicable, at least-to reduce the enlisted strength of the Army to a point anywhere near 150,000 men by the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1 next, when this appropriation begins to run. And so in the conference, in order to meet that situation, the appropriation was increased from $72,000,000 to $77,000,000, in round numbers, in order that we might provide for the larger force we would have at the beginning of the year and be able to take care of a force gradually decreasing until it reached 150,000 toward the end of the year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in that form the hill passed and would have become the law, except for the pocket veto of the President. When the committee began the consideration of these questions at the beginning of this session it was discovered there had not been as considerable a reduction of the enlisted strength as had been anticipated, largely, it is believed, because industrial conditions were not such as to tempt men to leave the service prior to the end of their terms of service. any rate, when the committee began the consideration of this bill soon after the 4th of March, when the present administration took charge of the War Department, they found that the enlisted strength of the Regular Establishment was still about 230,000 men.

It was, of course, necessary to consider this bill in view of that situation, not from a situation as we might wish to have it, but from the viewpoint of the situation as it was.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am one of those who voted for the 150,000 men a few days ago. I did so because the reason did not seem to me sufficient that the Army could not be reduced. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming if there is any other reason that appeals to the judgment and conscience of Members of Congress for voting for a larger Army than 150,000?

Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of voting for an Army of 150,000. It is a question of appropriating for the pay of the Army with a view of reducing it to a strength of not more than 150,000 as soon as practicable.

Now, let us be practical. It may be popular somewhere to say, "I would not under any circumstances vote to sustain an army at any time of over 150,000"; but you have an Army of 230,000, and there is no practical way in which you can reduce the Army to 150,000 in the short period between now and the Ist of July. It is a practical question. What are you going to do about it? Are you willing to take action that is likely to lead to a disorganization of the Army, to the reduction of some of the units of the Army to a point where they are not available for useful or active service, or will you follow a course under which we can reach 150,000 at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will it not, as a matter of fact, be the effect of the Byrnes amendment to reduce the Army to 120,000 men and not 150,000?

Mr. MONDELL. There were at last reports nearly 230,000 men. It is not impossible to reduce the Army much below 200,000 at the beginning of the fiscal year to which this bill applies. Therefore if we appropriate for 150,000 men it will be necessary to reduce the Army by the end of the fiscal year to less than 120,000 men in order to pay the larger number we have at the beginning of the year, and still pay for all the men in the Army during the entire year. The Byrnes amendment does not provide for an army of 150,000 men, but for an army of 120,000 men or less at the end of the fiscal year.

I am not so sure but what when we come to prepare the next Army bill we may find-and I hope we shall-that we can reduce the Army semewhat below 150,000 men. But I do not think that anyone has brought forward any argument to prove that it is safe to do that now, or during the time for which these appropriations run.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After

The Chair hears none. Mr. LONGWORTH. I wish the gentleman would elaborate a little bit on that proposition, because I am convinced that a number of gentlemen in this House voted for the Byrnes amendment the other day, believing that they were voting to reduce the Army to 150,000, whereas, as a matter of fact, they were reducing it to 120,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Gentlemen here do not want me to diagram this as one would have to do it to a primer class. all mathematicians, at least sufficiently versed in mathematics to know that if you begin the fiscal year with 200,000 and have money enough for only 150,000, before the fiscal year closes the number must be reduced down to below 120,000 men. It may be necessary to reduce to 100,000 men if the reduction to 150,000 is not reached early in the year. That is very clear, it seems to me, to anyone who has considered the matter at all.

Now, it may be when we come to appropriate for the next fiscal year we may go below 150,000 men, but at the present time the Congress is not proposing or suggesting that we shall reduce below 150,000 men, and yet this amendment was adopted in committee which would in effect reduce the establishment to less than 120,000 men-a dangerous reduction, in my opinion, just at this time and under present circumstances. I do not think we can afford to do it. The Secretary of War does not believe we can safely do it. No one having knowledge of the establishment believes we can do it without harm to the service. Now, some gentlemen seem to be of the opinion that you can reduce the Army by forcible methods within two or three months from 230,000 men down to 150,000. Anyone who is at all familiar with military establishments knows that is impossible without doing great harm to the service. So this amendment should be voted down and restore the sum which, taking the Army at its strength when this appropriation begins to run, will pay the number of men in the establishment at that time and the gradually reducing force which will bring us down to 150,000 men at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. I can not quite understand just what is meant by the gentleman's suggestion that a separate vote be demanded. A separate vote might be demanded

Mr. MONDELL. On this particular amendment.
Mr. TOWNER. But on the amendment to reduce $83,000,000 to $72,000,000? I did not know but what the gentleman's motion would be on the Hull amendment, which was adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] will also ask for a separate vote on the so-called Hull amendment. I am sure the gentleman who offered it had no thought of doing anything that would injuriously affect the service. And yet when we direct the Secretary of War to discharge a man on his application, we do something that puts an end to all discipline in the establishment. Why, a company or a regiment ordered to march on some cold and rainy morning could offer their resignations, and the offer must be accepted if the mandatory provision of this amendment be adhered to. Men under charge of a violation of the Articles of War, as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] suggested, could demand their release, and under a strict interpretation of that amendment they must be discharged. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gar-

[Applause.] RETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I repeat again what I said when this subject matter was last under discussion, that there is no use for us to deceive ourselves and no use for us to be deceived as to what is before us.

Those who favor a large Army will not vote for the Byrnes amendment nor for the Hull amendment. I can see no reason founded in logic why those who favor a reduction of the Army should not vote for both of those amendments. The apprehensions of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] as to the demoralization of the Army by reason of the direction—contained in the Hull amendment—to the Secretary of War to discharge soldiers upon their application until he shall have discharge contained in the Hull amendment—to the Secretary of War to discharge soldiers upon their application until he shall have discharge soldiers. charged down to 150,000 are not, in my opinion, well founded, because that amendment provides that it shall be done under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may make. That means, of course, that the Secretary of War would provide rules and regulations under which men could not be discharged when starting on a march or subject to a court-martial for some offense which they may have committed.

The gentleman from Wyoming further states that the adoption of these amendments would cause a reduction of the Army by the end of the fiscal year 1922 to perhaps 120,000. Well, if conditions remain in this country as they are now that does not scare me any. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And if conditions change, this Congress will be in session practically all the time, ready to meet whatever emergency may arise in the But even that apprehension of the gentleman is not well founded, because the provision of the Hull amendment is that it shall take effect immediately; and so, directly upon the passage of this bill and without waiting for the fiscal year 1922, the Secretary of War, if he discharges his duty under the law, will begin to reduce the Army, so that he can have out of the Army before the beginning of the fiscal year—before July 1, 1921-a very considerable number of these men. So that there is nothing to be apprehended upon that point, in my humble judgment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Suppose that all the really best, experienced men in the Army should be discharged and there were left nothing but the men least qualified; what sort of an embarrassment would the Secretary of War be obliged to meet?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I do not apprehend that that condition will arise. I do not think that that is a thing that need frighten us here. The proposition confronting us is whether or not we intend to respond, as we can respond intelligently, in my judgment, to what I conceive to be the overwhelming sentiment of this country, that there shall be a reduction in the Army of the United States. [Applause on the Demo-

Now, if I am in error about that, of course, Congress ought to vote down these amendments. If you favor a reduction of the Army, if you favor getting back toward the small Army basis, there is no danger that I can see in supporting these amend-Nothing new has arisen here in the last few days since by a decided majority the Committee of the Whole adopted the Byrnes amendment. Nothing new has arisen that I know anything about of a public character since by a very decided vote the Hull amendment was adopted. At both times there was an unusually large number of Members in Committee of the Whole. If anything has occurred to cause a change of sentiment in this House since those votes were taken it has been of a private character and not of a public nature. [Applause on the Democratic side. 1

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. TOWNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized. Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I only desire, if I can, to try to clear up a little the parliamentary situation. We shall be called upon to vote upon what is known as the Byrnes amendment to reduce, on page 15, the pay of the enlisted men from $83,000,000 to $73,000,000. If that amendment is adopted by the House or confirmed by the House, then it will be in order for us either to adopt the Hull amendment or to vote that down. standing upon what is known as the Borah amendment, on page 22, which is contained still as a part of the bill.

Manifestly, it is unnecessary for us to have in operation both the Hull amendment and what is known as the Borah amendment. The Hull amendment, however, was adopted as an amendment. The Borah amendment, as it is called, is already a part of the bill. If the Hull amendment is adopted, then we shall have both the Hull amendment and the Borah

Now, the difference between those two amendments, in effect and in general, is this: The Hull amendment compels the Secretary to reduce, on the application of soldiers, the number to 150,000 men. Well, if we adopt the Byrnes amendment, that amendment will be in consonance with the Borah amendment; but also the provision on page 22 will be in consonance with the Byrnes amendment, because the provision on page 22 is that the Army shall be reduced to the amount appropriated for it; and if we appropriate for only 150,000 men by adopting the Byrnes amendment, then that will stand. So, then, if the Byrnes amendment is adopted, we have this situation, to choose between the Hull amendment and what is known as the Borah provision.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Let me just finish this statement, and then I will yield.

I believe that the Borah amendment is the better, for it leaves the reduction to be made by the Secretary of War. Therefore I voted against the Hull amendment. Personally I shall vote for the Byrnes amendment [applause] and I shall vote against the Hull amendment, because with the Byrnes amendment adopted the provision on page 22 allows the Secretary to reduce the number in the Army to the amount appropriated for, or 150,000 enlisted men,

I make these statements so that gentlemen will understand the situation that we are in. We virtually can not get rid of what is known as the Borah provision. It is already in. We shall have no opportunity of voting on it, but we will have an opportunity of voting on the Hull amendment. As to the two provisions, let the committee understand that they first have to determine whether or not they will reduce the Army to 150,000 by reducing the appropriation from $83,000,000 to $73,000,000. the reduction is made then they will have to determine whether they want to adopt either the Hull amendment or the Borah provision, and if the Hull amendment is adopted we will have both provisions in the bill, which certainly is not necessary. It seems clear that the Hull amendment is unnecessary, because of the inclusion of the Borah provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may proceed for one minute more. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, how much time can the gentleman afford me?

Mr. ANTHONY. We want to get through the bill. Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to any further discussion after five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. FISH. I object. Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] may proceed for one additional minute of the five?

Mr. BLANTON. One minute or five minutes? The CHAIRMAN. One of the five.

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, I want to ask the gentleman this question about the Hull amendment: Do I understand by the Hull amendment that the Army can only be reduced by voluntary application for discharge, or can the Secretary reduce it by his own order?

Mr. TOWNER. I understand he is required to reduce it to 150,000 men.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. By voluntary application?
Mr. TOWNER. By voluntary application.
Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for the four remaining minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations in framing this bill have certainly sought to conform to the ideas of this House in bringing our Military Establishment down to the basis which we felt the House desired. Under the terms of this bill, if enacted, the War Department will be compelled, if it desires to maintain an Army of 168,000 men for which this bill provides, to discharge arbitrarily over 60,000 men between now and July 1, unless that number of men take advantage of the provisions of the bill and ask for their voluntary discharge. The committee felt, and I think it is absolutely correct, as has been stated on this floor, that to compel the further discharge of men in addition to the 60,000 who will be forced out of the Army by July 1 under the provisions of this bill would be an unsafe policy for this House to adopt. Now, I do not blame the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrert] and the gentlemen on that side of the House for taking advantage of a situation of this kind and of the feeling that exists in the House against a large Army, to endeavor to embarrass the present administration. Personally, I am opposed to a large Army. I am willing at an ordinary time to stand for the Army of 150,000 men that this House desires; but gentlemen on that side of the House forget the fact that while this House was considering the former bill which failed of passage their administration, in spite of the feeling in this House, arbitrarily increased the Army by 35,000 men. posed that additional handicap upon the present administration and the present Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. If the gentleman is going to bring politics into the discussion, I am going to make a point of order against discussion out of order. There has been no politics brought into it up to this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Gentlemen are taking advantage of this situation by trying to force upon the present administration the extremely difficult proposition of bringing the Army down from its present size of 230,000 to 150,000 men within the very short space of one or two months. For that reason, because of the extreme difficulty of reducing a peace-time army, the committee provided for 10,000 more men than there were in the former bill. We did this as an element of safety, so that the Army could be reduced in an orderly and safe manner, and I certainly hope that the House will recognize the difference between the situation which prevailed a few months ago and that which prevails now, and not seek to embarrass the present administration in its already difficult task of bringing the Army down from its present size of 230,000 men to 168,000 men, as provided in this bill,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subdividing rooms 401 and 402, fourth floor, east academic building, including new partitions, new entrances from corridor, new lights, additional slate blackboards, and incidental work, $4.000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say a few words with reference to my amendment, having in mind what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony] has said.

Certainly there is no foundation for the statement that in offering my amendment to this bill I was prompted by any desire to take advantage of the disagreement among gentlemen on that side of the House and to cause embarrassment to this administration.

When the bill was reported to the full Committee on Appropriations I then asked why the Army was increased from the 150,000 provided in the last bill to 168,000. No satisfactory answer was given to me then, nor has one yet been offered, and only because that is true did I offer the amendment. Now, is it fair to try and arouse partisan feeling on an amendment of this kind? During the last administration, when this House voted in favor of 175,000 men, the Secretary of War insisted upon recruiting more than 175,000; but gentlemen can not use that as any argument to govern your action at this time, be-cause I reiterate what I have said before, that the Democratic side of this House voted almost unanimously to override the veto of the Democratic President, who vetoed the resolution providing for 175.000 men. Again, when the bill went to the Senate nearly every Democratic Senator voted to override the veto of the Democratic President. No man is justified in endeavoring to arouse partisan feeling in this matter. The question is simply whether since February 3 anything has occurred to justify increasing the Army 18,000 men. On February 3 the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anthony], in discussing this matter, said:

The committee have made an appropriation for the pay of the enlisted men of the Army calculated on 150,000 men during the next fiscal year. The committee believe it will be entirely practicable to reduce the Army to that size, and the committee furthermore believe that that will be one of the policies of those who will be responsible for the Government after March 4.

I also believe that the amount appropriated will be adequate to take care of the pay of such an enlisted force without any deficiency.

Then the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said:

A year ago, just out of the war, still within the war shadows, still under the influence of war conditions, we believed we needed 175,000 enlisted men besides the Philippine Scouts and flying cadets. Most of us now believe, and the country believes, that 150,000 enlisted men will be sufficient. We are appropriating for that number. We are trying, partly, at least, to realize the hope and expectation of the American people that we shall get back to normal as soon as possible; that we reduce, so far as we can without injury to our Military Establishment, the enormous total of military costs,

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am sorry I can not yield. That was on February 3. On March 3 we passed the conference report providing for 158,000 men. This administration, just as was the case with the previous administration, has done nothing to reduce the Army. Under the Hull amendment they will be directed to reduce it to 150,000 men. It is folly to say that the bill provides for only 120,000 men, because when you say that you assume that the Secretary of War will not carry out the direction of the Congress. Now, the fact is that your Secretary of War is not to blame, and we know it. Nobody but the General Staff is to blame; nobody but the General Staff suggested the alternative proposition submitted by the Secretary providing for 182,000 men for the next fiscal year. If we are going to get back to normal, I appeal to you now to stand by 150,000 men, which the gentleman from Kansas said was adequate, and a reduction which the gentleman said was practicable.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, having started this debate I do not want to seem ungracious in suggesting that we have had a liberal debate on the subject, pretty well divided on the two sides, and I doubt if anything new can be presented. All discussion is out of order as it is now proceeding.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no motion and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Wyoming last February argued for 150,000 men he did so because there would be then time to reduce the force to that number before the 1st of July. But what happened? The Secretary of War continued to enlist until the Army reached 235 000, and to-day there are 230,000 men in the Army. When this bill becomes a law it will probably be the 1st of June at the very earliest. Then you have 30 days in which the Secretary will be required to reduce the Army from 230,000 to 150,000, if the Byrnes amendment be adopted. That will be an impossibility, and if by chance he is not able to do it by the 1st of July there will be some period during the fiscal year of 1922 when we will be compelled to reduce the Army to 120,000 men.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. What hinders the Secretary of War from beginning to-day?

Mr. MADDEN. Because he has no authority.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the Byrnes amendment make any mention of time in which these men are to be discharged?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the Hull amendment make any mention of time?

Mr. MADDEN. The Hull amendment makes no mention of The gentleman must realize that the fiscal year of 1921 ends on the 30th of June, this year. He must also realize that the Army must be reduced from 230,000 to 150,000 by June 30, which means the discharge of 80,000 men, and the gentleman must know that if that thing happens there will be discord and embarrassment in the conduct of the Military Establishment. I believe that we can afford to comply with the wish of the Secretary of War, who suggested a place where we could save $22,000,000 if we would but give him the $22,000,000 to add to the personnel of the Army. What cid the Committee on Appropriations do? They took the $22,000,000, suggested as a possible saving at the instance of the Secretary of War, and added 10,000 men to the Army at a cost of six and one half million dollars, and they come to the House with the recommendation of that saving over the last bill of fifteen and a half million dollars. So the bill before us is fifteen and one-half million dollars less than the bill passed last February, but the bill that was passed last February was vetoed by the President of the United States, then a Democrat, because it did not contain a sufficiently large Army. The conditions of the country are such that I believe there is need to-day for every man provided for in this bill, and I believe we will make a great mistake if we do not vote down the Byrnes amendment and also the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. [Applause.

Mr. FISH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate on this paragraph has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extension of water, sewer, gas, and electric systems to new backeter building, to be immediately available, $20,000.

Provided, That the constructing quartermaster, United States Military Academy, is hereby exempted from all laws and regulations relative to granting leaves of absence to employees with pay while employed on construction work at the Military Academy.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, let us mean what we say and say what we mean. [Applause.] Those men in this House who voted for 150,000 men the other day knew what they were doing then, and they know what they are going to do in a few minutes. [Applause.] They know what they are voting for and what this amendment will do when it passes this House. There seems to be a great deal of alarm in case the amendment prevails that the Army will be reduced below 150,000 men; suppose it is, suppose it goes down to 130,000. All the time while we have been debating in the last three months the National Guard has been going up; it has already increased 10,000. Besides, if the amendment prevails for 150,000 men in this House, it does not mean that it is going to prevail in the other legislative body. We know the conditions on the other side, we know that the Senate is going to increase the number, and that a conference committee will be appointed. It is fair to assume that this House will then agree to a somewhat larger Army and probably will insist on the previous conference report of 158,000. All this argument about reducing the Army to 120,000 is not built on any foundation of fact.

I listened in this House as a new Member a few months ago to the very convincing argument by the majority leader, the able gentleman from Wyoming, and to the convincing argument of the chairman of the subcommittee, and I followed their counsel and advice and voted for 150,000 men at the last They have not produced one single argument or reason that would cause Members of the House to change their minds.

[Applause.]

I have the utmost respect for the distinguished Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, a very able appointment, but we know and the history of this country substantiates that every Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy presents estimates much larger than they expect to get. The General Staff tells you that if you reduce the Army by one you are going to wreck the United States Army, but that is an old story, and the Members of the House are accustomed to that argument. Furthermore, in the last war 4,000,000 men were discharged from the Army when they set about doing it. I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is in order and will not in any way affect the morale of the Army. It simply means that these men who wish to apply for honorable discharge may do so subject to the regulations of the Ropublican Secretary of War. We Republicans who are going to vote for th's amendment are doing so because we believe it is consistent with adequate national defense and public economy. [Applause.] We bel'eve that we should vote for it now and not many years from

A scientist once came up my way and told us that "in 18,000,000 years you will not have any trees up here, you will not have any vegetation, nor anything which man raises that you can subsist on, and the human race will disappear from the earth." An old man sitting some distance back sa'd, "How many years did you say?" "Eighteen million years," said the scientist. "Oh." said the old man, "I thought you said 8,000,000 years." [Laughter.] Now is the time to reduce the size of the Army and cut down the appropriations and not 18,000,000 years from now. [Applause.]

In all, Military Academy, $2,357,250.80.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC, 2. No part of the money-appropriated in this act shall be used for paying any civilian employee of the United States Government an bourly wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee has already acted on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that the committee has already acted on this amendment. The Chair will compare the two.

Mr. LUCE. May I call the attention of the Chair to the changes which have been made?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I make the further point of order— The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds it is not the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order it is new legislation, and the further point that it is not germane to this part of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. This very amendment is one customarily fered. It is a limitation; it is very clear on its face.

Mr. STAFFORD. There has been a ruling and I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the ruling made by former Vice President Sherman, when he was acting as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on an appropriation bill, and I believe it is confirmed by other decisions, that if there is any place in the bill where an amendment is in order a Member can not offer it in a different place; otherwise, instead of expediting legislation, you will be impeding and hindering it. When the gentleman from Massachusetts offered an amendment of a similar nature and the committee voted it down, that was the place it would have been germane to the paragraph or provisions then under consideration. If the Chair is going to rule and claim that after an amendment has been rejected by the committee at a subsequent stage of proceedings any Member can offer an amendment almost identical and have it considered, and so on ad infinitum, I say there will be no progress in legislative consideration but delay continuously.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, when an amendment somewhat resembling this was presented at an earlier stage I was in very grave doubt whether the point of order would not have laid against it then as not being pertinent to the paragraph it followed. In my judgment a better case can be made out for its presentation at this stage, because it refers to nearly everything, or at least to a great deal, that is scattered through the bill. It is a blanket limitation of expenditure, which may properly be affixed at the end of a bill in the same way that frequently a section is added saying when the bill shall take effect. The gentleman would hardly contend that there might not be affixed here a section prescribing that the bill shall take effect at a specified day. I conceive of no more pertinent and appropriate place to make a limitation apply to all the paragraphs of a bill than at its conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It can not be too often stated in connection with rulings of the Chair that it is not the province of the Chair to pass upon the wisdom or lack of wisdom of an amendment. Only the form as it relates to parliamentary proceedings is material here. It seems to the Chair that this is purely a limitation, and that it limits all the appropriations carried in this bill. As stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, if it is properly a limitation, it seems to the Chair that there could be no better place than at the close of the bill, since it is applicable to the entire bill. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be

The CHAIRMAN. Is the amendment of the gentleman an amendment to the one now pending?

Mr. HERRICK. It is one I have offered, but the Chair recognized the other gentleman's amendment first. My amendment was on a different subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I well realize the committee is very properly anxious to pass judgment upon the vital issue which has just been laid before us, but if in a few minutes it is possible to save to the taxpayers of the Nation several hundred thousand dollars it may be worth while even to delay action upon the more important matter until this amendment can be explained. One of the evils brought by the war was competition between the Government and private employers, the Gov-ernment paying higher wages and offering shorter hours in order to get men and women away from their customary occupa-No exception could then be taken, for the war demands were imperative and paramount. It was, to be sure, a great hardship even to those engaged in the manufacture of munitions, and the competing of the Government and employers against each other undoubtedly caused a great rise in the cost of living. Since the war there is no longer any justification for this practice, but I regret to say it continues, and in various parts of the country civilian employees of the Government are paid higher wages than are customarily paid in the locality.

I understand in the arsenals, and possibly in the navy yards, there are boards of adjustment which carry into effect pre-cisely the proposal here. The justice of the principle therein applied we all recognize. This provision intends that the same principle should be applied throughout the expenditure of all the money herein appropriated. To illustrate, I received yester-day a letter from a constituent, in which he spoke of a young woman who had come to him saying that she had been receiving $25 a week from the Government for an hour and a half less work a day than she had previously done for $15 a week. My constituent was willing to pay $18 a week. He finds himself unable to compete under those circumstances with officers of the Army who are disposed to pay high prices, who are apparently without restriction, and who take away from private employers skilled employees by offering unreasonable wages. This is no criticism upon labor nor an attack upon the wages customarily received, but a suggestion that if the committee desires to help along in the return of the wage scale and the cost of living to a reasonable figure it can do no better than begin with its own affairs. I do not ask that less be paid than is paid in the neighborhood. I ask simply that the ordinary, customary rate of wages paid by private employers in the locality shall be the standard for Government payment in the expenditure of all this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, may we have the anrendment again read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again read. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Her-RICK] has an amendment at the desk.

Mr. HERRICK. I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

"That for the carrying out of the provisions of this act and the reduction of expense, the state of war that has existed between the United States and the Imperial German Government and the allied Central Powers since April 6, 1917, is hereby declared to be at an end, and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to withdraw all the United States soldiers now in Germany as speedily as the same can be done consistent with the interests and rights of the United States."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming makes the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill,

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Tilson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5010, the Army appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on what is known as the Byrnes amendment, on page 15, line 2, and on what is known as the Hull amendment, page 16, line 10.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the other amendments should be voted on en grosse

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask for a separate vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment, adopted on page 33, striking out the provision authorizing the transfer of automobile trucks to the Agricultural Department for road construction in the States.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 15, line 2, strike t the figures "$83,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures ut the figures $72,678,659."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 133, noes 120.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 193, nays 158, answered "present" 2, not voting 77, as follows:

Mr. Fess with Mr. Clark of Florida.

Mr. Lufkin with Mr. Montague.
Mr. Hukriede with Mr. Stoll.
Mr. Radcliffe with Mr. Gallivan.
Mr. Temple with Mr. Connally of Texas.

Mr. Begg with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. Johnson of Kentucky, was called away from the Chamber on account of the illness of his daughter. If he had been present, he would have voted "yea" on the previous vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 13, after the word "sell," strike out the remainder of the line and lines 14, 15, and 16 down to and including the word "sale," being the following language: "or to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws, for its own use and the use of the several States in road work and maintenance of roads, not less than one-half by sale."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 86, after line 14, insert a new section, as follows:
"Sec. 2. No part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for paying to any civilian employee of the United States Government an hourly wage or salary larger than that customarily paid by private individuals for corresponding work in the same locality."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Stafford) there were—ayes 213, noes 33.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eleven Members rising, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The amendment is agreed to. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Blanton moves to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment, to wit: On page 64, in line 16, after the word "watch," strike out the following language, to wit, "or other time-measuring device,"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit. The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Blanton) there were—ayes 6, noes 220.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. Mr. J. M. NELSON. On that I demand the year and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. All those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-one Members, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I ask for a division.
Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.
The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. BLANTON. On the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. They have just been refused on the passage of the bill. The gentleman from Alabama demands a division. The House divided; and there were—ayes 241, noes 23. Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Anthony, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow, and I do that for the purpose of submitting a further request for unanimous consent that we take up for consideration to-morrow under the general rules of the House H. R. 5676, a bill taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery.

Mr. Speaker, this bill might be taken up to-morrow on the Calendar Wednesday call, but the committee are anxious to have rather more latitude in the general debate than would be had on Calendar Wednesday and desire that the consideration of the bill may be in order until it is concluded. Hence my request. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So then we will go into Committee of the Whole for general debate on the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow?

There was no objection,

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an Executive order on post offices.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish to ask unanimous consent to consider the bill which he indicated?

Mr. MONDELL. I thought the two requests were agreed to. If not, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow we take up for consideration under the general rules of the House

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be taken up for consideration to-morrow under the general rules of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POSTMASTERS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Executive order I referred to a moment ago and a brief statement accompanying it be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the paper referred to may be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

When a vacancy exists or hereafter occurs in the position of postmaster at an office of the first, second, or third class, if such vacancy is not filled by nomination of some person within the competitive classified civil service who has the required qualifications, then the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated, the said commission shall certify the results thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of one of the highest three qualified eligibles for appointment to fill such vacancy unless it is established that the character or residence of any such applicant disqualifies him for appointment: Provided, That at the expiration of the term of any person appointed to such position through examination before the Civil Service Commission, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, submit the name of such person to the President for renomination without further examination.

No person who has passed his sixty-fifth birthday, or who has not actually resided within the delivery of such office for two years next preceding such vacancy, shall be given the examination for any office of

for,

If, under this order, it is desired to make nomination for any office of a person in the competitive classified service, such person must first be found by the Civil Service Commission to meet the minimum requirements for the office.

May 10, 1921.

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT ISSUED TO-DAY.

There are more than 400,000 men and women participating in governmental work who are in classified service. All of these are under the permanent provisions of the civil-service law and rules.

These permanent rules provide for the certification of the highest three eligibles, and from the list of three each necessary appointment is made. The successful operation of the principles of civil-service law has demonstrated the wisdom of this provision. This leaves in the appointing power, who has the ultimate responsibility for efficient administration, the necessary, constitutional right of choice. This right of selection is the kind of responsibility which can not legally be and is not abridged by act of Congress and is in exact harmony with the spirit of the civil-service principle.

There are 52,332 postmasters. Of these, 39,433 are in the fourth class and are now under such civil-service laws and regulations as bring them within the privileges and conditions of the classified service.

Of the remaining 12,899 post offices, 700 are first class, 2,617 are second class, and 9,582 are third class. Obviously these offices are business agencies of the Government in legal purpose and should become so in fact. The only certain ultimate way to bring this about is to classify first, second, and third class postmasters. This will require an act of Congress. It is a step forward, measured by the requirements of progress, and is one which I hope will be made. Under existing laws the Executive has no power to require that these offices be placed in the classified service.

Moving in that direction, however, the Executive order issued to-day provides that if any such vacancy is not filled by nomination for promotion of one from within the competitive classified civil service, then an open competitive examination shall be held and the appointment shall be made from one of the highest three eligibles, as required now by law in the classified civil service.

This order, which is for our own guidance in making these appointments,

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE ELECT FRANKHAUSER.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, with deep regret I announce the death at Battle Creek, Mich., of William H. Frankhauser, Representative elect from the third congressional district of Michigan. Continued illness has prevented his taking his seat in the House. I offer the following resolution.

House Resolution 86.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM H. FRANKHAUSER, a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now addiourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly, in compliance with the resolution (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow. Wednesday, May 11, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

SUBMARINE TORPEDO BOATS.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, on yesterday I offered an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the naval appropriation bill. I have a communication from parties engaged in the manufacture of the Lake torpedo boat in support of that amendment. It is a very important industry located in Connecticut, and unless the amendment is agreed to the plant will have to close and some 2,000 men will be thrown out of employment. I ask unanimous consent that the communication may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communication will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE LAKE TORPEDO BOAT CO., Bridgeport, Conn., U. S. A., May 7, 1921.

[Amending naval bill 4803, to permit construction of six fleet submarines under the 1916 naval program.]

Senator George P. McLean, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: 1. The Lake Torpedo Boat Co., of Bridgeport, Conn., requests you to offer an amendment to H. R. 4803, page 51, as follows: After the word "that," in line 25, insert the following: ", with the exception of submarine torpedo boats." and to cause the same to be voted upon by the Senate.

2. A favorable vote will permit the Navy Department to proceed with the construction of the six fleet submarines authorized by the 1916 naval program. A negative vote will suspend the construction of the six fleet submarines.

The net result will be that we will be obliged to close our shipyard and disband our force if the vote is negative. desire this question to be definitely settled by Congress. consider the subject one of national importance, because our plant is a specialty devoted exclusively to the construction of submarines for the United States Navy. It can not be readily revived in any national emergency.

It has taken 20 years to organize and perfect our force of some 75 engineers and draftsmen and 1,200 skilled mechanics. Over $2,000,000 of private money has been invested in the development of the Lake type submarine and the Bridgeport specialty plant, which is the only one of its kind in the world.

It consists of some 23 acres of land, with about three-quarters of a mile of water front, 15 building slips, 25 buildings, 1 wet basin,

3. We have built the following Diesel engine submarines: I-5; N-4, 5, 6, 7; O-11, 12, 13; R-21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27; S-2, 14, 15, 16, 17, all of which, we believe, have given satisfaction.

We are now building the S-48, 49, 50, and 51, which will be completed long before another naval act can make available submarines to keep our plant open; hence, unless the present naval bill provides for the six fleet submarines, it will be necessary to close our plant and disband our skilled forces.

4. If we are forced out of business by the action of Congress, the net result will be that after 20 years of honest efforts to aid the national defense through efficient submarine torpedo boats we will have made little, if any, financial returns on a substantial investment, which will hardly inspire others to follow our example.

5. The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs is generally informed as to the physical status of the submarines in our Navy, and it can inform the country how many are fit for service or how many more, if any, are essential to the national defense.

6. It is not within the province for a Government contractor to advise Congress in regard to the country's naval program. However, it is our inherent right to inform Congress that the legislation now pending will result in the loss to the Nation of our specialty plant.

7. If our plant and most skilled organization were of the ordinary manufacturing type, such a loss would not be a matter of general public interest. However, it seems a national calamity to abandon a plant and organization built up solely for the design and construction of submarines for our national defense.

8. We trust that our facts and views above may be presented to all the Senators.

Yours, respectfully,

THE LAKE TORPEDO BOAT CO., By H. S. MILLER, President.

SIMON LAKE, M. I. N. A., INVENTOR AND CONSULTING ENGINEER, Milford, Conn., May 9, 1921.

[From Simon Lake to the United States Senators and Members of Congress, Washington, D. C.]

To Hon. GEORGE P. MCLEAN:

Is the national defense in jeopardy through suspension of submarines in the 1916 program?

The above is the personal question of one who has devoted his life to the development of submarines. The naval bill (H. R. 4803), page 51, lines 24-25, provides for the continuation of construction of the battleships, battle cruisers, and scouts authorized in the 1916 program, in language as follows: "Total increase of the Navy, $90,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation can be expended except on vessels now being constructed." The six fleet submarines authorized in the 1916 program are indefinitely suspended by this provision.

The result is that the only exclusive submarine plant that has produced any large number of submarines that are fit for service is to be closed up, because it will soon complete the last four vessels now under contract. Its skilled force of engineers and mechanics, who have been trained and organized during about 20 years, will be disbanded and the plant will be salvaged, because it is built solely for the specialty of submarine construction. It is the only one of its kind in the world.

While it is a matter of slight financial consequence to the writer, such an ending of a lifetime endeavor to provide the country with efficient submarines strikes deep into the heart and wounds the pride of an American inventor, who feels that he at least has a right to be heard by you before the Bridgeport submarine plant is abandoned. The company has made little, if any, money through building more than 20 submarines for the United States Government; therefore the writer feels obliged to personally present the subject for such attention as you may feel like giving it. The writer hopes that after digesting this communication the Senators will feel justified in amending the provision to permit the construction of the 1916 submarine program.

A visit in naval circles fails to disclose anybody favorable to expending construction of the fleet submarines. The present suspending construction of the fleet submarines. administration has announced in the press that it wants the 1916 naval program completed, and it is hard to find why an exception of submarines is made. It seems strange that the most powerful of weapons and the cheapest to build should be the first to be abandoned in the agitation for disarmament and the universal desire for a minimum of Government expenditure and taxation. While our people cry out for economy, why not economize on the big things and buy the low priced, especially when the little submarines can hold their own against anything afloat. Apparently the reason for the discrimination in legislation against the submarine is to be found in something other than economy. Numerous facts and experiences will be related to you with the hope that you may be able to discover what the writer can not-a justifiable reason for ending or suspending submarine construction and closing up the Bridgeport specialty plant, whose record for success challenges comparison with the 30 submarines that can not get into even preliminary acceptance trials because their engines have been rejected pending attempts to correct them.

H. R. 4803 provides for $2,000,000 to reengine the L-1, L-2, L-3, L-4, L-9, L-10, L-11, and M-1. No such items appear in the naval bill for any vessel built by the Bridgeport plant, which should not be shut up when others need a breathing spell to try to fix up submarines that are unserviceable. The development of the submarine art can not await upon the misfortunes of any contractor.

When you have completed a survey of the facts that the writer presents it is believed that your judgment will favor progress and rewards for the successful and will disfavor everything that forces the successful out of business through starvation and strangulation.

No naval officer is to blame for the plight of any submarine contractor; hence in digesting this record of events please realize that the naval experts are not on trial and that the sole question is what should be done for the national defense through submarine torpedo development and progress.

It may appear at first a long story, but it is essential that the past history be reviewed so that the present situation can be understood.

The writer has spent 28 years in the development and construction of submarines for our country and foreign nations. It may be thought that the naval officers are the proper ones to consider provisions for submarine programs. That is true. but the fact is that Congress has given the naval experts little to say, because in the past powerful lobbies have attempted to say, because in the past powerful follows have attempted to influence legislation for the creation of a monopoly. It is therefore the duty of Congress to consider the problems of national defense because Congress limits the activities of naval and army experts through legislative measures, among which is the provision suspending the six fleet submarines.

To assist Congress in arriving at a just and adequate decision, the writer has sent to you, with his compliments, his book, The Submarine in War and Peace, much of which was written before the start of the war and not published until 1918, by J. B. Lippincott Co., of Philadelphia. It is a popular treatise of the history and development of the submarine from an experimental toy to a practical weapon of defense. The book relates some of the writer's experiences with the Russians, Austrians, Germans, and other naval authorities throughout the world. The reading may amuse or interest one, according to what he is after.

The book relates the writer's experience with Von Tirpitz in 1906. When Von Tirpitz inspected the Lake-type plans, he saw a large fleet submarine with 2 guns and 10 torpedoes. He exclaimed, "That is what Germany wants. That type of sub-marine is good for offensive purposes." The entire world now knows how offensive Von Tirpitz made the cruiser submarines that sank vessels within sight of the American shores.

Many people think the submarine was mastered and driven from the sea. Hundreds of millions were expended and lost on barrages and large fleets of trawlers, submarine chasers, and other ships to offset the sinkings caused by these German submarines, and the submarines captured by these vessels were only one or two disabled submarines, and those sunk were insignificant in number and cost in comparison to the surface ships lost. England lost ships, cargoes, and men without number. Untold fortunes paid tribute to the awful power of destruction of the submarine.

The strategy of war made it good tactics to claim destruction of submarines in unlimited numbers, but the war history records no such events as were claimed during hostilities. Much has been made of the fact that no American transports and troopships were sunk by submarines. The writer understands that history records that the Germans felt it better not to sink American troopships and saw her error in thinking that she could conquer the world through frightfulness.

To quote the statements of one high American naval officer who was active overseas, "Germany decided it was bad policy to sink any of our troopships, as that would further alienate us when it came time to make peace and resume trade relations," so the orders went out to spare American troopships; in other words, as this officer stated, "They could have sunk our ships if they wished, but they had 'lost their guts' and did not have the nerve to carry out their former program of frightfulness." Admiral Sims, commander of our American naval forces abroad, in an address in Bridgeport a few days ago, said substantially the same thing. According to the Bridgeport Telegram of April 23, 1921, he said, "If Admiral Von Tirpitz had had his way in the high councils of Germany, we would now be speaking German with a decided New England accent," and he also said he "believed airplanes and submarines would be the master weapons in future wars." The submarine has not lost its power over other types of craft. It is just as deadly as when I first appeared before the House and Senate Naval Committees many years ago and foretold the events that history has now recorded during the war with Germany.

I urged Congress then to provide for the national defense

The experiments with my first boat, the Argonaut, justified my predictions and secured for me the favorable scientific support of the then naval chiefs of the bureau—Admirals Melville, O'Neill, Bradford, Sigsbee, and Bowles.

In 1901 Chairman Hale, of the Senate Naval Committee, called me before the committee. I was asked to submit a proposition to the Navy Department.

At the request of the Board of Construction I prepared designs of a small submarine to carry on the deck of a battleship or cruiser, of a harbor-defense type, and also of a cruiser type, which was the forerunner of the so-called fleet submarine. The board told me my designs were the best submitted, and I was urged to build with the private means of my friends a coast-defense type, plans of which I had submitted. The promise was made to test it and recommend its purchase if it proved its worth.

This vessel was built by me through private funds. It was known as the Protector. Government experts tested her and recommended to Congress the purchase of her and five similar for the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The Senate voted for the purchase, which was killed in the House committee. I know why and how, but that is another story. The Protector was then sold to Russia during the war with Japan.

I declined to sell her to Japan. I went to Russia and my company built many others for that Government. We also built the U-I and U-2, the first submarine boats built for Austria. However, I did not abandon hope of recognition in my own

However, I did not abandon hope of recognition in my own country, so we built the Simon Lake X at Newport News. American trials were asked, but time was not granted for the 10 days needed to complete her. This submarine went abroad. I know now why trials were not available. A former United States Senator years afterwards told me the whole story of how the trials were prevented, although the United States naval experts desired to test her.

Many foreign naval experts inspected her in America. Several of our American-built submarines were shipped to Russia via the Hamburg-American Line, and in passing through Germany they were seen by the Germans, who learned all about their construction, which they afterwards put into such offensive use, instead of American defensive use, as planned by me when I first submitted my plans to our Navy in 1893, with the hope that my plans would become the secret of my own country. When you grasp that the German submarines in general form and construction and principles of operation were copies from my plans and ideas you will appreciate what it cost our country to let an American invention get into foreign hands.

Before I built the Argonaut I asked no money. I was only 26 years old. My hope was that I could get an appointment to our naval service and have my Government work out with me my ideas on submarines. I wanted it to be secret and for the sole protection of our country.

Being a young man with no knowledge of Washington affairs, I made little practical progress, and the result was that my invention went into the hands of foreigners. I could not even get official permission for officers to go down in my submarine at Hampton Roads during the Spanish-American War.

The commanding officer said he could not take such a chance with his men. I asked in vain for officials to inspect. I wrote Theodore Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and he replied that a board would be appointed and an inspection made. But Roosevelt resigned and went into the war. I could not get a test.

After a trip from Newport News to New York in this submarine, I received my first foreign recognition—a congratulatory telegram from Jules Verne, predicting that her success would change the naval policies of the world; all has come true. However, it was not until many years had passed that naval officers of prominence recognized the superiority of the submarine.

Admiral Sir Percy Scott, of the British Navy, only shortly before the war, in a strong letter to the London Times, stated: "The introduction of the vessels that swim under water has, in my opinion, entirely done away with the utility of the ships that swim on top of the water." He stated further: "If we go to war with a country that is within striking distance of submarines, I am of the opinion that the country will at once lock up their dreadnaughts in some safe harbor and we shall do the same. I do not think the importance of submarines has been fully recognized, neither do I think that it has been realized how completely their advent has revolutionized naval warfare. In my opinion, as the motor has driven the horse from the road, so the submarine has driven the battleship from the sea."

I have always felt somewhat chagrined that I was forced to go abroad to gain recognition for my inventions in submarines. I always felt that my own country should have had the exclusive use of my inventions.

I have never failed to urge in every proper manner the adoption of my submarine inventions,

After the Simon Lake X was shipped abroad, we moved our principal technical office to Berlin, which was centrally located, to operate in Russia and other European points.

In the meantime we laid down another submarine in America and expected to get her tried in competition for an American appropriation.

Before this boat could be completed, the act was amended in the next Congress through a conference amendment of which we had no notice.

This submarine functioned satisfactorily but did not have the speed of a competitor built later to meet the law, amended after we started.

This submarine is still on my hands. She cost over $300,000 of private funds of myself and friends. We then contracted with the United States to build on the no-cure, no-pay basis, a submarine faster and larger and more powerful than any that had at that time been proposed either in America or abroad. This vessel cost much more than the contract price. At a risk of several hundred thousand dollars, we at last succeeded in getting a Lake type submarine into the American Navy but not until after foreign governments had bought many, based upon the features I proposed to my own Government in 1893.

The Protector went to Vladivostok. She was the only submarine in commission during the Russian-Japanese War.

Our submarines were recognized in Europe as a type superior to any that had been previously experimented with.

My principles in submarines have been generally copied in all the latest types of boats in all countries. Many of the auxiliary devices in submarines have been developed by my company at a large private expense.

Many features are patented. Many devices have required expensive engineering talent to design and develop at private expense, in spite of the fact that they are not patented. All these expensive developments have been made available to our Navy. I developed the first periscope that gave natural vision. The most satisfactory Diesel engine was introduced to America by us. While living abroad and building abroad for foreign Governments, I had access to the works at that time experi-menting with and building Diesel engines. I secured the option to build what I believed the best engine that had been experimented with. It was the Sulzer Bros.-Diesel engine, built at Winterthur, Switzerland. They built the first engine in Switzerland for us, and largely from our suggestions, which resulted from experiences that cost us hundreds of thousands of dollars through broken engine shafts, etc. Ultimately our negotia-tions resulted in the arrangement between the Sulzer Bros, and the Busch people at St. Louis and indirectly we are solely responsible for the creation in America of a submarine Diesel engine that can challenge anything built at home or abroad. It is generally conceded to be the best and most reliable heavy oil engine in use in our Navy. Many other submarines made by others than the Lake Co. are practically useless on account of engine troubles.

In view of the testimony of former Secretary Daniels before the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives last year, regarding submarines, which has been published abroad, I do not believe I am disclosing any naval secrets when I refer to the fact that a large number of submarines built by others than the Lake Co. are having serious trouble with their engines. I quote from the Rivista Marittima, an Italian publication, of April, 1921, page 138, in re testimony of Secretary of the Navy Daniels:

Continuing on the same subject, the committee was informed that 30 units of the "S" class built by the Electric Boat Co. had not been accepted, while the equivalent types constructed by other firms had been satisfactory. The engines supplied by the Electric Boat Co. are of special design, and have all had their crank shafts broken on account of excessive vibrations; after reducing the speed in order to eliminate the vibrations other defects have appeared, as a result of which the vessels' acceptance has been suspended until the defects have

These 30 boats, I have been informed, apply to boats that have not yet been able to meet their preliminary acceptance trials.

House bill 4803 provides $2,000,000 to reengine the L-1, L-2, L-3, L-4, I-9, L-10, L-11, and M-1, none of which submarines were built by us.

I do not criticize this necessary expenditure to make right boats that have cost millions to build, and I know how difficult it is to calculate the stresses that come on internal-combustion engines in submarines. I believe I installed the first successful internal-combustion engine that was ever used in submarines. This was in the Argonaut, built with private capital back in 1896 and 1897. At that time the only submarine boat building for the United States Government was the Plunger, built under a Government appropriation and Government supervision. vessel was fitted with steam engines, and she was uninhabitable and unseaworthy, and the only time she was ever submerged was when she accidentally sank at the dock. Our development of the gasoline internal-combustion engine produced the most successful engine of that type up to a certain size, but for larger power we found it unsuitable. We had been conducting experiments for years on heavy oil internal-combustion engines and had also kept in close touch with the various builders of engines which might be better adapted for submarine use, and were thus able to secure their cooperation to build on lines based upon our experience.

The basic hull features of the fleet submarine design are based upon my patents, which expired before we could get the opportunity to build such a type of vessel ourselves.

All my years of development of the cardinal features in submarines end with no profit whatsoever for those who have made this defensive weapon practical and of serviceable use in the

Individually, I could have sold out several times for a large sum, but neither myself nor my associates felt it patriotic to do so, because a monopoly in our defensive weapons would not tend to give the country the best that American inventive ability can produce.

Now that some of our pioneer patents have expired, the Navy Department has started to build submarines in one of its navy yards, and other shipyards are also making efforts to get into the business which has been developed so largely at our own expense. I care little about this personally, because my first ambition to be taken into the Navy as a specialist to develop submarines is a thing of the past. My monetary remuneration probably would have been little more than a living and my personal freedom to develop other inventions would have been restricted. I am willing to pass my 28 years of work for the benefit of my country on to those who are responsible for the country's defense. I do care, however, about what becomes of the Lake Torpedo Boat Co., which has been financed by some of my friends, some of whom have stood by me for years and provided means to carry this work along to a successful issue as far as providing proper methods and apparatus to protect our shores from any foreign foe.

Not one dollar of net profit has been made from the United

Our 23-acre shippard and machine plant at Bridgeport is es-ecially built for submarines only. It is the only one of its kind in the world.

It is fitted for no other uses than submarine construction. The staff and force are the creation of 20 years' experience, which education and experience has been secured at the expense of our stockholders, some of whom have put their lifetime savings into the company. Nowhere else is there a group of mechanics and engineers who have produced such excellent results. I believe the naval experts will concur in the statement that we have always tried to do our best and that our product is generally satisfactory.

To disband such a force of skilled mechanics is a national blunder.

Such an organization could not be perfected during any emergency.

The submarine has not yet reached its full development. There are other features that may well be added to further their effectiveness and increase the scope of their usefulness,

In my humble judgment it is the only weapon that can safely be relied upon to keep foreign fleets from our shores. Every other weapon is visible and can be met by another of its kind; the submarine is invisible, and if made noiseless and provided with noiseless and invisible automobile torpedoes or or three days discussing the matter, and I decline to yield.

with proper mine-planting facilities, no other type of ship that floats on the surface of the sea or in the air can meet it on equal terms. The cost of a submarine is slight compared with other vessels. Did the six hundred millions spent for aircraft get a single German submarine? No. According to the official reports, the best defense against the German submarines was other submarines. As soon as war was declared between our country and Germany I sent several plans to our Navy Department as well as to some English naval friends. I outlined how submarines could be used for a defense against attacking enemy submarines. Some of these plans were later put into practice. They proved effective, but if they had been fully carried out the loss of ships near the English coast would have been very much reduced. These plans, I presume, are still on file in the secret archives of the Navy Department, where they may remain without further discussion so far as I am concerned.

This war has confirmed my conviction that American inventions for the protection of the country should be kept secret and inviolate. I wrote the Secretary of the Navy suggesting that all American inventions should be withheld from publication during the period of the war. I also saw the late Senator Tillman and suggested the same thing. He said, "Lake, that is a good idea. I will see that it is done." Afterwards I was notified by the Patent Office that I had a patent application in the office which if disclosed might be of aid to the enemy. I was warned that if I discussed it or disclosed it I would be subject to a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment. Thus I learned that my recommendation had been followed. I think this rule is a good one and that it should remain in force during peace. All weapons and devices and chemical compositions invented by Americans applicable to war use should be held as American secrets.

In Berlin, Germany, our American consul once read a circular addressed to German manufacturers to this effect: "Manufacturers, do not allow foreigners to visit your factories where you have any special process or machines in use, especially beware of Americans, as they are quick to grasp new ideas; on the contrary, you should send representatives from your factories to foreign countries, especially America, as they are an inventive people. Your people should obtain employment in their factories; thus you will learn all that the others know plus what you alone know. Therefore Deutschland über alles! Signed, Wilhelm."

The United States should provide a law to secure and keep secret American inventors' devices for warfare and make proper compensation for useful inventions.

Our country should encourage factories built especially for our national defense. The Bridgeport submarine is one. Therefore I do not hesitate to ask Congress to continue the 1916 program for submarines, so that this plant and organization can be kept together for any possible Government need.

Yours, respectfully,

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temperary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent the dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it has been said on the other side of the Chamber several times that no one on this side of the Chamber is discussing or defending the emergency tariff bill. The principal reason is they have not had any chance. The Democrats, as usual, have done all the talking and have taken practically all the time. It is touching to notice the tender solicitude of Democratic Senators, especially the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], for the interests of the farmer, suggesting all sorts of things that he has not asked for and does not want but opposing one of the particular things that he does ask for. There is no use making any pretense; everyone knows that the Democratic Party is opposed to protection for the farmer. The farmers understand it, and they are not going to be fooled by all this talk such as the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] have indulged in.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—
Mr. KELLOGG. I can not yield, because my time is very

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has referred to the Senator

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from Mississippi has taken two

The facts are that prior to the coming into power of the Democratic Party in 1912 nearly all the farm products produced by the farmer were protected. I have a list here which I ask to have placed in the Record, covering wheat, wheat flour, corn, cattle, sheep, potatoes, butter, cheese, milk, and cream.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the list will be printed as requested.

The list referred to is as follows:

Comparison of duties between emergency bill and the Payne-Aldrich bill.

TOTAL STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE	Emergency.	Payne-Aldrich.
Wheat flour	[35 cents per bushel	25 cents. 25 per cent. 15 cents. 274 per cent. $1.50. 75 cents. 25 cents. 6 cents. 6 cents. 5 cents. 5 cents.

Mr. KELLOGG. Immediately when the Democratic Party came into power—and there is no use mincing words about it—a party obtained control which did not come from the States that produce the great staple products that furnish the food for the American people. They wrote the tariff for the Northern States and the Western States, which do produce all the great agricultural products, and they put all such products on the free list. All that the farmer asks is that he be treated the same as other industries.

The Senator from Montana said that he was opposed to special legislation in favor of a class. The special legislation occurred in 1913, when the Democratic Party discriminated against the farmer. Now they are talking about special legislation in favor of certain interests. All we ask is that in the enactment of tariff legislation the industry of the farmer shall receive the same degree of protection as other industries receive.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] discoursed eloquently about the wonderful prosperity of this country between 1912 and 1919, the years of the Democratic administration; he said it was a great period; that it is good to think about it; that it was a time when our country blossomed in prosperity like the rose. He further said:

Why, sirs, it was during this period that our exports increased, from 1012 to 1920, approximately $6,000,000,000. It was a period when the farmers received high prices for their products.

And so forth. Now let us see when our exports increased and what the reason was. The Democratic Party came into power in 1912. In 1913 it enacted a tariff for revenue purposes only, tinctured with free trade; it placed upon the free list the principal products of the farm, which had theretofore received a reasonable protection, and it also greatly reduced tariff rates generally. I am not saying that some of those rates should not have been reduced, but let us see what became of our foreign trade about which the Senator from Mississippi so eloquently discoursed.

In 1913 our exports were $2,465,884,149. The year 1913 was the year in which the Democratic tariff bill was passed. The next year our exports dropped to $2,364.579,148, or substantially $100,000,000, and the balance of trade in favor of the United States dropped from $652,000,000, in round numbers, to $470,000,000.

Everyone knows that but for the World War our foreign commerce would have continued to decrease because of imports under the Underwood tariff. We were facing hard times, and we were actually suffering hard times, as the Senator knows, when the war came on, when we enormously increased our exports, and prices increased accordingly. The increase of exports was due to the war, because foreign countries were obliged to purchase in American markets. They could not get the products they required elsewhere. We now have hard times, and we are still operating under the Underwood Tariff Act.

Mr. President, what else occurred the moment the tariff on agricultural products was changed in favor of the free-trade tariff for revenue only theory of our friends on the other side? In 1912 only 47.47 per cent of our imports from Canada came into the United States free of duty; in 1914, the year after the Underwood law was passed, 80.97 per cent of the imports from Canada came in free of duty; and in 1919 88.73 per cent of the imports from that country came in free of duty. What does Canada principally produce? Agricultural products, the same as we do.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] and other Senators argue that because we produce a surplus of agricultural products, which must be sold in foreign markets, therefore there should be no protection, because the price is made abroad. That is the same old argument that has always been advanced against any kind of protection. We also produce a surplus of manufactured products, which must seek their market in foreign countries, and yet it has been the policy of the Republican Party to give reasonable protection to the American manufacturing industry. Why should not the farmer for his products have the same protection in his domestic market, which is his principal market, that other industries have? I see no reason why he should not. His is the basic industry of the United States.

Now, let me give the Senate facts as to the importation of agricultural products, especially wheat from Canada. Of course, during the World War the wheat trade in Canada and the United States was in the hands of the respective Governments; the Government of Canada and Great Britain handled the Canadian crop for the benefit of England and of the allied forces, and the Government of the United States handled the American crop, and during the war there could not be and was no importation of any importance of Canadian wheat, flour, and other products into the United States. However, when the war closed the duty on wheat was taken off-on the 1st of September of last year. As Senators will remember, there was a duty on wheat imported from Canada or from any other country to the United States, to be removed when Canada or any other exporting country should take off the duty on wheat to be imported from the United States. So the importation of Canadian wheat became free on the 1st of September last.

Now, let us see what occurred in the next few months. ing the last four months of 1920-September, October, November, and December-there were imported into the United States either in wheat, or the equivalent of wheat in flour, 35,074,676 bushels, and in the first three months of the present year 14,267,095 bushels, making substantially forty-nine and a quarter million bushels. If we produce a surplus, as we do, will the Senator tell me what that wheat was sent to the United States for, if it did not affect the American price and the American market? Of course it did. That grain was not sent to the United States simply to be shipped through to foreign countries. In addition to the 49,000,000 bushels imported since the 1st of last September, 41,000,000 bushels were shipped through the United States over the United States railways and waterways to foreign countries, making in the neighborhood of a little over 90,000,000 bushels of Canadian grain. Of course, the 41,000,000 bushels were simply shipped through and did not come in competition in the American market with American grain. That is perfectly It was shipped through, the same as a large amount of Canadian grain is always shipped through, in bond, and it always will be, because of the facilities for handling it in the United States; but practically 50,000,000 bushels since last September came in here for domestic use and consumption in competition with American wheat.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me

Mr. KELLOGG. I will yield for a question, although my time is very short.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not attempt to do anything except to make a statement that I think is proper in order to throw some light on what the Senator has said. I think he has the figures somewhat confused, but I am not sure about that. Does the Senator include in the statement he is now making flour as well as wheat?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I stated that the figures include wheat and the equivalent of wheat in flour.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator that my recollection is that the official statistics published by the Government show that during the eight months of the present fiscal year ending the 28th day of February only 41,000,000 bushels of wheat were imported into this country; that during the first two months of those eight months 39,000,000 bushels of wheat were exported; that during the whole period of the eight months 209,000,000 bushels of wheat were exported; that there was within 2,000,000 bushels as much exported in two months as were imported during the whole eight months; and that there was five times as much exported during the eight months.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President-

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I simply wish to say that I recognize the fact that we have very little time for Senators to speak to-day, and it will be improper to interrupt them, so I am not going to interrupt the Senator any more.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thank the Senator. I will place in the

Mr. KELLOGG. I thank the Senator. I will place in the RECORD at the end of my remarks the statement by the Bureau of Markets, given to me within the last few days, which includes the exports and imports, and a letter explaining them, for each month of 1920 and for the months of January, February, and March, 1921. I think the Senator will find those figures to be accurate. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] stated yesterday that during that time there were about 49,000,000 bushels imported into the United States. He was The fact is that much of the grain passed through the United States, as I said a few moments ago. In addition to the 49,000,000 bushels, 41,000,000 bushels went through the United States to foreign countries. We shipped considerable grain in the summer time through Canadian ports, and I think during that time there was shipped-

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say that the figures I gave a little while ago were reported by the department as covering only wheat imported into this country and consumed in the country, not wheat that passes through in transit to

Mr. KELLOGG. I gave the figures separately. during 1920 a little over 14,000.000 bushels exported to Canada, but, as the statistics show, practically all of it—all except 175,816 bushels—was simply shipped through Canadian ports to Europe. Now, we ship through the Welland Canal and through the port of Montreal during the summer time a good deal of grain. Canada ships a great deal of grain through Portland, New York, Boston, and down the Lakes, and by American railways directly through to European countries, but I ican railways, directly through to European countries; but I have given the figures as to the importation of wheat into the United States for domestic consumption since last September of over 49,000,000 bushels which came into competition with American-produced wheat.

Now, let me explain another proposition why that is very important. I am anxious to maintain the great milling industry, and some of the principal millers of my State are in favor of a tariff. They want a reasonable opportunity to mill in bond, which they always have had and always will have. The highgrade spring wheat of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana always sells in the market in Minneapolis and Duluth for a higher price, without considering the railroad transportation or Lake transportation to Chicago, than in the Chicago market. That high-grade spring wheat sells at a premium. Why? Because the mills need it for manufacture to mix with lower grade grains and winter grains.

The fact is that if that grain can be shipped in free from Canada, this bonus price, as it may be called, or this high price for cash wheat for milling purposes, disappears. That is peculiar to the spring-wheat district. Everybody realizes that That is it is more expensive, more hazardous, to raise spring wheat than to raise winter wheat. The spring-wheat crop is subject to more uncertainties of weather and diseases which affect grain-growing States, because it matures so late in the season. It is more expensive to raise. It is more valuable for milling purposes. Spring wheat is raised entirely in Canada, and practically entirely in Minnesota. North and South Dakota, and Montana.

I have produced the statement of the Bureau of Markets, made within the last few weeks, in which the Bureau of Markets states that on grain and meat products and various other products the American farmer needs protection; that these particular imported products which come into competition with the farmer of the Northwest are produced in countries where land and labor are cheaper than in the United States. That is stated by the Bureau of Markets. Of course, I do not claim that there is any great difference between the price of labor in Canada and the price of labor in the United States; but there is an enormous difference between the price of the free virgin soil of Canada and the land in Minnesota and North and South Dakota, which sells for $75 or $100 an acre and which has been producing wheat for a great many years and needs fer-tilization. In the Argentine, where wheat and corn come into competition with the wheat and corn of the United States, labor is very cheap and land is very cheap; and I might go on and is very cheap and land is very cheap; and I might go on and say the same thing as to other countries.

Take the subject of meats. I am not going into the details of this schedule, because I have not the time. The Senate will find on page 9 of the report of the House committee a statement by the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, as to the necessity of a tariff on meat products. If I had the time I would read this statement; but I ask permission to insert a cent of this page at the end of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. KELLOGG. Among other things, however, permit me to read a few sentences:

There is a great surplus supply of meats and meat products in the United States, and prices of live stock have been driven to a decline much more rapid than the decline in cost of production, while imports of meats have further depressed the market. This constitutes a menace to the live-stock industry. Live-stock operations (before the war frequently precarious and unprofitable) did not during the war build up a reserve of profits sufficient to offset the present losses due to the current marketing of war stimulated production at less than its cost.

Then the Bureau of Markets, a Government agency, proceeds to give these statistics, and says:

on the other hand, following the putting of meat on the free list in 1913, imports began a rapid development, which was cut off only by the war, and in 1919-20 show a marked tendency to resume. These facts need to be considered in conjunction with the fact that the Chleago packers control from 50 to 60 per cent of the meats shipped from South America to world markets. With our exports practically no greater than in 1910 and with a strong potentiality for increase of imports, the American farmers urgently need protection for their cattle and sheep products. Imports of mutton and tamb for the years 1917-1919 averaged about 6,000,000 pounds; in 1920 they were 100,000,000 pounds, and had a far more depressing effect on sheep and lamb prices than on consumers' prices of the products.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator give the date of that report?

Mr. KELLOGG. It was made some time during this session, because it quotes the importations and prices for 1920, and it is contained in the House report on the emergency tariff bill, which was made April 13, 1921.

I have not the time to discuss the details stated in this report. It treats of the subject of wheat and dairy products, and states that the farmers of the United States are sorely in need of a reasonable protection for their products.

Mr. President, I know it is not necessary to state the importance of agricultural industry in the United States, or anywhere else, for that matter. It is the basic industry which supports the great fabric of prosperity and progress in this country. Oh, you may say that that is the old statement, but It lies at the very foundation of the wonderful it is true. growth and development of this country. What is the tendency of the times? The tendency of the times is a decrease from year to year in the percentage of the agricultural population as compared with the population in the cities. Everyone knows it and deplores it, and is searching in the dark for a remedy. When we view the fact that since the War of the Rebellion the farm population has decreased from 75 per cent to less than 33 per cent, and the percentage of agricultural production to the demands of the people of this country is decreasing year by year, we begin to realize what it means to the prosperity and the development of this Nation.

You can not make men farm where there is no 8-hour day and no easy road to wealth and prosperity unless the farming is reasonably profitable. The life in the cities, with high pay and easy money which has been made during the wonderful development of the last 25 or 30 years, is more attractive than that on the farm. I know whereof I speak; and is the time coming when the 33 per cent of agricultural population will dwindle to 25 or 15 per cent, and the people will refuse to cultivate the land to support the millions of people in the cities,

We might just as well face the problem. We have to encourage the development of agriculture in this country in some The failure of agriculture has brought disaster to many a nation. It nearly wrecked Great Britain. The nation draws the streams of vitality from the farm, and not from the teeming millions in the cities.

Show me a nation where agriculture is prosperous, where the farmers are independent, where they are proprietors, with all that goes with proprietorship and ownership, and I will show you a progressive, enlightened people. Show me a nation where agriculture is declining, and I will show you a decadent nation. That has been the history of the world since history has been written.

What enabled France to go through the greatest war ever recorded? The fact that her people are farmers, proprietors, owning and living upon the land. It was a sturdy force of defense, which could not be overcome.

Mr. President, I read with a great deal of amusement the minority report by Mr. KITCHIN on the emergency tariff bill. He started out by saying:

The policies and principles advocated by the Democratic Party and inspiring the continued maintenance of its organization for nearly 100 years forbid our approval of the pending bill, and impel us to vigorously protest against its passage.

That is all there is in it. The tariff, in the minds of the Demo-That is all there is in it. The tarin, in the minus of the Democratic Party, is not an economic issue; it is a tradition, a moth-eaten, hackneyed tradition, which the people of the South are trying to get rid of. I hold in my hand a memorial of the Southern Tariff Association, signed by hundreds of industries throughout all the Southern States, petitioning Conductive the southern states, petitioning Conductive the southern states. gress to give the South the reasonable protection which her industries ought to have. The governors of the South, in meeting in Georgia, passed a resolution in favor of reasonable protection. But it contravenes the traditions and the history of the Democratic Party.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him which governor of Georgia that was?

Mr. KELLOGG. I said the governors of the South at a meeting in Georgia. I did not say the governor of Georgia. I think the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I thought the Senator said the governor of Georgia, and I was desirous of knowing which governor of Georgia it was.

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not say the governor of Georgia at all. I said some of the governors of the South, or many of them, at a meeting in Georgia.

Mr. President, I think if anyone will read the minority report made by Mr. Kitchin he will find that it is living entirely in the past. It reiterates all of the stock arguments which have been the property of that party, as Mr. KITCHIN says, for a hundred years. Yet it is reasonable protection which has made this country a great industrial Nation.

What did Mr. KITCHIN Say?

We take this opportunity to reassure the Democracy of the Nation that the Democrats in Congress will take no back track on the tariff.

We do not expect that.

To us Republican protection is no better now than when the Tilden platform of 1876 denounced it "as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and false pretense." It is no better now than when the Cleveland platform of 1892 denounced it as "a fraud—a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of a few."

We all remember what became of the Democratic Party under the administration of Mr. Cleveland and the Wilson tariff bill, It brought on a panic in this country and a depression, which drove the party out of power for nearly 20 years

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator, in recalling the Cleveland administration in this connection, will also remember the last Republican administration in connection with the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. KITCHIN said further:

It is no better now than when the Parker platform of 1904 denounced it as "a robbery of the many to earlich the few."

peared for another term of years.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of building a tariff wall around the United States, shutting out trade with foreign countries, or building up monopolies under such a tariff wall. I favored the revision and reduction of the tariff in 1908. I was a member of the Republican convention in that year, and on the subcommittee which drew the platform in favor of it; and I shall again favor the reduction of duties whenever I believe they are approaching a degree injurious to the welfare of the great mass of the American people.

A tariff for revenue only is the policy, when tinctured with free trade, of the Democratic Party; in other words, to get the most revenue out of the tariff, irrespective of whether it hurts or helps American industry.

We on this side do not believe in it. Of course, we believe that we must have revenue, and it is proper to get it from tariff duties; but the tariff duties should be fixed at such a figure that not only will they produce some revenue but will afford a reasonable protection to American industries in competition with the industries of the world. And I do not know of any reason why the greatest industry in this country, the industry which lies at the foundation of all other industries, the industry which it is necessary to maintain if we are going to maintain the prosperity, yes, the progress, of the people of the United States, should not share in that protection.

I do not claim that this bill is perfect. There are other items which I think should be placed in the bill. There are some changes which I think should be made in the bill. I know there are other industries which deserve and should have protection. Even President Wilson came to Congress with a message asking for additional protection. I believe there are industries which need protection which this bill does not give them. But this bill is to be enacted for the purpose of giving the farmer his reasonable share of protection which the Democratic Party took away from him in 1913.

Mr. President, believing as I do, that the farming industry should be encouraged; that it will not unduly add to the cost of living; that it will help to encourage the farmer, who sorely needs help to-day, I shall vote for this bill.

1. There is a great surplus supply of meats and meat products in the United States, and prices of live stock have been driven to a decline much more rapid than the decline in cost of production while imports of meats have further depressed the market. This constitutes a menace to the live-stock industry. Live-stock operations (before the war frequently precarious and unprofitable) did not during the war build up a reserve of profits sufficient to offset the present losses due to the current marketing of war stimulated production at less than its cost.

2. Chicago market live-stock prices in February, 1921, reached index figures, ranging from 104 to 111 (based on 1913), while general commodities were 167 and manufactured articles 230. Allowing for increased freight to the market, farm prices of live stock are practically at or below prewar levels. The price drop has been so rapid that the value of animals in many cases is now less than the amount of loans secured by them, wiping out the grower's equity entirely.

3. During the war the United States exported large quantities of meats and imported little, but it would be fallacious to suppose that this points to no need of, or benefit from, an import tariff. The history of exports and imports is clearly against such an assumption. Excluding pork, our exports of meat averaged 397,000,000 pounds from 1900 to 1907. From 1910 to 1914 they averaged only 75,000,000; from 1915 to 1919 they jumped to 397,000,000; but in 1920 fell to only 144,000,000. On the other hand, following the putting of meat on the free list in 1913, imports began a rapid development, which was cut of only by the war, and in 1919-20 show a marked tendency to resume. These facts need to be considered in conjunction with the fact that the Chicago packers control from 50 to 60 per cent of the meats shipped from South America to world markets. ### APPENDIX C.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF MARKETS, Washington, D. C., May 3, 1921.

Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, United States Senate.

Hon. Frank B. Kelloge,

United States Senate.

Dear Senator Kelloge: In response to the telephone request from your office yesterday, I take pleasure in transmitting to you herewith a statement prepared by the Foreign Markets Service of this bureau, showing the imports and exports of wheat and wheat flour between the United States and Canada during the calendar year 1920 and for the first three months of the present calendar year. These figures are based upon the official trade statistics compiled by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. I may add by way of explanation that the greater part of the wheat shown as having been exported from the United States to Canada (14,811,672 bushels in 1920) was merely shipped through Canada for export to Europe. This statement is borne out by the trade statistics published by the Canadian Government, which show that only 175,816 bushels of American wheat was imported into Canada and entered for consumption during the first 10 months of the last calendar year.

You may also be interested in knowing that in addition to the wheat imported into the United States from Canada and entered for domestic consumption, some 41,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat was shipped through the United States in bond for export to foreign countries. These bonded shipments are not included in the official trade statistics of the United States, either as imports or exports, but are reported separately as transit shipments through this country.

In addition to the bonded shipments mentioned above, a small quantity of Canadian wheat (385,315 bushels) was reexported during the period from July 1, 1920, up to and including March 31, 1921. No doubt some of the wheat that was entered for consumption also left the ports of this country, either in the state in which it was received or mixed with American wheat and exported as such. Other quantities also, no doubt, left the country in the form of American flour. There is, however, no means of ascertaining the actual quantity of Canadian wheat loses its

GEORGE LIVINGSTON, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I rise to urge the adoption of an amendment which I submitted a few days ago, which was printed and is on the table. The reason for the amendment is found in a circumstance to which I referred when a similar bill was under discussion in this body last year. It seeks to protect the airplane-manufacturing industry of this country against the most unusual form of competition which I think any business organization has ever had to face. The circumstance to which I referred was, that about a year ago the British Government made a contract with a company known as the Aircraft Disposal Co., the purpose of which was to sell in other countries all the surplus airplanes which had been made in Great Britain during and after the war.

It is a well-known fact that during the war Great Britain manufactured a great many airplanes. Like ourselves, they built up an industry for the manufacture of planes, but, unlike us, they continued to manufacture planes under contract with companies which had been formed for their production for several months after the armistice was signed, whereas we quit it absolutely with the signing of the armistice. The result was that Great Britain found herself with a very large number of surplus planes a year after the war. The British Government sold to the Aircraft Disposal Co. for $5,000,000 planes which cost them over $500,000,000 to manufacture, or for just 1 per cent of what it cost the British Government to make them.

Under the other terms of the contract the planes were to be sold not in Great Britain, that being expressly excluded, but in any foreign country. A contract was made with people in the United States to bring them over here and sell them, and quite a large number of them were brought to the United States. It can be very easily seen how that sort of thing furnishes competition against which no manufacturing enterprise can possibly stand.

A further feature of that contract was that the Aircraft Disposal Co. and its American agents might sell the planes at whatever figure they could get. No price was fixed upon them. The cost to that company was the 1 per cent of the cost of manufacture in England plus freight to this country and such little overhead as might be required to furnish selling machinery. If an American manufacturer put his plane on the market at a cost to him, say, of $5,000, he had in competition with him a plane which cost only 1 per cent of the $5,000 plus freight and overhead.

If he offered his machine at the bare cost to him of $5,000, he had to meet the competition of the man who came in here with the foreign plane and who said, "I will take $500 for mine," and he could sell it at $500 and make a profit for him-

Under an additional feature of the contract one-half of the profits he got for his plane went to the British Government. That is where the British Government came in. If the plane was sold for $500, the man who sold it, the agent here, took one half of the profit himself—that is, what he got for it over the 1 per cent of cost of manufacture which he paid the British Government and the freight-and the other half went to the British Government.

I think if Senators will stop to think of all the features of the competition I have described, they will agree with me that it is no competition at all, and that no manufacturing enterprise that ever was or ever can be created can stand against that sort of condition of rate cutting.

I am urging the amendment not in the interest of any manufacturing enterprise, not even in the interest of an industry from a commercial standpoint. The amendment is on all fours with one presented the other day by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] with reference to the dye industry. It has to do directly with the maintenance of the national defense. We positively must have in this country an industry for the production of airplanes. There is no one agency of war to-day that is so necessary to the national defense as the aircraft industry. It is not necessary, and I have not the time if it were, to refer to our experiences here during the war. We all know they were tremendously expensive, and that at the best they were not very flattering.
Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEW. I believe we are now operating under the unanimous-consent agreement, in which case I have but 10 minutes. Mr. SIMMONS. I merely wish to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. NEW. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator if it is his understanding that airplanes are now or have at any time since the armistice been exported from abroad into this country and sold here at less than the price of airplanes in the country of Mr. NEW.

Mr. NEW. Yes; that has happened. Mr. SIMMONS. Then there has been dumping of airplanes? Mr. NEW. There positively has been.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will remember that there was contention here a few days ago in a colloquy in which I participated with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] that there was no dumping of airplanes.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say a word on that point. Hundreds of those planes were shipped from Great Britain to the United States for sale in this country. They were not put upon the market for one reason only, and that was because the American manufacturers appealed to the United States court, their appeal to Congress having failed, on the ground that the British planes are based upon an American patent, and the United States courts held very justly, I think, that they did infringe upon that patent. Some of those airplanes are to-day in bonded warehouses at eastern ports ready to be put upon the market here at any figure that their American owners can get for them the moment the temporary injunction shall be dissolved, if it ever is.

I would not urge this amendment if I felt that the provision already in the bill intended or designed to prevent dumping covered this case, but it does not cover it; it does not touch it at any point. That provision bases the inhibition against importations and dumping upon the cost of production of an article abroad, whereas Senators can see at once from what I have said that the airplanes are not brought in here and sold with any reference whatever to the cost of their production abroad. They are sold at just whatever an American purchaser can be induced to pay. If it is 10 per cent of the cost of production, well and good. If it is 20 per cent, that much better, but it can be sold at 5 per cent of the actual cost of production, and yet, presumably at least, yield to the man who sells it something in the way of a profit.

I have sought to make clear, in the very brief time that I have had to present the subject, that the reason for the proposed amendment is not to protect somebody's business, but that it is to preserve in this country the nucleus, at least, of an industry which can be relied upon to produce aircraft in case of an emergency, in order that we may not be left exactly where we were in 1917 when we went into the war. No man is going to invest money in a plant intended for the construction of aircraft when he sees immediately before him somebody else producing the thing into which he is proposing to put his money who will offer the product at a ruinous percentage of what it will cost him to produce it. It marks, in my judgment, the abandonment of the little that is left of the aircraft industry in the United States if it has to face that sort of competition. It is for that reason, as I have said, for the protection of an industry here which is vitally necessary to the national defense, that I am urging the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this amendment was considered at the last moment by the Committee on Finance and was thought to be highly indefensible and undesirable. The only user or purchaser of airplanes is the Government, and there is no industry to amount to anything in the United States, properly so called, making airplanes. It can not be a subject of competition. Even if there should be private enterprise enlisted, it must be largely a monopoly furnishing the product to the Government. To attempt to tax the Government of the United States several hundred million dollars for fostering an alleged American industry which is nonexistent, if the American Government can go to England and get English airplanes for a few million dollars, seems utterly indefensible. From whatever angle it is looked at the proposition does not seem to permit of any favorable argument.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. NEW. I can only express my surprise at the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is no airplane industry in this country. There are now about 20 concerns in the United States that are making aircraft or aircraft parts. They produced last year in the United States about 100 planes. There is a commercial demand for airplanes, and it is growing, but it is being met by the sale here of made-over planes of foreign manufacture, which are really based originally upon American patents.

Mr. PENROSE. I am not informed as to how many concerns may be assembling airplanes. That there are 20 concerns, and it may be a great many more, that make parts of airplanes, I have no doubt. I have yet to discover that airplanes are in general use. Certainly they are not yet used for pleasure like the automobile or for carrying garden truck or farm products. The Post Office Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department seem to be the only branches of the Government using airplanes. The committee were unanimous in the decision with reference to this amendment as being entirely indefensible.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suppose we are not going to vote on the amendment now, or is it the intention to vote on it at this time?

Mr. NEW. No; it is not.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer an amendment and have it

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senate ought to know what is the ruling or interpretation under the unanimous-consent agreement. Is each amendment to be voted on when the proposer is through defending it and no one remains to oppose it? Why should they not be disposed of now? I do not care what procedure is adopted, but I should like to know what it is to be.

Mr. SIMMONS. If at this stage during the period of time reserved for discussion of the bill and amendments between 12 and 3 we are to debate and vote on the amendments pending it would very greatly restrict the opportunity of Senators to debate the amendments that are hereafter to be voted upon. I think a fair interpretation of the rule, which is intended to give opportunity to discuss every amendment that is going to be voted upon, would be to not vote on the amendments, but simply to discuss them preparatory to voting upon them after 3 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. I think perhaps the construction of the Senator from North Carolina is the correct one. It will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President— Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The VICE PRESIDENT, The Senator from North Dakota will state the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask if there was not a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the bill in the first instance for action on the committee amendment only, and to dispose of the committee amendment? That is generally the case, and I simply wish to know what the facts are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read and the amendment proposed by the committee has been read.

Mr. McCUMBER. My question is whether the committee amendment shall be first considered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no agreement about that, I mittee amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand there is but one committee amendment, and, of course, the amendments offered to that part of the bill will be amendments to the amendment of the com-

Mr. REED. I hope that the ruling will not be made that we may not vote upon amendments before 3 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has made no such ruling

Mr. REED. No; the Chair has not made it, but the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. Penrose] said he had no objection to that understanding, and I understood the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons] to say that he thought it would be a very good thing if we did not vote until 3 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. Unless the debate on amendments shall have been concluded.

Mr. REED. I did not want that to go by general consent, because I think the language of the unanimous-consent agreement is perfectly plain. Its statement is:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Wednesday, May 11, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment—

Clearly all we have agreed to do is to begin voting at 3 o'clock; but up to that time we shall be proceeding under the ordinary rules of the Senate. There are some amendments that I presume Senators wish to urge seriously. I have one that I desire to urge seriously, and I should like to have a vote on it when it can be discussed, and not have a vote after all opportunity for discussion shall have ceased.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection whatsoever to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. I simply thought that probably three hours would not be more time than Senators would want to devote to the discussion of amendments, and if votes were being taken constantly during that period to that extent it would limit the opportunity of discussion.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. PENROSE. So far as I am concerned, if the Senator will permit me, I shall cheerfully acquiesce in any procedure that will meet the convenience of Senators.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think I have the floor, The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has the

Mr. NEW. I have concluded what I have to say, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Indiana has formally offered his amendment? Mr. NEW. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. It is proposed to add, on page 18, after line 24, a new subdivision, as follows:

(d) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers, under regulations established by the Secretary, that the foreign market value of airplanes, or airplane motors, parts, and accessories therefor, is wholly or partly based not upon cost of production or ordinary trade conditions of supply and demand but is based upon unusual excess stocks procured or accumulated through artificial or abnormal conditions, then the foreign market value of such airplanes or airplane motors, parts, or accessories for the purposes of this section shall not be less than the cost of production. motors, parts, or accessories for the be less than the cost of production.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The year and nays are demanded. Is the demand sustained?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I thought I was recognized a while ago, and while I do not expect to speak on the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New], I do feel that at some time before 3 o'clock should make a statement in regard to an amendment which have heretofore submitted to the bill. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana is to the committee amendment, and I suppose is in order at this time to be voted upon; but the amendment which I propose is not to the committee amendment, and therefore can not be voted upon until after the voting shall have been concluded on amendments to the committee amendment beginning at 3 o'clock, as I understand.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana is not a committee amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It is an amendment to the com-

Mr. PENROSE. But that is a different proposition.

Mr. JONES of New-Mexico. Yes. I think I stated that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana was an amendment to the committee amendment. I quite understand that the committee has never reported any such amendment as that now suggested by the Senator from Indiana. A day or two ago, however, I submitted an amendment imposing a duty upon hides. I intend now to modify my amendment, so as to include sheep pelts and goat skins, and also to change the amount of duty, which was previously provided for by the amendment

I think our unanimous-consent agreement is rather ill-advised, and to such agreements I have heretofore interposed objection. I believe there should be an opportunity whenever an amendment is offered in any stage of the consideration of the bill to explain the amendment. I have so stated on numerous former

I do not like, however, to be persistent in opposing unanimousconsent agreements which prohibit discussion upon amendments at the time they are offered and preceding the time they are to be voted upon. There are comparatively few Senators now in the Chamber, and the various amendments which are offered here can not be explained so that Senators will understand them when the time for voting upon them arrives; but I expect, as best I can, to call to the attention of the few Senators who are present at this time the amendment which I propose to offer, which is, on page 3, after line 11, to insert the following:

Sheep pelts, goatskins, and hides of cattle, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That upon all leather exported, made from imported hides, there shall be allowed a drawback equal to the amount of duty paid on such hides, to be paid under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

I intend to offer that amendment in that form, and if it is voted down, as I feel quite sure it will be, then I propose to strike out the prevision for a duty of 5 cents a pound and to leave only a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem. Fifteen per cent ad valorem was the duty placed upon hides in the Dingley bill; it is practically the lowest duty that is put upon any commodity, and, it seems to me, is a very modest duty to be put upon hides.

I realize that the question of the duty upon hides has been a mooted one in the Congress for many years, but at the last session, when we were considering the emergency tariff bill, we put a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem upon hides. stricken out in conference. Why it was stricken out I am unable te say; I do not know. I am sure I do not know why the House did not put a duty upon hides in this bill in the first instance before it was sent over to the Senate. I understand that there is a declared purpose to oppose any amendment to be offered to the tariff provisions of the pending bill; but I do not believe that is a wise attitude for the Senate to assume. It seems to me that we should consider all these questions upon their merits as they come up.

That there should be a duty upon hides in this emergency tariff bill there can be no doubt in the mind of anyone who is acquainted with the cattle and sheep industry. Hides at the present time are selling for 3 cents a pound. During the war, when shipping facilities were limited, there was an accumulation of hides in the other countries of the world, and now they are being brought into the United States and dumped on this market, so that hides which were bringing 30 and 40 cents a pound are now selling for 3 cents a pound, and in many cases there is no market for them at all. If we are going to protect any of the commodities produced in this country, I submit that there should be a duty placed upon hides.

I do not intend to discuss the general merits of the pending bill, but I do insist that if we are going to put a tariff upon the commodities embraced in the agricultural schedule of the bill we ought to put a tariff upon hides and pelts and goatskins. They are just as much entitled to protection and to consideration

As I have said, I hope Senators will give careful consideration to this amendment and realize its importance to the livestock interests of the country. If you want to protect the farmers of the country and the live-stock interests of the country, as you say you do, then why not go a step further and give some benefit to those who produce hides, who are now struggling and selling all of their products for much less than cost.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as I stated in the few remarks I made some days ago in explanation of this measure, it is deemed, after the most thorough discussion—as the Senator from New Mexico, as a member of the Committee on Finance, knows very well—utterly out of the question to attempt to amend the tariff features of the so-called emergency tariff bill. To open the door would simply result in a general effort to frame a permanent tariff measure, which might not be enacted until very late in the summer. This is an emergency bill; it does not pretend to cover every case of merit which, perhaps, originally should have been included; and now to attempt to include all these meritorious cases is simply out of the question. If this emergency tariff bill is to be passed to last only six months, or until the permanent tariff bill becomes a law, it must be passed immediately. That is very well known.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. In reference to this particular matter, as the Senator will recall, a duty was placed on hides by the last emergency tariff bill which passed the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, Mr. President, I know that very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but the Senator will not permit me to finish. That duty was stricken out only because a mistake was made in the compensatory duty.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, these matters may be corrected at the day of judgment, but can not be corrected in the Senate at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator, I think, knows that probably there would have been no serious objection in conference to the duty on hides if it had not been for that mistake.

Mr. PENROSE. I will tell the Senator—
Mr. SIMMONS. Why can not that mistake now be corrected and why can not this item be allowed to go in? It has as much merit and justice as any other item covered by the agricultural schedule of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think the Senator, as leader of the minerity, ought to endeavor to facilitate the passage of this measure instead of embarrassing it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not embarrassing it.

Mr. PENROSE. He knows that he is embarrassing and jeopardizing it by trying to open the door. Hides produced in the Southwest do not require his able championship, which ought to be directed more strictly to lumber and other products of the South, in connection with which we have always heard his eloquence with interest.

I wish to say again-and I mean it very positively-that I am fully assured, and I believe, that the majority conferees will never agree to any amendment to the tariff features of the pending bill. That some meritorious subjects may have been inadvertently left out of the measure. I take for granted.

I want to assure the Senator from New Mexico now that I have always advocated a duty on hides. It was with the greatest reluctance that, as a member of the Finance Committee in 1907, I acquiesced, at the earnest solicitation of President Taft, in dropping the duty from the Payne-Aldrich bill; but I will help the Senator when the permanent tariff bill comes along for consideration by this body, if hides are not provided for by the House bill, to put upon hides the Payne rate or any other rate that the Senator may deem necessary for the preservation of the hide industry as a by-product of the cattle business. The permanent tariff bill will be here, I hope, in a very few weeks, but the limitations of this bill are generally recognized, and the Senator is not doing his cause any good by taking up the time of the Senate now in a hopeless chase. His amendment commands my entire approval for insertion in the permanent tariff bill which we all hope will become a law early in the summer; and he will have my help for a duty on hides, as I have said, or on any other product of American industry that requires protection from unfair competition.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course I know that most of these amendments will be rejected by the committee having the bill in charge; but I want to offer and have pending an amendment which I think will appeal to the fairness and the justice of the committee, that they will not oppose.

Under the antidumping provision of the bill, it is very likely that certain goods or articles that are now brought in free may have a tax imposed upon them, to the detriment of the farmer. This being a farmer's bill, or pretended to be such by the leaders on the other side, I am sure you want to help the farmers to purchase as cheaply as possible those things that they need in order to produce wheat and cotton and various farm products; so the amendment I propose is a proviso to the antidumping feature that will prevent a tariff being imposed on farm implements brought into this country. I am sure that it will appeal to the fairness of the other side of the aisle, and when you vote on it I hope you will vote for it.

I ask that the amendment may be read at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment can be read, but it can not yet be pending.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 26, line 13, the Senator from Mississippi will propose the following amendment:

Provided, That the provisions of Title II of the pending bill shall not apply to barbed-wire fencing, plows, disk harrows, harvesters, respers, agricultural drills, mowers, horse rakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, cotton gins, wagons, carts, sewing machines, fertilizers of every kind, and elements from which fertilizers are manufactured, jute, binding twine, cotton bagging, and agricultural implements of every character, which are now on the free list, and when imported into the United States from any foreign country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry. Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] intend to ask for a vote on his amendment at this time, or to let it lie over?

Mr. NEW. I ask for a vote on it now, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment stated. I came in just a moment ago.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BORAH. I have just come into the Chamber. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. On pasert a new subdivision, as follows: On page 18, it is proposed to in-

(d) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers, under regulations established by the Secretary, that the foreign market value of airplanes, or airplane motors, parts, and accessories therefor, is wholly or partly based not upon cost of production or ordinary trade conditions of supply and demand, but is based upon unusual excess stocks procured or accumulated through artificial or abnormal conditions, then the foreign market value of such airplanes or airplane motors, parts, or accessories for the purposes of this section shall not be less than the cost of production.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask who determines all these questions?

Mr. NEW. The Board of Appraisers.

Mr. BORAH. I think there is a very serious legal proposition involved in this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] to the amendment of the committee. The year and nays have been demanded and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen]. In his absence, not having a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Has the senior Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called).

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a pair with the Senator from Washington and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], is unavoidably absent on account of death in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. On this question he is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], and if present would vote " nay.

Mr. WOLCOTT (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I voted under a misapprehension. I transfer the general pair I have with that Senator to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I be in order, I now call up the amendment heretofore proposed by me, on page 3, line 15, to strike out the numeral "7" and insert the numeral "20."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is now pending, and the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Arizona is an amendment to the text of the bill.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will see the wisdom and the need of adopting the amendment offered by my colleague, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones], placing a duty on hides of 5 cents, plus 15 per cent ad valorem, and a duty on sheep pelts of 5 cents, plus 15 per cent ad

It seems to me that if we are going to give protection to the live-stock grower, there is every reason why we should include the things which he is engaged in producing. There is just as much reason, to my mind, for placing a tariff on the beef and leaving out the hides, as there would be to permit the front quarters to come in free and place a duty on the hind quarters. The hide is just as much a part of the value of a cow or a steer as any other portion. In fact, in normal times it represents from 15 to 30 per cent of the full value of the carcass.

We of the West can not understand why there should be opposition to placing a duty on hides and on pelts. Some have said that it comes from the manufacturers. I hope that is not We believe in protection. We believe in protecting American labor and American produce, whether it may be in New England, in the Southwest, or on the plains of our Middle States.

There never has been a time when the live-stock interests were in such a deplorable condition as at the present time. Livestock growers were benefited very lightly by the war, as far as the prices of their products were concerned. Producers of wool were not permitted to sell their product in the open market. Their product was drafted by the Government, and they were paid whatever seemed proper to those in authority, and during the war, while wool was bringing as much as 40 to 50 cents in the grease, under the Government restrictions, had we been permitted to sell wool in the open market, a dollar a pound would have been the market price. While we were restricted in price, while the regulations of the Government were in effect, our expenses were forced upon us, and they left practically no profit.

I have a letter from one of our bankers in Magdalena, a city in the cattle and sheep producing section, and I desire to quote from this letter. The writer, Mr. Morley, said:

The best offer for steers that has been made in the last two or three days is $20 for yearlings.

That is a reduction of approximately 60 per cent of their value during the war. It is a reduction of nearly 40 per cent of their value preceding the war.

This writer continues:

Twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents for twos and $35 for threes. There is no question but that tight money is largely responsible for this situation, and those who can get funds are taking advantage of the conditions and pounding the prices down mercilessly. It is not necessary for me to tell you what will happen to the live-stock industry of New Mexico if the prices of cattle and sheep are allowed to be cut to a third or half of what they were a year ago; and, as you must know, such a cut entirely wipes out the equity that the grower has in the property and not infrequently leaves the banks with less security than their loans.

If this industry perishes, a great many of the financial institutions of the West will perish with it.

It would not be so serious, Senators, if one stockman, or a thousand, or a community, were broke, if some other persons engaged in that line of industry would take their places. But that is not the case, nor does it have that effect. Liquidation simply means that the live stock will be slaughtered; and it is amazing to me that, while we have no surplus of live stock in this country at the present time, values should be so demoralized. A representative of Swift & Co. made the statement to me a few days ago that if the packers were closed down for two weeks it would be impossible to feed the country.

If the packers have not more than a two weeks' supply on hand, where is the supply? It is not in the feed yards; it is not on the northwestern ranges, in Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, where ranchmen graze steers for development and ma-Those ranges are not up to capacity. Texas is not up to capacity. Mexico has no live stock, except upon the western

I submit, Senators, that this is a serious condition. I submit that the preservation of the live-stock industry, the preservation of the sheep industry, the growing of wool, is a vital matter to the life of the Nation itself, for in case of peril or war with a foreign country we would not get very far without any wool or without any meat to supply our troops.

I submit, Mr. President, that such conditions as exist now have never confronted the Nation; and with the delicate situation which exists in the minds of producers, the farmers, and the live-stock growers throughout the entire West, unless some relief is afforded, unless encouragement is given through Congress, we may not only see, as we saw during the war, meatless and wheatless days, but we may see the time when you will have a meatless and wheatless Nation, so far as a producing industry commensurate with the demands of this country is concerned.

I realize that it is not all due to the tariff. I realize that this emergency tariff bill can not do everything, that there are other complications, one of the chief of which is the railroad problem. I have a letter here from Roswell, N. Mex., with reference to the production of alfalfa, in which it is stated that the freight on alfalfa is from $11 to $19 to get it to market, and that the rate on cattle and sheep is so high that in the end it is going to paralyze them in all lines of business.

There is an extremely delicate situation affecting farmers and live-stock raisers which I feel we should face squarely and fairly; that we should expend every agency within our power toward keeping these agricultural industries alive. I hope the Sonate will adopt this amendment

Senate will adopt this amendment.

Just one more word, Mr. President, about hides. My information is that hides bring a dollar apiece. The same kind of hides brought from six to twelve dollars before the war. It takes a wagonload of hides to buy a pair of shoes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has ex-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the amendment now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the committee, which is printed in the bill.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Are we to vote on the entire amendment submitted by the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; unless an amendment is offered to it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, What is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which is printed in the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask that the question on the amendment be divided. As I recall it, it embodies three questions,

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before we vote upon the amendment reported by the committee, I desire to offer the amendment to the committee amendment which I now send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The Assistant Secretary. Add to the committee amendment, at the foot of page 18:

Whenever it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that merchandise upon which an import duty is levied by the United States is being commonly exported from the United States and is being commonly and generally sold in the countries to which exported at less than the same class or kind of merchandise is being sold or offered for sale in the United States, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue an order suspending and setting aside any import duty or tariff upon the importation of the same or similar articles of merchandise into the United States, said order to remain effective so long as the condition aforesaid exists.

Mr. REED. After the word "being," in line 6 of my proposed amendment to the amendment, I wish to insert the word "generally," so that it will read "being generally sold or offered for sale in the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment, and it will be so modified.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the bill for 10 minutes, reserving the right to employ a further 10 minutes upon the amendment to the amendment if it becomes necessary.

The bill contains a dumping clause to the effect that when goods are being sold in the United States for less than they are being sold in the country of their production, an additional duty shall be levied in order to protect our people against cheap goods dumped upon our market. The other side of that question is that American manufacturers may sell their goods abroad for less than they are sold to the American people. They may indulge in this practice of dumping.

I am not interested in that phase of the question from the standpoint of protecting any European manufacturer of course, but with a tariff law already upon the statute books and with this bill pending, the situation is that if American manufacturers are able to sell their goods abroad for less than the American price, and do so sell them abroad for less than the American price, then the foreign purchaser gets the benefit of the cheap goods, but the American who wants to protect himself against the excessive price charged at home can not buy goods abroad, because they are barred out by the tariff. He can not even go to a European market and buy American goods which have been sold there at a low price and bring them back into the United States.

Now, I insist that if there is any merit in a tariff law it must exist in the fact that it promotes American industry to a point where the price is ultimately reduced to the American people. But if the practice comes into existence of an American manufacturer making his goods here behind a tariff wall and selling them at a higher price to the American people, and then so "ing the same class of goods at a lower price to European or Asia ic purchasers, the result is that the whole benefit of the tariff inures to the foreigner and the whole of the burden of the tariff rests upon the American people. In other words, we tax ourselves to build up an industry, and when we have it built up, it sells to foreigners for less than it sells to American citizens.

That, in my opinion, is an unconscionable thing; it is indefensible. No man who claims that the Government should protect him in his business against foreign competition has any right whatsoever to object to this amendment, which simply takes away from him the tariff protection which he now has, when he is able to sell his goods in competition with the world and to pay the freight to foreign markets.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll. Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Sutherland] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and vote "yea."

The roll was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Page] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I observe that he has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pirr-MAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I announce that the Senator from Massachu-

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] is necessarily absent on account of a death in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge]. On the pending question the Senator from Alabama, if present, would vote "yea."

So Mr. Reed's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the first paragraph of Rule XVIII, I ask that the Senate committee amendment be divided; that the first vote be on Title II of the amendment; and that then each succeeding title be voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be so divided.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Utah kindly repeat his request:

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that, under the first paragraph of Rule XVIII, the vote on the committee amendment be divided, beginning with Title II of the committee amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. That each title of the amendment, after it shall have been perfected, be voted on separately?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope that will be done.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered

Mr. STANLEY. I send to the Secretary's desk an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 26, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following section:

SEC. 213. That this title shall not apply in the case of merchandise imported from any country which does not impose upon the importation of merchandise from the United States restrictions similar to the restrictions imposed upon imported merchandise by this act.

proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I shall address myself briefly to the provisions of the pending bill in general, reserving the right to speak for 10 minutes upon the amendment to the committee amendment I have just offered.

This bill, Mr. President, technically speaking, is not an antidumping bill. It is a universal price accelerator. By the terms of the opening section of the antidumping clause the bill provides for an investigation by the Secretary of the Treasury of low prices for commodities sold here or abroad, and in the event those prices, in the opinion of the Secretary, are unduly low, the importer guilty of selling too cheaply to the American consumer is to be published or pilloried by the Secretary.

Mr. President, this bill is in utter defiance, in utter disregard of the rights of the great mass of the American people. It is in utter and absolute disregard of that great aphorism of Adam Smith that "in every country it always is and must be the interest of the great body of people to buy what they want of those who sell it cheapest." Every great industrial country in the world—and especially the United States at present—must purchase abroad any number of commodities essential to the happiness of the citizen and to the success of the country's industrial enterprises, commodities that are produced in but small part or not at all at home. Every bill of this character ever prepared, ever offered, ever passed, by any sane parliamentary body has been safeguarded in its provisions in such a way as not to interfere with the importation of essential commodities not produced to any material extent in the country into which they are imported.

Mr. President, in Australasia, in Canada, South Africa, Australia, and Great Britain also, wherever legislation of this kind has been proposed, it has been safeguarded in such a way as to apply, first, only to such commodities as were imported in material amounts in competition with domestic enterprise and sold more cheaply at home than abroad, but the commodity must actually be sold more cheaply in the domestic than in the foreign market; and in the event it is not so sold, the law of Canada and the law of South Africa and bills proposed in the

I call attention to the sane and necessary provisions of the Canadian antidumping act, afterwards incorporated in the Underwood tariff bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

This law providing against the sale of foreign commodities more cheaply in Canada than in the place from which they were exported further provides:

That the said special duty shall not exceed 15 per cent ad valorem in any case.

And again:

Such regulations may provide for the temporary exemption from special duty of any article or class of articles, when it is established to the satisfaction of the minister of customs that such articles are not made or sold in Canada in substantial quantities, and offered for sale to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions, having regard to the custom and usage of trade.

This bill would exclude shellac; it would exclude tea; it would exclude potash; it would exclude many essential articles, notwithstanding the fact that we can not produce at home onehundredth part of the necessary supply. Any exotic industry producing the one-thousandth of a thing essential to the industrial and domestic life of the American people can, upon the complaint of this petty producer, be excluded from American markets

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit just word on that point?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly. Mr. PENROSE. The committee amendment provides that application must be made to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he shall not order the antidumping provision to apply unless the importation from the foreign commodity injures an American industry. A raw material which is not produced in this country could not have the provision applied to it. Therefore the Senator's apprehensions are entirely groundless

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator please, the provision does not specify the size of the industry; it does not specify the amount of the commodity produced. An industry in my own or the Senator's State producing one ten-thousandth part of an essential commodity can ask for the sort of protection provided in the antidumping provision of the bill. There are small establishments producing potash and other commodities which would be entitled to like protection. If there is an industry producing a commodity of any kind the price of which to the importer is less than the price charged abroad, notwithstanding the protective duty, the antidumping provision will apply. Similar bills passed by every other civilized country are safeguarded in some respect.

Again, Mr. President, an American industry—for instance, the United States Steel Corporation—may sell more cheaply abroad than at home. The United States Steel Corporation Through its president, Judge Gary, before a does do that. committee of which I happened to be chairman, it boasted that it did sell more cheaply abroad than at home; and Judge Gary said that he proposed to continue that practice; that it was a sound and admirable policy. The manufacture of any article produced in the United States may dump it on the world at any price he pleases; and not only that, but a combination or a trust can place the most extortionate prices upon any domestic commodity. The Beef Trust may charge what it pleases for beef; the Steel Trust what it pleases for steel; the Wool Trust what it pleases for clothing in the domestic market; and yet in the future, as in the past, these monopolies may dump their products upon the markets of the world at half what they charge the home consumer. Yet these same trusts can go before the Secretary of the Treasury and with unclean hands demand that the markets of America be closed because some foreign competitor, forsooth, may interfere with their trust, guaranteed licenses, and franchises to plunder the American I defy Senators on the other side to show where a bill of this kind was ever proposed by any civilized country not safeguarded against that sort of transparent, brazen, and iniquitous abuse.

The Canadian law provides that-

Whenever * * * it appears to the satisfaction to the governor in council that with regard to any article of commerce there exists any conspiracy, combination, agreement, or arrangement of any kind among manufacturers of such articles or dealers therein to unduly promote the advantage of the manufacturers or dealers at the expense of the consumer, the governor in council may admit the article free of duty or reduce the duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand, under the unanimous-consent agreement I can discuss the bill for 10 minutes and each amendment for 10 minutes. Has my time expired on the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to 10 minutes more to discuss the bill.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, discussing this particular amendment and in the time allotted for that purpose, I will say that there is no provision in this bill such as is contained in every other bill of this character against combinations between the importer and domestic producers to enhance the domestic price.

Mr. President, not Democrats, not Republicans, not politicians, but political economists placed in the highest authority, clothed with the greatest power over your tariff schedules, placed in a position to advise you—and you are pledged by your own plat-form declarations to heed that advice—have warned you against the perils and iniquities of such legislation. Prof. Emery, the president of the Tariff Board, has shown the danger and the folly of this embargo.

No exporting nation in the world has yet invited a similar character of reprisal. With the exception of Canada and a few wild-eyed Australian colonies, no other country has enacted such a law. Prof. Emery, in a recent and well-digested article on this subject, has said:

what about our own position in regard to selling surplus products abroad? Do we wish to help start a movement as yet confined to a few sparsely settled colonies (Canada, Austria, etc.), which will become the practice of our leading competitors? What would be the position of our own export trade if all countries should adopt the principle that all goods can not be sold in foreign markets for less than the established price of the domestic market? We are in a peculiar position. In general, our domestic prices are relatively so high that dumping in our market is not so necessary as in other markets. The foreign manufacturer can commonly meet the situation by offering his goods at his regular home prices. On the other hand, prices in foreign markets are so low that the American exporter is largely driven by the sheer force of international competition to sell his surplus at some reduction. For this reason I believe the movement for an antidumping law may prove dangerous to American exporters.

What! Is this body forgetful of the changes of a few years?

What! Is this body forgetful of the changes of a few years? Yesterday you might have dared to do it. To-day it is consummate folly. Yesterday you were a debtor and an importing nation. To-day you are a creditor and the greatest exporter in all the world. Not only that, Senators, you are exporting under conditions that positively demand that to export at all you must sell for less abroad than at home. If the cost of production here is not greater than abroad, if the level of wages is not higher here than abroad, your platforms are as false as dicers' oaths; the whole system of protection is based upon a sophism and an economic lie. If England, France, Germany, and other countries of continental Europe apply the same medicine to you, press to your lips the same cup that you are now pressing to the lips of the other nations of the world, you will close your doors upon your foreign commerce, and to-day you are selling eight billions abroad for the four billions you import. in manufactures suitable for other manufactures, you are importing five hundred millions and exporting nine hundred millions. You are preparing to spend hundreds of millions for a merchant marine—a merchant marine to do what? must have cargoes as well as ships, and you will find no place for your ships and no open ports if the rest of the exporting countries of the world emulate the pernicious example of the greatest exporter on the globe. Your ships will rot in their ports, your balance of trade is gone, and to-day you must not only take care of that balance, but you must collect ten billions from those countries. They can not pay in gold; there is not enough gold in all the world. They can not dig the gold. The world does not produce enough to pay half the interest if every single pennyweight taken from the bowels of the earth were dedicated to this purpose alone. You must get this ten billions of dollars by the exchange of foreign commodities, and here you put an embargo upon foreign commodițies.

You are not honest with yourselves. You are not honest with the world. You are not just to your own manufacturers, who boast that they do this very thing and are able to take care of themselves in doing it. I say to you that the most you can do, the only thing you can do and keep your face as a brave and an honest and a sane nation, is to apply this dumping clause, if it is applied at all, only to the countries that have preceded you in this colossal piece of industrial folly.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Stanley] to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been requested and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. Stanley's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Assistant Secretary. Under Title II it is proposed to add to section 202 the following:

Provided, That such difference exceeds the duty imposed by law upon the importation of such merchandise.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, this amendment will or should receive the support of both sides of the Chamber. This dumping provision is not intended to furnish adequate protection to American industries or for the purpose of affording protection, as protection, at all. It is intended to prevent the sale of foreign commodities in the American market, without regard to protective duty, for less than they are sold in the home market. In applying a dumping act you can not regulate the quantum of duty that is necessary to the success or prosperity of an enterprise and is just to the consuming public. You do not propose to go into that in connection with this dumping provision.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator from Kentucky to state that it places a limitation on the dumping duty, and that limitation is the rate of duty imposed upon the article.

Mr. STANLEY. That is correct. Under this bill if a commodity shall be sold in the American market—say, a yard of Brussels carpet, with a duty of 100 per cent—if it is sold for 1 cent a yard less in the American market than in Brussels, this duty, with all the inquisitorial powers of the revenue agent to look at the books and examine the papers and go into the ship's invoices, and the inventory of its cargo, attaches, and it is an interference with trade which is annoying and harassing and which ought not to be invoked, except when goods are actually sold for less here than they are sold abroad.

If there is a duty of 100 per cent upon that product, the provisions of this bill can be invoked. I provide by this amendment that where the difference between the foreign selling price and the price charged in the home market is more than compensated by the duty imposed, then the law shall not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the committee amendment.

Mr. STANLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which is, in substance, a substitution of the dumping provision contained in the Underwood bill as it left the House for the pending Senate committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

The Assistant Secretary. Under Title II (antidumping), strike out sections 201 to 211, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

thereof the following:

SEC. 201. That whenever articles are exported to the United States of a class or kind made or produced in the United States, if the export or actual selling price to an exporter in the United States, or the price at which such goods are consigned, is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to the United States at the time of its exportation to the United States, there shall, in addition to the duties otherwise established, be levied, collected, and paid on such article on its importation into the United States a special duty (or dumping duty) equal to the difference between the said export or actual selling price of the article for export or the price at which such goods are consigned and the said fair market value thereof for home consumption, provided that the said special duties shall not exceed 15 per cent ad valorem in any case, and that goods whereon the duties otherwise established are equal to 50 per cent ad valorem shall be exempt from such special duty.

"Export price" or "selling price" or "price at which such goods are consigned" in this section shall be held to mean and include the exporter's price for the goods, exclusive of all charges thereon after their shipment from the place whence exported directly to the United States, The Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as are necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of this section and for the enforcement thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Stan-LEY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now upon the committee amendment to insert Title II of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to inquire whether there are any other amendments to the committee substitute that have not been acted upon

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not aware of any amendments to the committee substitute that have not been acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has not yet been acted on.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rose merely to inquire if my amendment is in order. My impression is that it is not in order, as it is an amendment to the text and not to the matter proposed to be inserted. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not in order at this time, the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona being an amendment to another portion of the bill. It is not an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then there is no further amendment which has been offered and not acted upon to the committee substitute for the House dumping and valuation provisions of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands there is not.

Mr. ASHURST. It will be remembered that the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] asked and obtained unanimous consent that the committee amendment be voted upon by titles; that is to say, Title II, first to be voted upon, then Title III, Title IV, and so on. The Senator from Utah happens to be out of the Chamber at this moment.

Mr. CURTIS. I have sent for the Senator from Utah. He has just stepped out.

Mr. ASHURST. Some Senators on this side of the aisle also desire that that course shall be pursued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the request of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I really made no request. I merely called attention to the fact that the Senator from Utah had asked and obtained unanimous consent that the committee amendment be voted upon by titles; in other words, that the question be put on the separate titles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has just stated that the pending question is on inserting Title II, as recommended by the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Chair's pardon.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to Title II of the committee amendment, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary. The committee report to strike out Title II of the bill as passed by the House and to insert:

TITLE II .- ANTIDUMPING.

DUMPING INVESTIGATION.

SEC. 201. (a) That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this act called the "Secretary"), after such investigation as he deems necessary, finds that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from being established, by reason of the importation into the United States of a class or kind of foreign merchandise, and that merchandise of such class or kind is being seld or is likely to be sold in the United States or elsewhere at less than its fair value, then he shall make such finding public to the extent he deems necessary, together with a description of the class or kind of merchandise to which it applies in such detail as may be necessary for the guidance of the appraising officers.

(b) The powers and duties conferred or imposed upon the Secretary by this section may be exercised by him through such agency or agencies as he may designate.

SPECIAL DUMPING DUTY.

SPECIAL DUMPING DUTY.

SEC. 202. (a) That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and as to which the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has made no report to the collector before such finding has been so made public, if the purchase price or the experter's sales price is less than the foreign market value (or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production) there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed thereon by law, a special dumping duty in an amount equal to such difference.

(b) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the amount of such difference between the purchase price and the foreign market value is wholly or partly due to the fact that the wholesale quantities, in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers for exportation to the United States in the ordinary course of trade, are greater than the wholesale quantities in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country of exportation in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), then under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the foreign market value shall for the purposes of this section be decreased accordingly.

(c) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the amount of such difference between the exporter's sales price and the foreign market value is wholly or partly due to the fact that the wholesale quantities, in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the United States in the ordinary course of trade, are greater than the wholesale quantities in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country of exportation in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), then under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the foreign market value shall for the purposes of this section be decreased accordingly.

PURCHASE PRICE.

SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title, the purchase price of imported merchandise shall be the price at which such merchandise has been purchased or agreed to be purchased, prior to the time of exportation, by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported, including the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less the amount, if any, included in such price attributable to any costs, charges, United States import duties, and expenses incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States; and plus the amount, if not included in such price, of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any taxes imposed in the country of exportation upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale of the merchandise which have been rebated or which have not been collected by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States.

EXPORTER'S SALES PRICE.

EXPORTER'S SALES PRICE.

EXPORTER'S SALES PRICE.

Sec. 204. That for the purpose of this title the exporter's sales price of imported merchandise shall be the price at which such merchandise is sold or agreed to be sold in the United States, before or after the time of importation, by or for the account of the exporter, including the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less (1) the amount, if any, included in such price attributable to any costs, charges, United States import duties, and expenses incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States, (2) the amount of the commissions, if any, for selling in the United States the particular merchandise under consideration, (3) an amount equal to the expenses, if any, generally incurred by or for the account of the expenter in the United States in selling identical or substantially identical merchandise, and (4) the amount of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on the expertation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States:

**POREIGN MARKET VALUE.**

FOREIGN MARKET VALUE.

Sec. 205. That for the purposes of this title the foreign market value of imported merchandise shall be the price, at the time of exportation of such merchandise to the United States, at which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption for exportation to countries other than the United States), including the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition packed ready for shipment to the United States, except that in the case of merchandise purchased or agreed to be purchased by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported, prior to the time of exportation, the foreign market value shall be ascertained as of the date of such purchase or agreement to purchase.

COST OF PRODUCTION.

SEC. 206. That for the purposes of this title the cost of production of imported merchandise shall be the sum of—

(1) The cost of materials of, and of fabrication, manipulation, or other process employed in manufacturing or producing identical or substantially identical merchandise at a time preceding the date of shipment of the particular merchandise under consideration which would ordinarily permit the manufacture or production of the particular merchandise under consideration in the usual course of business;

(2) The usual general expenses (not less than 10 per cent of such cost) in the case of identical or substantially identical merchandise;

(3) The cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the particular merchandise under consideration in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States; and

(4) An addition for profits (not less than 8 per cent of the sum of the amounts found under paragraphs (1) and (2), equal to the profit which is ordinarily added in the case of merchandise of the same general character as the particular merchandise under consideration by manufacturers or producers in the country of manufacture or production who are engaged in the same general trade as the manufacturer or producer of the particular merchandise under consideration.

EXPORTER.

SEC. 207. That for the purposes of this title the exporter of imported merchandise shall be the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported into the United States:

(1) If such person is the agent or principal of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer; or

(2) If such person owns or controls, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, any interest in the business of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer; or

(3) If the exporter, manufacturer, or producer owns or controls, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, any interest in any business conducted by such person; or

(4) If any person or persons, jointly or severally, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, own or control in the aggregate 20 per cent or more of the voting power or control in the business carried on by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported into the United States, and also 20 per cent or more of such power or control in the business of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer.

OATHS AND BONDS ON ENTRY.

OATHS AND BONDS ON ENTRY.

OATHS AND BONDS ON ENTRY.

Sec. 208. That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and delivery of which has not been made by the collector before such finding has been so made public, unless the person by whom or for whose account such merchandise is imported makes oath before the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that he is not an exporter, or unless such person declares under oath at the time of entry, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the exporter's sales price of such merchandise, it shall be unlawful for the collector to deliver the merchandise until such person has made oath before the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the merchandise has not been sold or agreed to be sold by such person, and has given bond to the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, with sureties approved by the collector, in an amount equal to the estimated value of the merchandise, conditioned: (1) That he will report to the collector the exporter's sales price of the merchandise within 30 days after such merchandise, and (3) that he will furnish to the collector such information as may be in his possession and as may be necessary for the ascertainment of such duty, and will keep such records as to the sale of such merchandise as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

DUTIES OF APPRAISERS.

SEC, 209. That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and as to which the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has made no report to the collector before such finding has been so made public, it shall be the duty of each appraiser or person acting as appraiser, by all reasonable ways and means to ascertain, estimate, and appraise (any invoice or affidavit thereto or statement of cost of production to the contrary notwithstanding) and report to the collector the foreign market value or the cost of production, as the case may be, the purchase price, and the exporter's sales price, and any other facts which the Secretary may deem necessary for the purposes of this title.

APPEALS AND PROTESTS

APPEALS AND PROTESTS.

Sec. 210. That for the purposes of this title the determination of the appraiser or person acting as appraiser as to the foreign market value or the cost of production, as the case may be, the purchase price, and the exporter's sales price, and the action of the collector in assessing special dumping duty, shall have the same force and effect and be subject to the same right of appeal and protest, under the same conditions and subject to the same limitations; and the general appraisers, the Board of General Appraisers, and the Court of Customs Appeals shall have the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties in connection with such appeals and protests as in the case of appeals and protests relating to cutoms duties under existing law.

DRAWBACKS.

DRAWBACKS.

SEC. 211. That the special dumping duty imposed by this title shall be treated in all respects as regular customs duties within the meaning of all laws relating to the drawback of customs duties.

SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 212. That this title may be cited as the "Antidumping act, 1921."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to insert Title II, beginning on page 16 of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. Before that vote is taken I desire to reserve the right to offer in the Senate for a separate vote the amendment which I offered this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Missouri is not necessary. He has that right. The Senator from North Carolina demands the yeas and nays on the committee amendment-Title II.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when Mr. Penrosz's name was called). The senior Senator from Pennsylvania has been called away from the Chamber for a short time. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], who is prevented from being present at this moment. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood].

Mr STANLEY. On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] by transfer. That Senator is temporarily absent. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Lodge

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] is necessarily absent on account of a death in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge]. On the pending question the Senator from Alabama, if present, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 84, nays 2, as follows:

So the committee amendment inserting Title II was agreed to. Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would not have called for the yeas and nays on the proposition just pending if I had understood what we were about to vote on. I think we all do prefer the Senate substitute for the House provision, because it is a very great improvement over it. Of course, when we come to vote upon the final adoption of the substitute, I think that many of us, all of us on this side of the Chamber, will reverse

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand I have a right to offer an amendment when the bill gets into the Senate on the proposition just under discussion. I reserve that right, at any rate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The right will be reserved. The question is on agreeing to so much of the committee amendment as proposes the insertion of a new title to be known as Title III.

The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

TITLE III.—ASSESSMENT OF AD VALOREM DUTIES.

Sec. 301. That whenever merchandise which is imported into the United States is subject to an ad valorem rate of duty or to a duty based upon or regulated in any manner by the value thereof, duty shall in no case be assessed on a value less than the export value of such EXPORT VALUE.

SEC. 302. That for the purposes of this title the export value of imported merchandise shall be the price, at the time of exportation of such merchandise to the United States, at which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade, for exportation to the United States, including the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less the amount, if any, included in such price, attributable to any costs, charges, United States import duties, and expenses incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States, and plus, if not included in such price, the amount of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on merchandise exported to the United States.

REFERENCES TO " VALUE " IN EXISTING LAW.

SEC. 303 (a). That wherever in Title I of this act, or in the tariff act of 1913, as amended, or in any law of the United States in existence at the time of the enactment of this act relative to the appraisement of imported merchandise (except secs. 2874, 2976, and 3016 of the Revised Statutes, and sec. 801 of the revenue act of 1916), reference is made to the value of imported merchandise (irrespective of the particular phraseology used and irrespective of whether or not such phraseology is limited or qualified by words referring to country or port of exportation or principal markets) such reference shall, in respect to all merchandise imported on or after the day this act takes effect, be construed to refer, except as provided in subdivision (b), to actual market value as defined by the law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, or to export value as defined by section 302 of this act, whichever is higher.

(b) If the rate of duty upon imported merchandise is in any manner dependent upon the value of any component material thereof, such value shall be an amount determined under the provisions of the tariff act of 1913, as in force prior to the enactment of this act.

SEC. 304. That when used in this title the term "tariff act of 1913" means the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to so much of the committee amendment as proposes the insertion of a new title to be known as Title IV.

The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

TITLE IV .- GENERAL PROVISIONS.

STATEMENTS IN INVOICE.

SEC. 401. That all invoices of imported merchandise, and all statements in the form of an invoice, in addition to the statements required by law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, shall contain such other statements as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, and a statement as to the currency in which made out, specifying whether gold, silver, or paper.

STATEMENTS AT TIME OF ENTRY.

SEC. 402. That the owner, importer, consignee, or agent, making entry of imported merchandise, shall set forth upon the invoice, or statement in the form of an invoice, and in the entry, in addition to the statements required by the law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, such statements, under oath if required, as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

CONVERSION OF CURRENCY.

Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

CONVERSION OF CURRENCY.

Sec. 403. (a) That section 25 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 25. That the value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated quarterly by the Director of the Mint and be proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year."

(b) For the purpose of the assessment and collection of duties upon merchandise imported into the United States on or after the day of the enactment of this act, wherever it is necessary to convert foreign currency into currency of the United States, such conversion, except as provided in subdivision (c), shall be made at the values proclaimed by the Secretary under the provisions of section 25 of such act of August 27, 1894, for the quarter in which the merchandise was exported.

(c) If no such value has been proclaimed, or if the value so proclaimed varies by 5 per cent or more from a value measured by the buying rate in the New York market at noon on the day of exportation, conversion shall be made at a value measured by such buying rate. For the purposes of this subdivision such buying rate shall be the buying rate for cable transfers payable in the foreign currency so to be converted; and shall be determined by the Federal reserve bank of New York and certified daily to the Secretary, who shall make it public at such times and to such extent as he deems necessary. In ascertalning such buying rate such Federal reserve bank may in its discretion (1) take into consideration the last ascertainable transactions and quotations, whether direct or through the exchange of other currencies, and (2) if there is no market buying rate f

So Title V of the committee amendment was agreed to, as follows:

TITLE V .- DYES AND CHEMICALS.

SEC, 501. (a) That on and after the day following the enactment of this act, for the period of six months, no sodium nitrite, no dyes or dyestuffs, including crudes and intermediates, no product or products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar (including crudes, intermediates, finished or partly finished products, and mixtures and compounds of such coal-tar products), and no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals, shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the Secretary fetermines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantities and on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery, and that such article in the quantity to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after receipt of the merchandise.

(b) Upon the day following the enactment of this act the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State shall cease to exist; all clerks and employees of such War Trade Board Section shall be transferred to and become clerks and employees of the Treasury Department, and all books, documents, and other records relating to such dye and chemical import control of such War Trade Board Section shall become books, documents, and records of the Treasury Department. All individual licenses issued by such War Trade Board Section prior to the enactment of this act shall remain in effect during the period of their validity, and the importations under such licenses shall be permitted. All unexpended funds and appropriations for the use and maintenance of such War Trade Board Section prior to the power and authority conferred upon him by this section.

Sec. 502. That this title may be cited as the "Dye and chemical control act, 1921."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I reserve the right to ask for a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment which has just

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consideration of the committee amendment, so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, is completed. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina will state it

Mr. SIMMONS. My understanding is that we have now voted on the Senate committee substitute by title. The VICE PRESIDENT. We have.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it not now proper to vote upon the Senate committee substitute as a whole?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not now necessary.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Chair holds that that is unnecessary? The VICE PRESIDENT. He does.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say that so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, those of us who have voted for the Senate committee substitute did so not because we are in favor of that substitute, but because we thought it was better than the provision of the bill as it came from the House. However, we shall have an opportunity on the final vote of voting against the substitute, together with the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had hoped to have the opportunity of discussing somewhat at length the provisions of this bill placing an embargo upon dyes, but I could not obtain the floor without interfering with others, so was unable to do so. In the few minutes permitted under the rule, I shall attempt no discussion of the bill, and will content myself with referring to one or two questions involved in the provision just mentioned. I express my keen disappointment at the attitude of Republican Senators with respect to a policy which I believe to be wrong, and also express my sincere regret that some Members upon this side of the aisle are giving support to a proposition which I regard as vicious and un-American. Whatever might have been said three or four years ago in favor of a tariff on dyes would not be justified under present conditions. In 1913, as well as in 1916, the advocates of tariff duties upon dyes asked for no embargo and expressed satisfaction with reasonable duties limited to a few years, alleging that at the end of that period the industry would be so far developed that it could meet any foreign competition.

The domestic dye industry has grown to large proportions. In 1919 the production of coal-tar dyes amounted to more than 63,000,000 pounds. The exports of dyestuffs from the United States for the year 1920 amounted to more than $33,000,000. In 1914 the total imports of dyestuffs exceeded 45,000,000 pounds. We are now producing in the United States 40 per cent more of coal-tar dyes than were imported in 1914 or prior The quantity of dyes produced in the United to that year. States in 1920 exceeded the quantity produced in 1919 and comprehends a much more extensive variety. The imports of dyes for the fiscal year 1920 amounted to only three and onehalf million pounds. So prosperous has been the dye industry in the United States that millions of dollars of profits have been realized. The prices charged by the domestic producers have reached, I was about to say, extortionate proportions. The American consumer has been compelled to submit to the outrageous demand of what I submit the evidence shows is a monopoly. This monopoly seeks to perpetuate its power, to increase its profits, and to hold the consumer of dyestuffs in the United States absolutely at the consumer of dyestuffs in the United States absolutely at its mercy.

By some it is contended that this legislation is necessary as a means of national defense, and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], who is the sponsor for the amendment now before us, justified its enactment by pointing to the roster of American soldiers who gave their lives upon the battle fields of Europe. Their dead bodies are to be the rampart behind which he defends what I believe to be a monopoly. Mr. President, in my opinion, the facts do not support those who advance this argument, but time does not permit a presentation of the facts relating to this matter.

Recently there has been promulgated by the Department of State a regulation which more effectually places the dye manufacturers in control of the American market. Not satisfied with a licensing feature which excludes nearly all foreign dyes, it is planned to place in the hands of the domestic producers, or an organization which responds to their views, the determination of the question as to whom licenses to import shall be issued. The power to refuse licenses, I submit, is found in the plan which now obtains and which this bill will continue.

In each case, therefore, before applying for license to import or causing application for such license to be made by an importing agent the intending consumer should ascertain, through the American Dyes Institute, No. 320 Broadway, New York City, N. Y., whether or not goods similar to those desired to be imported, or some satisfactory substitute therefor, is or are obtainable from domestic sources on reasonable terms as above, and should state that he has made such inquiry. Applications for license to import dyes, dyestuffs, or crudes or intermediates entering into the production or manufacture thereof which are of enemy make will not be considered unless in each case the accompanying consumer's statement and guaranty show exactly wherein the goods therein listed fail to meet the intending consumer's particular manufacturing requirements.

And so forth.

We not only have a dye monopoly but we propose, if this amendment is adopted, to continue war legislation for an addi-tional period. The Republican Party denounced the last administration for continuing after the armistice legislation which was the product of the war, and pledges were made that the Republican Party would immediately repeal all war legislation. Now promises are forgotten and the dyestuff industry secures legislation which enables it to enforce war measures in peace time in order that its profits may be increased and its powers

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a ques-

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I observe that a certain portion of the votes for this monopoly by tariff came from the Democratic side of the Chamber. After talking so many years for a tariff for revenue only, is the Senator prepared now to say that a large portion of his party at least will support tariff for monopoly in this Chamber just because President Wilson may have recommended it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, unfortunately I can not speak for the Democratic Party, but speaking for myself I can only express my disagreement with what Mr. Wilson stated upon the question of a tariff for dyestuffs, and my profound regret over the support given by some Democrats to this provision, which is more than a tariff provision, but is equivalent to an absolute embargo, the result of which will be to strengthen a monopoly which not only needs no embargo but little if any tariff in order that it may enjoy legitimate prosperity.

In my opinion, Democrats can find no justification for supporting a licensing feature in times of peace and an embargo that will operate to swell the earnings of corporations engaged in an industry which now has undisputed control of domestic markets. It is an abandonment, in my opinion, of the traditional policy of the party, and will prove an embarrassment to the Democrats when they come to consider future revenue and tariff measures. There may have been some justification for President Wilson's advocacy of a tariff on dyes a number of years ago, but I respectfully submit that the position of President Wilson taken then does not support a policy calculated to entrench a monopoly in the United States which would oppress and plunder the people. If the Democratic Party should join hands with Republicans to enact legislation such as Republicans have enacted in the past, under which trusts and monopolies were developed, it would have no right to ask for the confidence and support of the American people. In my opinion, one of the great issues before the American people is whether or not monopolies and trusts and combines shall rule and control our political as well as our economic life. Never in the history of the Republic have trusts and monopolies been more arrogant, sinister, and oppressive than they are at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BORAH. I think we ought to have an agreement that when we discuss the tariff question we shall not refer to either the Republican or Democratic Party. The terms signify nothing at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope that what the Senator says is not true, but I am afraid there is too much truth in his statement. When revenue and tariff questions are presented it seems as though party lines disappear. I submit there is too much selfishness and sectionalism in the consideration of legislation of this character. Special interests and corporations affected by tariff legislation become powerful propagandists in favor of measures and policies inuring to their advantage. It has been said, and I think with truth, that protected interests, corporations, and trusts have in subtle and insidious ways poisoned the minds of many and attempted to secure legislation beneficial to them and harmful to the American public. I believe that manufacturing and other interests are now directly or indirectly seeking to secure legislation which will permit them to impose burdens upon the American consumer. Selfish interests are clamoring for legislation that will prevent competition and enable them to control prices and secure inordinate There should be an investigation, in my opinion, of the activities of interests-corporations, associations, and so forthdirected toward securing Federal legislation. There should be an investigation of the dye industry. We should know whether it is a monopoly. We should secure the evidence referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] in his speech a few days ago, in which attention was directed to the large sums !

spent by the dye industry for propaganda purposes and clearly for the purpose of influencing legislation. I shall offer a resolution to-morrow asking for an investigation of the dye industry, of its efforts to secure legislation, as well as other corporations, monopolies, and industries, and what, if any, efforts they have put forth to secure tariff or other legislation from which they might obtain pecuniary or other benefits.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I offer and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Assistant Secretary. On page 3, line 24, after the word pound," it is proposed to insert the following:

Except such wools as were purchased abroad prior to April 1, 1921, individuals, firms, or corporations here for importation into the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I simply wish to explain briefly the object of the amendment, if I may do so.

There is in my State a gentleman who is engaged in the importation of wool, and he had engaged to import from South America on March 14 a large quantity of wool which was sold to various concerns in New York, and the shipment of it from Buenos Aires has been delayed on account of strikes. I do not know how much other wool there is outside of this country awaiting shipment to this country, but I do know that the immediate effect of the enactment of this emergency tariff will be, in my opinion, to impose an unjust burden on that importer and other importers who had engaged to import these wools prior to the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

How many pounds of wool does the amendment cover?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am going to get to that, and give all the facts to the Senate, and let it rest with the Senate whether or not they wish to impose this injustice by enacting legislation which practically penalizes those who engaged this wool prior to the enactment of the law.

There were 3,000,000 pounds of mercerized wool, I believe it is called-

Mr. SMOOT. Carbonized wool. A gentleman told me it was carbonized.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Three million pounds of carbonized wool. I see that the Senator from Utah is very familiar with the wool question.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is affording a great deal of consolation to those of us who are supporting this bill. I have been of the opinion that all wool had arrived, but this is the first ray of hope I have had that it would be of any real benefit to the American wool raiser.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am very glad the Senator from Idaho is in accord with any tariff legislation. This purchase is 3,000,000 pounds of so-called carbonized wool, purchased at 54 cents a pound, at a cost of $1,620,000. The tariff imposes a duty of 45 cents, which will make that wool cost, in addition, $1,350,000. Now, I claim that in addition to that there are 2,000,000 pounds of other wools engaged to be brought in at a cost of $280,000, and the duty imposes on those wools an additional burden of $300,000.

This wool was engaged for shipment prior to this legislation, and yet this legislation imposes a burden of nearly 150 per cent upon the importers who have engaged that wool for shipment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Wyo-

Mr. WARREN. Is it not a matter of fact that the one or two parties who are speculators in wool have had the information that the whole country has had, that this legislation has been imminent for nearly six months? Is there any reason why they should not take the same chances of "running the blockade" that the importers of other goods should take?

As a matter of fact, I may say to the Senator, if he will allow me just a word or two-because I do not wish to infringe upon his time-any good that this bill might do to the sheepmen, the woolgrowers, of course, would be carried away by an amendment of this kind. It is not expected that this emergency bill itself is going to do the woolgrowers very much good, except that it may cause a discontinuance of the dumping of wool into this country until there may be some more perfect tariff legislation to follow. I think this legislation, with all the respect and love I have for the Senator proposing it, is, I might say, most imprudent on the part of the men who ask this particular privilege now.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The situation is this: This wool was purchased prior to this legislation. There was no notice of its impending passage; in fact, the impression was gained that this legislation was not going to pass. On March 14 this wool was engaged for shipment, and now you impose a burden of 150 per cent upon that wool that was engaged prior to this legisla-I think the amendment is perfectly fair and just, and I think it should be adopted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey correctly, it proposes that there shall be admitted some 70,000,000 pounds of wool.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to know how many pounds of wool it is estimated will be imported under this amendment without duty?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Three million pounds of carbonized wools and 2,000,000 pounds of other wools.

Mr. SMOOT. But, Mr. President, that applies only to this one firm.

Mr. ASHURST. It is obvious that under this amendment some seventy or eighty million pounds of wool will be imported immediately

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to say that only such wools as were engaged prior to April 1 may be imported.

Mr. ASHURST. So I perceive. Mr. President, we are proceeding upon the hypothesis that this is a bill to assist the farmer, the cattle raiser, and the woolgrower. How can you assist the woolgrower by importing 70,000,000 pounds of wool to come into competition with his clip grown under extra heavy

My able and redoubtable friend from Utah [Mr. King] stood his ground, opposed to any duties on dyestuffs. In the case of this provision under Title V, upon which we voted a moment ago, relating to dyestuffs, some challenge was flung at Democrats for voting for a high duty on dyestuffs. The most eminent lowtariff man the world ever produced, outside of the English lowtariff statesmen, sent a wireless message to Congress from Paris urging a protective wall upon dyestuffs so high that none could come in. The former leader of the Democratic Party, Woodrow Wilson, sent the following message to Congress by wireless on May 20, 1919:

Nevertheless, there are parts of our tariff system which need prompt attention. The experiences of the war have made it plain that in some cases too great reliance on foreign supply is dangerous, and that in determining certain parts of our tariff policy domestic considerations must be borne in mind which are political as well as economic. Among the industries to which special consideration should be given is that of the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals. Our complete dependence upon German supplies before the war made the interruption of trade a cause of exceptional economic disturbance. The close relation between the manufacture of dyestuffs on the one hand and of explosives and poisonous gases on the other, moreover, has given the industry an exceptional significance and value. Although the United States will gladly and unhesitatingly join in the program of international disarmament, it will, nevertheless, be a policy of obvious prudence to make certain of the successful maintenance of many strong and well-equipped chemical plants. The German chemical industry, with which we will be brought into competition, was and may well be again thoroughly knit monopoly capable of exercising a competition of a peculiarly insidious and dangerous kind.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

Mr. ASHURST. I have only a minute. I can not yield. Where is there a high-tariff man who ever made a stronger argument than that? Let him stand up if there be one. Did former Senator Aldrich or former Representative Payne ever make a stronger argument for a high protective tariff than did President Wilson when he urged Congress to place a tariff on dyestuffs and its related chemicals?

What does all this prove? It proves that which the Democrats have always said, to wit, that the tariff is not a political question. The Republicans insist it is. Mr. Cox, in his campaign, when he reached California said, "I am for a tariff on lemons." Mr. Wilson wired from Paris that he must have a high protective tariff, yea, an embargo, on dyestuffs.

The tariff question is a logical question, a business question, which moves us. We do not move it. This country is going to demand that the tariff question shall no longer be made a political question, because it is a business question only.

If you have a protective tariff on the manufactured article you should also have a tariff on the products of the farm, the field, and the ranch. That is why I have vexed the ears of my friends here in urging a tariff on the long-staple cotton. The amendment I offer provides that the tariff on long-staple cotton shall be 20 cents a pound, because the Egyptian laborer can lay the cotton down in New England for 26 cents a pound and it costs the American farmer 50 cents a pound to produce it.

We say with Jefferson, we say with Jackson, equal rights to all and special privileges to none. Your philosopy of putting the manufactured article under a high protective tariff and the products of the farm, the field, and the ranch on the free list is a gross and unjust discrimination against the farmer.

That will be one of the issues soon to come before the people, The farmer must subsist our Nation. The woolgrower and the cattle grower must clothe our Nation.

How are they going to clothe and subsist our Nation if your solicitude is for the Egyptian laborer and the German manufacturer of chemicals and dyestuffs?

The Republican Party after the Civil War shrewdly saw an opportunity to capitalize the tariff question, forgetting that Andrew Jackson stood for a tariff on raw materials; Randall stood for a tariff on raw materials; Walker stood for a tariff on raw materials; and Jefferson stood for a tariff on raw materials. The great Democrats who laid deep and strong the foundations of the Democratic Party said that if you have a tariff on the manufactured article you must also have a tariff on the raw materials, but it has grown in the last few years to be a sort of a heresy for a Democrat to demand that his own constituency be dealt with equally with other constituencies.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment and reserve the right to a vote on it in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. There is an amendment pending now, not yet disposed of.

Mr. GERRY. I simply want to offer the amendment, under the unanimous-consent agreement, before 3 o'clock, and reserve

In regard to the amendment I have offered, I want to say that its purpose is to prevent any special duty being placed on articles on the free list. Under the special dumping provision of the bill it is possible for the Secretary of the Treasury in certain cases to put a tax on articles which are now on the free list. It seems to me perfectly ridiculous that it should be considered for one minute that a tariff should be placed on merchandise on the free list when the whole idea of the free list is to have those commodities on it come into this country as cheaply as possible and not put them into any special class which shall be subject to taxation and which would raise their price to the consumer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not take much of the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Frelinghuysen]. I am quite sure that if we wanted to destroy the protection that is to be afforded by this bill, no better way could be devised than to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

I am informed that there are least 70,000,000 pounds of wool on the waters to-day, which had been contracted for, no doubt, before April 1.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Has the Senator any evidence of that which he can produce?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the information here on my desk. I did not expect such an amendment to come up, or I would have had it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him again, I should like to have some evidence of the fact that there are 70,000,000 pounds of wool on the way here. I understand that is not so.

Mr. President, I have only about five minutes and I will withdraw the statement if the Senator wishes and confine myself to the statement made by the Senator that there are 5,300,000 pounds of wool affected which are expected to reach here without any duty being collected upon that wool.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. This I do know, Mr. President, that there is wool enough in the United States to-day, if not another pound comes in, together with this season's clip, to last the American manufacturers for at least two years. I am quite confident that the firm referred to by the Senator did as other importers did.

They knew very well an emergency bill was passed at the last session of Congress, and that in the closing days of the session it was vetoed by the President. There was not any doubt but that that bill would be introduced again, and no doubt the order was placed between the day the bill was vetoed by the President and the 1st day of April, and they took their chances of getting the wool in before the passage of this bill. As far as the pending amendment is concerned, it might as well apply to every item in the bill, and whatever duties are fixed in the bill will apply to other articles the same as we intended them to apply to wool, and I can not believe that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in support of what was said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] against this dyestuffs provision. It has been pretty thoroughly established by this time that there is in this country a dyestuff monopoly. Two great combinations hold the country in their grip at this time in the manufacture of dyestuffs. They have an immense capital. They maintain at the Capital an expensive lobby. Their headquarters, known as the American Dye Institute, are located at 320 Broadway, and this legislation, if passed, is directly for the benefit of that monopoly. Even at the present time if anyone desires to import dyes into this country, he must go, under the orders of the State Department issued last month, to the offices of the American Dye Institute to ascertain whether he can procure from that monopoly at prices which they deem adequate the necessary dye which he desires for consumption.

Now it is proposed to put practically into the statutes of the United States, for the benefit of this dyestuff monopoly, what has heretofore existed as an administrative regulation. Senators realize the extent to which this has gone and the scandal which is growing out of it? The dyestuff industry in the United States at the present time is one of the powerful, rapidly growing industries of the United States, and you propose by this legislation to erect a wall around the United States and prevent any competition from coming into the United States

This great monopoly not only has the American market entirely in its grip, both as to supply and prices, but this monopoly at the present time has a great foreign trade, a trade in dye stuffs which it is maintaining in the face of competition from all over the world.

This trade is rapidly growing. For the eight months ending with February of the present year this great monopoly of the United States, which is supposed to need an embargo as a protection against the rest of the world, exported $17,246,484 worth of goods sold to the rest of the world. Do Senators want to put into a law a provision that this monopoly shall be permitted to continue and fatten on the American people while it is selling its products in competition with German dyestuffs and other dyestuffs in other parts of the world?

Senators have voted here to-day against an amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], an amendment which was intended to provide that if an American manufacturer was selling his goods in a foreign market lower than those at which he sold to the American people the protection would be removed. Senators voted against that amendment. They went on record as unwilling to protect the American consumer. They went on record as perfectly willing that the American consumer should be required by a tariff to pay to these manufacturers prices higher than those at which they were selling to the people in foreign lands; and now, by this provision relating to dyestuffs, in a bill for which some Democrats have been voting to-day, you propose to erect practically an embargo and say to the manufacturers of German dyestuffs, "You can not sell your dyes to the American people as long as the American manufacturers are manufacturing those dyes, notwithstanding the fact that those same American manufacturers have been selling their dyes in other parts of the world to the extent of $17,000,000 during the last eight months.

It is possible, Mr. President, that the dominant party is ready to go on record to the American consumer with that statement. Possibly they are ready to incorporate in this bill an embargo to prevent the importation of any dyestuffs which this great monopoly, with headquarters at 320 Broadway, can manufacture and sell to the American people. I do not understand how even protectionist Senators can really be willing to put American manufacturers of goods which must use dyes under such a disadvantage. It seems to me, if I were a protectionist and wanted to encourage the development of American industries in the United States, even at the expense of the American consumer, I would at least object to putting an embargo on one of the very necessary articles which those American manufacturers consume.

But seemingly this dyestuff monopoly, with its millions of capital and with its rapidly growing domestic and foreign business as well, has hypnotized Senators and even secured the support of Democratic Senators for a provision which I deem to be one of the most infamous provisions ever inserted in a so-called protective tariff bill,

I do not believe it is possible that, when the final vote comes on this measure, Senators will deliberately give their support to the maintenance of a monopoly which has already become powerful enough to meet the competition of the world in other lands to the extent, as I have said, of $17,000,000 worth of American dye products during the last eight months. sume that in the course of a year it will run to $25,000,000, for it is growing year by year. In the corresponding eight months of last year the American dyestuff foreign trade was only $15,000,000. The previous year it was $14,000,000; and it is growing more rapidly, possibly, than any other American industry in the United States, because most of our foreign trade is known to be on the decline at the present time.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield the floor.

Mr. KNOX. I only wanted to observe that there is something entirely familiar in these lamentations of the Senator from Nebraska about the probability of the German monopoly in the most dangerous munitions that have ever been manufactured being interfered with by this bill. We remember that during the war, when the Germans had a monopoly of munitions and the Allies could not obtain munitions to fight the Huns the Senator from Nebraska advocated a bill to prevent the people of the United States from shipping munitions to the French and to the English and to the Italians, who were engaged in a death struggle with Germany for the preservation of civilization.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time for debate on the bill and amendments has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Freling-HUYSEN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves to strike out Title V.

Mr. WOLCOTT. A point of order, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware will state his point of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood that Title V was adopted in Committee of the Whole, and that when the bill came into the Senate all the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have not yet been concurred in. The question now is on concurring in the committee amend-

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think that my motion was a little broader than was necessary. I move to strike out sub-division A of section 501, under Title V of the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator withdraws his former motion and now moves to strike out subdivision A of section 501 of Title V, on page 33. question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken. Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] has not voted, and, as I have a general pair with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Making the same announcement of my pair, Mr. EDGE. and being unable to secure a transfer, I wish it to be recorded that if permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] if present would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. PÉNROSE. I observe that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] has entered the Chamber. So I will permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced-yeas 25, nays 63, as follows:

So Mr. King's amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking out Titles II, III, and IV, the antidumping provision and the valuation provision. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment be stated. There is so much confusion in the Chamber we could not hear the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The Assistant Secretary. From the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole the Senator from North Carolina moves to strike out all of Titles II, III, and IV.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I wish to state that if permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before of my pair and its transfer, I vote nay.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Weller] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. On this question the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], if present and not paired, would

So Mr. Simmons's amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole,

The amendment was concurred in,

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 3, line 24, after the word "pound," it is proposed to insert the following:

Except such wools as were purchased abroad prior to April 1, 1921, by individuals, firms, or corporations here, for importation into the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and is still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the amendment be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read a third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] is necessarily detained from the Cham-I am informed that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Page]. If he were present, the senior Senator from Alabama would vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. Making the same announcement as previously, that I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen], and not being able to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced-yeas 63, nays 28, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, and that the Chair appoint five conferees on the part of the Senate, that being the usual number in the case of revenue legislation.

Page

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. Penbose, Mr. McCumber, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Simmons, and

Mr. Williams conferees on the part of the Senate. Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, during the general discussion of the bill which has just been passed there was practically no reference to that provision of the bill which relates to dyestuffs. There was no discussion to-day of that question until a very short time before the time limitation upon debate prescribed in the unanimous-consent agreement expired. Three times, I believe, after that discussion had been projected I attempted to get recognition for the purpose of answering some of the statements which were made with regard to this provision of the bill, but without success; and before I could get recognition the hour for voting without further discussion had arrived. I was thus precluded from making any reply to these statements and arguments.

I am not going to make a speech, Mr. President; I am simply going to make a statement. I will on some other occasion

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has said that because there were large exportations of certain characters of dyes that are produced in this country there was, therefore, a great trust. I do not know myself whether there is any trust with respect to those particular dyes or not; but I do know that long before the act with reference to dyestuffs which was passed during the war there was an investigation into this subject, and it was then developed in that inquiry that there were certain kinds of dyes that had long been produced in this country; that long before that time that particular class of dyes were produced in this country largely in excess of the American demand, and there were and had been for some time heavy exportations of that character of dyes. I presume that that situation exists to-day. But, Mr. President, while before the war we were producing in this country certain kinds of dyes in quantities in excess of our demands, we were making only a very small part of the dye colors which were then and are now used in this country. We were not producing at all by far the greater part of the colors that were in common use in this country; and we were not prepared to produce and never had produced those by-products of the dye industry which were shown to be so essential in times of war for the defense of the country. Germany had an almost absolute monopoly of the production of these colors and these by-products.

In that situation, upon the recommendation and request of Woodrow Wilson, then President of the United States, we were called upon to act, by adopting the law the operation of which this provision extends for six months. The case presented itself to us not as a tariff question at all, but as a question of national preparedness and national defense; and without party divisions in this Chamber or in Congress we enacted the legislation which it is now claimed built up a trust which that enactment subsidizes. If we had not enacted that legislation, in my opinion, it is doubtful if we could have won the war.

It is a mistake to suppose that this provision of the bill changes that law. It does not. Not one line or one syllable is stricken out of or added to the Democratic enactment, then adopted for the national defense and imperatively demanded by the necessities and emergencies of that situation. After the war closed the President recommended as a peace emergency precaution further legislation along the same lines as a means of developing and strengthening this essential industry. reason of the passage of the Knox joint resolution establishing peace between this country and Germany that enactment, which was a war measure, would, under the terms of its creation, become inoperative upon conclusion of peace. is proposed here not to change that law, but simply to lodge in the Secretary of the Treasury the powers that we then placed in the War Trade Board and continue for six months longer the power and function that were created and invested in that board under this Democratic law. The purpose in both cases is to safeguard the national defense by insuring adequate and full preparedness.

Mr. President, I think it is the sense of this country that we have not yet reached that point in the development of the dye industry in this country where it is able adequately to meet the requirements of preparedness in case of war; so that, as I regard it and as I think it ought to be regarded, this is a mere extension of a provision necessary to the national defense until we can have reasonable time to develop that industry to the point of making it adequate to supply our demands in case of hostilities between this country and some other country in the world. It is important that we are prepared for all eventualities and that we propose to continue that state of preparedness.

It is not now, as it was not when we enacted it, a question of tariff. It is a question of national preparedness and national defense

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess my regret at the vehement and passionate speech just submitted by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons]. I take issue with some of his positions. I shall not take the time of the Senate now in the effort to controvert them, but if opportunity affords I shall reply to the Senator from North Carolina and those who have advocated what I conceive to be a dangerous and most extraordinary provision in this bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 52) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arrears for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, being the naval appropriation

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Many Senators have routine business that they desire to present to the Senate, and I yield for that purpose.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented petitions of the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Columbus, and sundry citizens of Chardon, both in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of the so-called Volstead supplemental prohibition enforcement bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions unanimously adopted at the National Milk Marketing Conference, called by the American Farm Bureau Federation, in Chicago, Ill., May 3 and 4, 1921, favoring the enactment of legislation to foster a more extensive organization of dairy farmers in cooperative marketing associations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the National Union of the Farmers' Union of America at a meeting held in Washington, D. C., April 20, 1921, favoring the enactment of legislation to make Liberty bonds United States currency without interest and acceptable in payment of debts, so as to restore confidence, stimulate production and industry, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Union of Farmers' Union of America at a meeting held in Washington, D. C. April 20, 1921, favoring certain amendments to the Federal reserve act, in the interest of agricultural producers, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the Kansas State Branch, National Association of Post Office Clerks, of Wichita, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide adequate compensation for postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post

He also presented memorials of Wichita Lodge, No. 571, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Wichita, and sundry citizens of Rossville and St. Marys, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation repealing the excess profits tax law and substituting therefor a sales or turn-over tax; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PHIPPS, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 40) thereon.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1360) authorizing the award which was referred the bill (S. 1800) authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 41) thereon.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4586) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 42) thereon.

Mr. ERNST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1060) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 43) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1719) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," approved December 23, 1913, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 1720) to authorize the President to reappoint in the Navy former officers of the Regular Navy who resigned subsequent to November 11, 1918; to the Committee on Naval

A bill (S. 1721) to vest title to school lands in the State in which the lands are situated if a proceeding is not instituted before the Department of the Interior within 12 years after the State is admitted to the Union, or within 12 years after the survey of the school land sections was approved, to determine whether such lands were of known mineral character; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McCORMICK:

A bill (S. 1722) to amend chapter 231, known as the Judicial Code. act of March 3, 1911, volume 36, United States Statutes at Large, section 79, page 1110; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION RILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for encouragement of the breeding of riding horses suitable for the Army, including cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry, and for the purchase of animals for breeding purposes and their maintenance from $150,000 to $250,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $281,345 for central heating and power plant, quarters for commissioned officers and warrant officers, remodeling and relocating certain buildings, providing facilities for small boats, filling and grading and retaining walls, and purchase of additional necessary land at the Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PORTRAIT OF GEN. ANDREW JACKSON.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 75), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Library Committee of the United States Senate be authorized to purchase, if they can find one suitable, or to contract for the painting of, a portrait of Gen. Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, and seventh President of the United States, to be hung in the Senate corridors or other appropriate place, along with the portraits of Washington and other Presidents of the United States, to be paid for out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs,

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the President's order and statement with regard to the appointment of postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

"When a vacancy exists or hereafter occurs in the position of postmaster at an office of the first, second, or third class, if such vacancy is not filled by nomination of some person within the competitive classified civil service who has the required qualifications, then the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated the said commission shall certify the results thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of one of the highest three qualified eligibles for appointment to fill such vacancy unless it is established that the character or residence of any such applicant disqualifies him for appointment: Provided, That at the expiration of the term of any person appointed to such position through examination before the Civil Service Commission, the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, submit the name of such person to the President for renomination without further examination.

No person who has passed his 65th birthday, or who has not actually resided within the delivery of such office for two years next preceding such vacancy, shall be given the examination herein provided for.

"If, under this order, it is desired to make nomination for any office of a person in the competitive classified service, such person must first be found by the Civil Service Commission to meet the minimum requirements for the office.

" May 10, 1921."

STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT ISSUED TO-DAY.

"There are more than 400,000 men and women participating in governmental work who are in classified service. All of these are under the permanent provisions of the civil service law and rules.

"These permanent rules provide for the certification of the highest three eligibles, from which list of three each necessary appointment is made. The successful operation of the principles of civil service law has demonstrated the wisdom of this pro-This leaves in the appointing power, who has the ultimate responsibility for efficient administration, the necessary constitutional right of choice. This right of selection is the kind of responsibility which can not legally be and is not abridged by act of Congress, and is in exact harmony with the spirit of the civil-service principle.

"There are 52,332 postmasters. Of these, 39,433 are in the fourth class, and are now under such civil service laws and regulations as bring them within the privileges and conditions

"Of the remaining 12,899 post offices, 700 are first class, 2,617 are second class, and 9,582 are third class. Obviously these offices are business agencies of the Government in legal purpose and should become so in fact. The only certain ultimate way to bring this about is to classify first, second, and third class postmasters. This will require an act of Congress. It is a step forward, measured by the requirements of progress, and is one which I hope will be made. Under existing laws the Executive has no power to require that these offices be placed in the classified service.

"Moving in that direction, however, the Executive order issued to-day provides that if any such vacancy is not filled by nomination for promotion of one from within the competitive classified civil service, then an open competitive examination shall be held and the appointment shall be made from one of the highest three eligibles, as required now by law in the classi-

"This order, which is for our own guidance in making these appointments, will bring an operation squaring with the requirements of any probable future legislation.

"Under this order the kind of test and plan of investigation and examination which shall be provided for shall be approved by the President, and shall be based on the applicant's business training, experience, fitness, organizing and executive ability, and general qualifications for an efficient administration, and shall in no sense be a cloistered, scholastic examination which might result in a high grade in theory, but not a guaranty of efficiency in fact.

"This order applies to all present incumbents of post offices whose terms have expired, and will apply to all other incumbents as their present terms expire."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has just asked and secured unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the new order touching the appointment of postmasters. I ask in connection with that, following that order as printed in the RECORD, that the original order of President Wilson, with his proclamation, be also included in the RECORD,

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDERS BY PRESIDENT WILSON RELATING TO THE APPOINT-MENT OF POSTMASTERS.

" MARCH 31, 1917.

"Hereafter when a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster of any office of the first, second, or third class as the result of death, resignation, removal, or, on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, approved by the Postmaster General, to the effect that the efficiency or need of the service requires that a change shall be made, the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated, the said commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President the name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy unless it is established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualifies him for appointment. No person who has passed his sixty-fifth birthday shall be given the examination herein provided for.

"APRIL 13, 1920.

"The veteran preference statutes shall apply in the selection of persons for appointment as postmaster at offices of the first, second, and third classes. When the highest eligible certified to the Postmaster General by the Civil Service Commission is not a veteran, but a veteran is among those certified as eligible, the Postmaster General may submit to the President for nomination the name of either the highest eligible or the veteran obtaining the highest eligible rating as the best interests of the service may require.

" Остовек 8, 1920.

"The Executive order of March 31, 1917, relating to post offices of the first, second, and third classes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter when a vacancy occurs in the position of postmaster of any office of the first, second, or third class as the result of death, resignation, removal, or, on the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General, approved by the Postmaster General, to the effect that the efficiency or need of the service requires that a change shall be made, if such vacancy is not filled by nomination of some person within the competitive classified civil service, who has the required qualifications, then the Postmaster General shall certify the fact to the Civil Service Commission, which shall forthwith hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancy, and when such examination has been held and the papers in connection therewith have been rated, the said commission shall certify the result thereof to the Postmaster General, who shall submit to the President he name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment to fill such vacancy, unless it is established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualifies him for appointment. No person who has passed his sixty-fifth birthday or who has not actually resided within the delivery of such office for two years next preceding such vacancy shall be given the examination herein provided for."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it would be interesting, if the

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it would be interesting, if the figures were available, for the Senator from Mississippi to ask to have printed in the Record a list of the Democrats appointed as postmasters in the United States prior to the Wilson civilservice order, and the number of Republicans decapitated-to use a current political phrase—in the middle of their tenure of office prior to the Wilson civil-service order.

Mr. HARRISON. I should have no objection to that, provided there should be put in also a list of the Democrats who are going to be decapitated now by the new order.

Mr. PENROSE. I know of none that are threatened with decapitation except for incredible inefficiency.

Mr. KING. While the Senator is suggesting that, I think he should put in the RECORD the number of Republicans who have been certified during the past year by the Civil Service Commission, particularly in the Senator's own State; because, from my observations, there have been more Republican postmasters appointed recently than there have been Democratic postmasters. Mr. PENROSE. I am very glad to know it.

ADDRESS BY HON. HOMER S. CUMMINGS.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record an address made by Hon. Homer S. Cummings at a banquet given in Pittsburgh, Pa., on April 11.

Mr. CURTIS. I am obliged to object to that unless it goes to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not detain the Senate by reading it this afternoon.

BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, owing to the increase in membership, there is a Republican vacancy existing upon the Committee on Banking and Currency. In order to fill that vacancy I move the adoption of the following order.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the Senator from California, Mr. Shortridge, be assigned to service on the Committee on Banking and Currency to fill an existing vacancy.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I move that the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, be printed showing the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM H. FRANKHAUSER.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM H. FRANKHAUSER, late a Representative from the State of Michigan, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I ask that the resolutions of the House be laid before the Senate

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM H. FRANKHAUSER, a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now address.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. President, I submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 76) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM H. FRANKHAUSER, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 12, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 11, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, wonderful and marvelous are Thy works and in our limitations we seek some new impulse which is a revelation of Thyself. We bless Thee for this day's privilege. Comfort the family of him who has fallen, and above the turbulent seas of their lives may they hear the Divine voice saying, Peace, be still. Lo, it is I, be not afraid. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL. Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. J. Res. 52. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arrears for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwith-standing the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13,

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 546. An act making an appropriation to pay the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid, at the request of the President, in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast during the Civil War, in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims and Senate Report No. 764, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session; to the Committee on War Claims.

FUTURE TRADING.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5676, and pending that I desire to see if arrangement can be made as to limitation of time for general debate.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. How much time does the gentleman

Mr. HAUGEN. The suggestion is that the time be limited to three hours, if agreeable to that side, to be equally divided between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. ASWELL. May I ask if the debate will be confined to the subject matter of the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am willing to include that in my request.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to include as part of his request that debate be confined to Mr. HAUGEN. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not include it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is not part of the request, but if it is desirable that could be done.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. There is no desire

Mr. HAUGEN. In conferring with Members it seems to be the opinion that we should follow the usual rule and that general debate be not entirely confined to the subject matter.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. HAUGEN. Now, as to the time?

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Three hours is entirely satisfactory to this side, one-half to be in the control of this side.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to three hours, half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] and half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey]. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, as chairman of the committee, if he would object to cotton being placed in this bill as well as grain?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5676, with Mr. Madden in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole

House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5676, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, ought not the bill to be read? The CHAIRMAN. Unless somebody asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading.

Mr. GARNER. Nobody has asked unanimous consent as yet. Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be notified at the end of 20 minutes. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not want to take too much of the time of the committee in the discussion of this bill, because I realize now that the bill has many friends, and I do not care to take any chances on disturbing that situation. This is an old subject in the American Congress. I can remember when an illustrious predecessor of mine, Jerry Simpson, promised the people of my congressional district in 1896 that if he was elected to the Congress he would do away by law with all gambling in grain futures, and he said that the only reason that evil had not been cured long before was that Members came up here and were influenced by the grain exchanges. Mr. Simpson was a man of ability, a man of integrity, a man absolutely in sympathy with the people of his district, who were grain producers. He came here, and after returning home and there was not any legislation on the subject he was approached one day by a very good friend, who said, "Jerry, what happened; did the grain exchanges get to you?" He said, "No; I found out a whole lot of things about the grain market I did not know when I was making those speeches before," Subsequent to that time another illustrious Kansan introduced a measure, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for the purpose of regulating the grain exchanges, which were at that time, as at all times since, recognized in Kansas and in the grain sections as operating the grain exchanges as a detriment to the producer of grain, and he came near getting the legislation, but all the time he was confronted with this proposition, that it was a dangerous subject to legislate on, because no one wanted to destroy what was then and is now known as legitimate hedging in grain dealing, and the culmination of that whole proposition was this, that boards of trade came here to the hearings, gave their version of the thing, and finally agreed to eliminate all the evils from the grain exchanges, and the legislation was abandoned. There was some merit in the abandonment of it, because it is said to be a dangerous thing to legislate on. The facts are that it will absolutely prove fatal to the producers of the country to destroy their only market facilities, while on the other hand there are the radicals on one side, who say that this bill will destroy it if you pass it, so there has been naturally some hesitancy about passing legislation along this line

During the war the trading in futures in grain was prohibited by law, or by an arm of the Government created by law, and there was a time between the guaranteed price of wheat and the time that the boards of trade resumed trading in futures that has enlightened the American people considerably upon the necessity of gambling in food products. I refer now to the time between last May and last August. There was not any trading in grain futures during that time; there was not any gambling in grain, and the market, while there were changes in the price, was what might be called a stable one. very day that the grain exchanges began to operate what they called the future market and began to gamble in grain, that day the fluctuations were manifest, and from that time on until to-day there probably never was in the history of our country a time when there was the difference between the price of the farmers' product and the price of the consumers' product. There never was a time when there was more vicious fluctuations in the market.

be ruinous to the market. And it was the old customary fight like we have had from grain exchanges and the packers for more than 25 years in this country. But the condition was so manifest to every producer in the country that the people were not satisfied to take that version of it. A man hauls in a load of wheat, after every bushel of this year's supply had been thrashed, and sells it one day, at 60 pounds weight to the bushel, for so much money, and then bringing in a load the next day he is informed by his buyer that he can not have by 20 cents what he received the day before. Then bringing in a load a week later, the market probably will be back, and not what it was before. There has been no change in the demand for wheat, no change in the visible supply of wheat, nothing influencing it or causing that fluctuation, but the pure, unadulterated, unmitigated gambling in the product. Still in the face of that there were those who contend that that was necessary in order to stabilize the market, when, in fact, there was not any stable market.

I introduced a bill again on the first day of this session of Congress, and we began hearing witnesses favorable to legislation along this line. Much to our surprise-and I say this, I think, for every member of the Committee on Agriculture-the grain exchanges took an entirely different view of the matter than what they had taken in December. Now, the bill has been changed some, but there are no changes in it that would warrant a change in the grain exchanges. I provided in the first bill that the hedge should be protected by giving permission to deal in futures of three times the quantity of grain actually handled in a year. In the present bill we get at the manipulation in a different way, but just as effectively. And I was convinced that the first proposition was the wrong way to reach it, because the testimony disclosed that there was a possibility, even under that measure, of manipulation of what is known as the corner. I am frank to say to this committee that when the representative of the first grain exchange that said that that bill was constructive left the committee with this remark, "I hope you will pass effective legislation on this subject during the Congress," it rather frightened me. I thought there was something wrong. I asked why this change of front. He said, "I will tell you. We have promised you repeatedly that we would eliminate the evils occurring in the grain exchanges"some of these evils I will discuss a little later-" we get home and some of us eliminate the evil, but some little exchange will not, and we eventually have to come back to that evil in order to protect our own exchange."

But the people are so awake to these evils that the State legislatures are beginning to pass laws. The Minnesota Legislature passed a law this winter, and the intention of the author of it was to absolutely prohibit all dealing in futures. The law was revised in section 1. At the end of a hard fight up there some men who thought the hedge could not be eliminated from the trade got what they called section 3 in the law, and you will find it in the hearings, in a copy of the bill, and which practically destroys the law. However, in the State law no man on either end of the proposition of grain would feel safe to do business in the State of Minnesota. He would not know, until there was a construction of that law by some court, as to whether he was an outlaw or not. And the great State of

Illinois

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TINCHER, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. YOUNG. How would that law be affected by the one you are proposing to pass at this time?

Mr. TINCHER. My best information is that the trade is not affected by reason of what is called section 3, which was intended by the parties who substituted it in the bill to kill it. But the proposition is here, that they want legislation, and if we pass the Federal statute it would have a tendency to settle that thing and create uniformity.

I started to say that in Illinois there are some bills pending, and I am not going to take the time to read them to the committee here. There are a number of briefs prepared in connection with those bills. The grain exchanges asked for delay in our hearings, saying that they had to go to the Illinois Legislature. But we told them to come here, and so they got a delay out there and came and gave their version of the matter before our committee. I received yesterday a brief of the bills that are pending in the Illinois Legislature, and I find that there is an element in that great State that thinks it should destroy the hedge, and the bills that are pending there would have that

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Gladly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am opposed to gambling in cotton futures. The gentleman does not represent a cotton country, but I my State was one of the pioneers in cutting the bucket shops out of it. Does the gentleman object to striking out the word "grain" and inserting "agricultural products," so that cotton can be introduced?

Mr. TINCHER. When I first introduced the bill I had the word "cotton" in it-

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to my friend that I wish he had kept it in there.

Mr. TINCHER. I will tell you why I did not. It was not because of any disrespect I had for cotton. I put it in there, thinking that the exchanges were operated along the same lines, but after talking with two or three members of the Committee on Agriculture from the cotton-growing section I changed my mind. That word "cotton" caused us more trouble than all the rest; it sounded like a bumblebee. Before I got through the first hearings on the proposition I found that there was not any unanimity among the men who represent the cotton growers. No two of them figured alike on regulating the cetton exchanges.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman right there?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I want to ask if the gentleman's investigation led him or his committee to any conclusion touching cotton, and whether he investigated the matter? Was any light thrown upon the subject of the cotton exchanges as distinguished from the grain exchange? I ask the question because, like the gentleman who rises at my left [Mr. Hudspeth], I am intensely interested in the cotton question. To me it is much more important than the bumblebee. I do not doubt that it buzzes, but I would like to know if the investigation made by the gentleman threw any light on that question.

Mr. TINCHER. I will say that in the first hearing, although I have no personal knowledge of the cotton industry, so far as I am concerned, I was still of the opinion that the word "cotton" should be in the bill. There is an admitted difference of opinion among Members of Congress here from the cotton-growing section as to the effect it would have.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to ask my friend from Kansas a question. I was present at some of the hearings before the committee last session. It is a question regarding the bill which, I think, was introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Caraway]. I want to ask the gentleman, from the telegrams he saw there from the real planters in Texas, what is his conclusion as to the unanimity of the farmers in Texas regarding the prohibiting of gambling in futures in cotton? I think they were all handed to the gentleman.

Mr. TINCHER. The telegrams, I think, wanted us to prehibit the gambling in futures of cotton. That was the bill of Mr. Caraway, now Senator. He did not handle the situation exactly as I have. He did not believe in regulating the cotton Senator Caraway's contention was that the cotton trade did not need the cotton exchange, and that it should be abolished. I did not figure that it was up to me to quarrel with the Congressmen from the cotton-growing section, and so, in order to get rid of a possible quarrel, I left it out of the bill and said to the committee very frankly that if it went in there it must come from the cotton producers and not from the men who grow wheat. I do not know the cotton trade, and I was not competent even to judge of the evidence on the cotton proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. Mr. BLANTON. Of course, all of us are interested in the grain question with the gentleman, I take it. But if we help the gentleman pass his grain bill, I do not think he will object to passing a proper regulatory measure respecting cotton.

Mr. TINCHER. I will be glad to help, and this has been my attitude on the Committee on Agriculture since I have been on it. Always I have said to the men who represent the cottonon it. Always I have said to the men was represent the cotton-growing districts on the Committee on Agriculture, "I am ready to cooperate with you," because I understood that it was an evil of the same sort that hung over the heads of producers in my country. I said, "I am with you."

Mr. HUDSPETH. I think any amendment in regard to cotton would be subject to a point of order. Would the gentleman insist on the point of order to an amendment including cotton in his bill?

Mr. TINCHER. I would say to the gentleman this, that if an amendment to this bill including cotton means that my bill can not have the one-half or one-third of the votes over here, I would want to make the point of order against it. If the men representing the cotton-producing sections of the country want cotton included, I will be glad to put it in, but I do not want wheat to get under cotton and get run over and ground up. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman is candid.

Mr. TINCHER. As is stated in the report on the bill, I do not contend for the bill that it will absolutely stop grain speculation or that it will stop trading in futures, and I do not want it to, because there is no other available marketing place for the grain. But we do claim for this bill that it will stop the pure, unadulterated gambling in grain, such as "privileges," "bids," "puts" and "calls," "indemnities," and "ups and downs," which have no connection with the grain itself, but which is pure gambling, and amounts to 20 per cent of the actual trading, and has a tendency to cause a manipulation of the market, which is in every instance against the producer and against the consumer, and to the profit of the pure gambler between.

We claim that section 4 of the bill, placing the grain exchanges under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, will prove a valuable feature. I want to say to you that I have examined into it carefully, and it has this effect: Before a grain exchange can be designated as a marketing place it must show the Secretary of Agriculture that it is operated under certain rules and regulations; and, to make a long story short, those rules and regulations

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. I will yield myself five minutes more.

Those rules and regulations must be such as will prevent the manipulation of the market. An examination of the bill by anyone will disclose the fact that he has power to make those rules in that direction,

There is another paragraph in this bill that I want to mention, and then, as I stated before, I will conclude before I have got some one started against the bill. [Laughter.] That is the provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to compel the grain exchanges to permit the cooperative associations to have membership on the grain exchanges. That was not my idea originally. I do not want to steal it from anyone.

Mr. Steenerson and several other Members of Congress had bills pending covering that proposition, and several of the States have passed laws covering that proposition, and when we had before our committee the present Secretary of Agricultureand he is a man who has given this subject great study for many years-it was his opinion that while passing this legislation we should incorporate that feature in it. I want to say that our committee had by unanimous vote voted out at the last session of Congress Mr. Steenerson's bill covering that point, and it was his opinion that we should take it; so we have stolen Mr. Steenerson's bill and put it in here in one short paragraph.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman used the word "gambling" in the beginning of his statement. Does the gentleman contend that every sale of grain for future delivery is gambling?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman tell us what legitimate trading there is on these exchanges and boards of trade?

Mr. TINCHER. A reading of the bill will convince the gen-tleman that we are permitting the sale of grain for future delivery, the sale of futures, so called, and we are permitting what is known as the legitimate trading in wheat. Under section 3 we are prohibiting that class of trade which can be nothing else than pure, unadulterated gambling.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My main purpose is to make it clear, and I think it has not been made clear, that the gentleman does not classify all trading in futures on the boards of trade and exchanges as gambling.

Mr. TINCHER. I certainly do not classify it all as gambling, and have not in this bill. It is a technical question as to where legitimate trading ceases and gambling begins, and I do not propose to go into that technical discussion.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TINCHER. I will yield first to the

I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie].

Mr. McKENZIE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if it is the hope of the proponents of this bill that it will tend to stabilize the price of wheat when it is up and prevent the forcing of it down by speculation?

Mr. TINCHER. That is it, absolutely. For instance, after every bushel of wheat in the world is thrashed, after the world's demand for wheat is known, after the world's supply is known, there is no legitimate excuse for putting down the price of every bushel of wheat in the United States 20 cents on Monday and then gradually bringing it back to its original price by Wednesday or Thursday of the following week. That is caused now by gambling, and it is the contention of the proponents of this bill that to do away with it will stabilize the market.

Mr. McKENZIE. If that is true, I want to ask the gentleman, if the power to deal on the boards of trade in the manner that is now permitted will enable the dealers to force the market down 20 cents, would not that same law of trade permit the same men to force it up 20 cents? In other words, can you get rid of doing the one thing without destroying both?

Mr. TINCHER. Let me say to my friend that the fluctua-tion in the product produced in this way always operates against the producer. Now, I wish the gentleman would take the time to-night to read the 1,070 pages of testimony here, which will absolutely prove that fact, and you will not find any testimony to contradict any part of it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will be satisfied if I may ask one more question. My understanding of this bill is that its purpose is to make it possible for the producer of grain to get a better price for his product, and that it is not the purpose of this bill simply to abolish gambling on account of its immorality or to assume the character of an agent of morality.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman is entirely correct. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TINCHER. I will take two minutes more.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman says the purpose of this bill is, if the price of grain is high, to stabilize it so that it will remain high. Suppose the price of grain is low.

Will this bill stabilize it to keep it low?

Mr. TINCHER. I did not say that if the price of grain was high it was a bill to keep the price high or that this would keep it high. Here is what I said, and I repeat it. I said when the world's supply of grain is known, when the world's demand for grain is known, the fluctuations from one week to another against the producer of 20 or 30 cents a bushel by the gambling in grain can not be defended, and that this bill is a step, at least, toward curing that evil, because it does eliminate a branch of the trade that is nothing else in the world except gambling.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield fur-

Mr. TINCHER. I have a great many demands for time.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Right along that line.

Mr. TINCHER. All right.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's purpose, but because the gentleman is so well posted on this subject I am asking for information. What the gentleman is really trying to do, is it not, is to remove the artificial fluctuations and allow supply and demand really to control?

Mr. TINCHER. That is entirely correct.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. In view of the gentleman's investigation, does he think that this bill will measurably do that thing:

Mr. TINCHER. That is my sincere opinion. [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

Mr. TINCHER. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

Mr. JONES of Texas, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, while the grain exchanges of the United States may have performed some useful functions, at the same time there have grown up in connection with these exchanges certain abuses that have been detrimental both to the producers and the consumers. Under our present system of distribution these exchanges provide a ready market. At the same time the wild and continuous gambling that has taken place on them has more than counteracted the good which they have performed, has caused fluctuations in the market, and been detrimental to everyone who has any interest in the food supply of this country. To present a bill which would eliminate the evil features has been a difficult problem. I believe the bill which has been presented at least tends to accomplish this purpose.

I believe that in time a new system will grow up which will make the exchanges as they are conducted at present wholly unnecessary. An effort is now being made through a system of cooperative marketing to secure a substitute for the system

The grain production of this country is seasonable and the demand and need for it is regular and continuous. In other words, most of the grain is produced at a certain season of the year, while the consumptive demand lasts throughout the year. Under the present system of selling the legitimate exchange is considered by many to be beneficial. In other words, it is contended that if a local buyer wishes to buy 20,000 bushels of wheat from the producer it would require some $30,000 to handle the deal. This amount the local buyer in many cases, perhaps in most cases, does not possess. For various reasons it may be several days, several weeks, and in some instances several months before he can secure final delivery of wheat to the point of destination. The producer wants and needs his money now. The local bank can not afford to let the buyer have the money with which to buy the wheat, because if the price of wheat is greatly reduced the bank would lose money. Therefore the local buyer buys the 20,000 bushels of wheat, paying $1.50 per bushel for it, and immediately sells a similar amount on the exchange for delivery at a future day at $1.55 per bushel, thus eliminates most of the speculative features of handling the wheat in so far as he is concerned. In other words, if wheat goes up he loses on one contract and gains on the other. If wheat goes down the operation is just the reverse. So that whichever way the market turns he has made approximately 5 cents per bushel, less the expense of handling. It is a form of By having the two contracts the bank can afford to let him have the money with which to buy the wheat, and the deal can be financed. This is what is called hedging.

Under the bill as prepared the Secretary of Agriculture is given supervision over all contracts that take place in the mar-These contracts must be kept in writing. Heretofore the exchanges have kept no written records, so that there is no way of telling how much they have bought and sold on the market.

Gambling on such a gigantic scale, of course, should be abolished and the evils of the exchanges thus eliminated. One great problem in this country is that of distribution. We have, in a large measure, mastered the machinery of production; but in the peculiar economy of this Government the rights of the producers have been neglected. They have been unorganized. They have been forced to sell their produce at a price which they did not name and to buy what they used at a price that is always named. I hope that the passage of this bill will result in bettering their conditions and at the same time operate as a benefit rather than as a detriment to the final and ultimate

This bill is also intended to make the cornering of the market through manipulation impossible. This is very desirable. And if anyone on this floor can suggest an amendment which will strengthen the bill in this respect, I shall be glad to support it. I would like to see gambling in farmers' products abolished

This bill does not go as far as I would like to have it go, but is a step forward.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does my colleague think the cotton exchanges are a benefit to the producer of cotton?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not think the cotton exchanges are. However, I believe that you would need some system of furnishing information to take their places. I want to say in connection with the cotton question which my friend raises here that I believe a bill should be drafted relative to the cotton exchanges. However, the cotton exchanges are wholly dissimilar to the grain exchanges. The system of handing them is dif-

I want to say to my friend that I have never thought that pure gambling, where no delivery is contemplated, is necessary to a market for agricultural products. I want to see it abolished altogether.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. JONES of Texas. When I have finished this statement I will be delighted to do so. Here is one difference: Cotton is identified. You handle a specific bale of cotton. It is usually sold by sample. Wheat is standardized, and when a bushel of wheat goes into a bin you never again see that specific bushel of wheat. You simply sell so many bushels of wheat. The system of selling is altogether dissimilar. The grades and types are different. If some one who wants the cotton exchanges regulated along these lines will introduce a bill, I am sure the committee will be glad to pass it. They seem perfectly willing to do so.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. ASWELL,

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will, Mr. ASWELL. Does the gentleman know that this bill seeks to do for the grain exchanges what is already existing law in reference to cotton exchanges?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It is along similar lines, but you could not well make the same bill apply to the grain exchange as to the cotton exchange; the provisions would need to be different in order to be effective. If you want cotton regulated, it ought reduce the transactions 15 to 20 per cent?

to be a separate bill. You can not put in this bill the cotton situation without altering the provisions in this bill.

However, it is generally agreed that the man who deals in "puts," "calls," and "indemnities" contributes nothing to the furnishing of a market for actual grain, while the man who attempts to manipulate the market is a positive detriment to everyone concerned. This bill abolishes puts, calls, and indemnities absolutely, and undertakes to provide machinery whereby through a supervision of the Department of Agriculture manipulation of the market may be abolished or at least reduced to a minimum,

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. The milk of the coconut is in section 3 of Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; a part of it.

Mr. LAYTON. And the particular milk here are the words "privileges," "bids," "offers," "puts and calls," "indemnities," or "ups and downs." What are they?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I was intending to come to that, but I will answer it now. A "put" is simply this—a man to-day pays, say, $5 for the privilege of buying wheat at any time before the market closes to-morrow at $1.50 per bushel. He thinks that wheat is going up. If to-morrow it goes up to $1.60, he takes down the 10 cents. If wheat goes down, he loses $5 per thousand. He does not buy wheat. He simply buys the privilege of buying wheat on certain terms and within a limited time. The "call" is just the reverse. He thinks wheat is going down and he pays $5 for the privilege of selling at a specified price before the market closes to-morrow, say, at $1.50. If wheat goes down, he demands the execution of the contract and takes down his margin.

In other words, these men simply stand in the pit and toss contracts for wheat back and forth without even contemplating the delivery of wheat. And that causes a great many slight fluctuations of the price of wheat, and they play upon these price fluctuations and are interested in making wheat fluctuate rather than remain steady. These men gamble on the bread supply of the Nation. They are useless parasites. They do not produce wheat. They do not buy actual wheat and they do not sell actual wheat,

Mr. LAYTON. That is interesting; but what of the rest of

Mr. JONES of Texas. The others are expressions covering the same thing. "Indemnity" is a synonym for "put" or call." They are terms protecting these same transactions.

I will state that there is a market system and a market place. There are men who want to bid or gamble on the temporary fluctuations of that market. They go in and toss contracts back and forth on the market on the fluctuation. The trouble with these people is that they are interested in making the market fluctuate. They perform no useful function for the producer or the consumer. Their whole interest is to maintain not a steady and normal market but their interest is in making it fluctuate, and for that reason I think it is wise that they should be absolutely barred. This bill at least accomplishes that much.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. Mr. WILSON. I understand that the puts and calls proposition—one is a speculator and the other is a broker?
Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; usually that is true.

Mr. WILSON. Does the gentleman know of any exchange that does not permit transactions of that character?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not.

Mr. WILSON. What position did the representatives of the exchanges who appeared before the committee take in relation to abolishing the ups and downs, puts and calls?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Some of them were willing to have them abolished, but most of them were not, on account of the revenue which the exchanges derive therefrom. Some of them said they were willing to have them abolished in view of the demand for legislation.

Mr. LAYTON. One more question, and then I am through. Mr. JONES of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman,

Mr. LAYTON. If this bill is passed, they could not possibly make me pay a 20-cent tax if I wanted to sell 1,000 bushels of my own wheat?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, no, no; that is provided for in the

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. Now, my objection to the put and call proposition is that these men are interested in causing the market to fluctuate. They live off of this business. In other words, they have the same relation to society and to the wheat business and to the public that the flea does to the dogthey live off the dog.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Just what does the bill propose to do?

Mr. JONES of Texas. To do away with puts and calls by taxing them out of business and to regulate the markets by requiring a written record of every transaction that takes place, so that it will be subject to the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall have the right, if the law is violated, to withdraw from that exchange its designation as a board of trade, and consequently its right to do business. In this way the Secretary will be in a position to prevent manipulation or cornering the market.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Am I correct in assuming that the bill contemplates that the speculative market shall be maintained under the supervision and sanction of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under the conditions laid down in the bill, yes; but their activities will be very much restricted, and manipulation abolished.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Section 2 is a mere definition, and section 3 simply describes as illustrative of the transactions we wish to forbid certain special transactions, and the real heart of the bill is in section 4.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In a large measure that is true, but I think one of the strong parts is in section 3, because I think when you do away with the power of the gambler who performs no useful function you have done a good deal.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Section 3 would be ineffective because it is simply illustrative, except for the provisions of section 4.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Section 3 stands absolutely alone and taxes at 20 cents a bushel every contract that comes under the nature of a put and call; in other words, pure gambling transactions on the fluctuation of the market. It puts them out of commission and without regard to section 4.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And without regard to section 3 you would have section 4 speaking deliberately on future contracts.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Exactly.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question with reference to the—

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will yield only for a question, because my time is limited.

Mr. KINDRED. As to the possible checks and restraints that might be necessary to place upon these associations from the standpoint of the consumer. Are there sufficient checks and restraints?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think as a starter they will very greatly help. It is at least a step in the right direction. I will tell the gentleman there may be some strengthening to this bill to be made in the future. However, you can not afford to take the chance of killing these institutions outright or to destroy them until something is ready to take their place, and I believe there will be some day. In fact, I hope it will be soon.

Mr. BLANTON. Will 20 cents a bushel Mr. JONES of Texas. Unquestionably. Will 20 cents a bushel be sufficient to stop it?

Mr. BLANTON. Would it be constitutional?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think so; we have the taxing power

Mr. BLANTON. Then, in lieu of fixing 20 cents a bushel, why not just prohibit it entirely?

Mr. JONES of Texas. A constitutional question might arise in connection with such a provision.

Mr. BLANTON. I was simply asking the question whether the Supreme Court would permit you to do indirectly a thing that it would not permit you to do directly.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Supreme Court has allowed us to go a long ways in the taxing power, and I think the wiser method is this course rather than to take the chance on the

Mr. HUMPHREYS. How much revenue does the gentleman estimate there will be?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Perhaps we would not get much. But if we can prevent the cornering of the market it will be worth while. It is not primarily for revenue purposes unless some one wants to proceed in a business that is not to the interest of the producer and consumer. In that event, if anyone wants to pay for the privilege, we might get some reven ie.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But that is not the purpose of the bill? Mr. JONES of Texas. The primary purpose is to regulate the exchanges, and to do away with certain practices which have grown up in connection with the exchanges. This is the. wiser way to do it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The purpose, as I understand, is to license the man to do that thing if he wants to do it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; the purpose is to place certain power and supervision in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture whereby if he persists in doing some things that are considered deleterious, he can be effectually curbed.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for one or two questions for information as to the operation of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. Assuming that I own a thousand bushels of wheat in the fall of the year, and I think the wheat is going to go up, but I need the money and I desire to sell that wheat, and thinking that it is going to go up, I desire to buy a future of the same amount of wheat for future delivery. That, I take it, would not be prevented by section 3 of this law?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. Now then, would that be prevented, or could it be prevented by the operation of this law under subdivision (b) of section 4 of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not think so at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. Then the intent of the law is to save a proposition of that sort and not regard it as a gambling transac-

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is correct. In other words, there is no intent to do away with legitimate trading.

Mr. BURTNESS. Could it be prevented under the rules and regulations to be issued by the Department of Agriculture provided for by the law?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; not where you own the actual grain. That comes under section (a), which gives the absolute right to sell the grain for future delivery without any question at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. But I may want to sell my grain and get my money from the local elevator in the fall, because I need the money, and I want to buy back a future option because I think grain is going to go up. I want to sell that grain in the fall simply to take the place of keeping my grain in storage.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is perfectly legit mate.

Mr. BURTNESS. That will be regarded, I take it, as a legitimate transaction?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Now, the second question I want to get at is this. With the operation of subdivision (b) of section 4 of this act, how are you going to shut out dealing in futures that are purely speculative?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is an absolute prohibition under section 3. There is no desire to forbid sales for future delivery.

Mr. BURTNESS. The things that are prohibited in section 3 are those things that are known as "privileges," "bids," "offers," "puts and calls," "indemnities," and "ups and "offers," "puts and calls," "indemnities," and ups a downs," trade names applicable to specific transactions only.

Mr. JONES of Texas. After you have eliminated those if you are going to have a market for your product under the present system you have to permit a speculative market in order to have a broad liquid market. I am in favor of an entirely different system, based upon the law of supply and demand, and the first time I get a chance I shall vote for it. In the mean-time I think this measure will be of some benefit.

Mr. BURTNESS. But my position is this: There are still transactions that would be regarded as speculative, and I take it that some of those at least can be transacted under subdivision (b) of section 4; but what I am getting at is—

Mr. JONES of Texas. But the manipulators try to destroy the law of supply and demand and set up an artificial market and thus win, right or wrong.

Mr. BURTNESS. How is it actually proposed to eliminate

Mr. JONES of Texas. There are certain conditions-The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. JONES of Texas. May I have 10 minutes additional?

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The purpose of the whole proposition, or the main purpose of it, is to prevent a manipulation of the market-

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly; but that is not entirely accomplished by this legislation. It is not yet covered by the legislation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under the provisions of section 4 the Secretary of Agriculture thought that under the instructions there he would be able to make such regulations as would con-

My friends, under the present system of marketing, if a local buyer was to produce 10,000 bushels of wheat from the producer, sometimes he could not deliver it at once. buyer will not be able to deliver it finally for several days, sometimes for several weeks, and in some instances several months. The local buyer does not have the money. It costs about $15,000 to handle the transaction. He goes to the local banks, and the banks say to him that it may go down 20 cents a bushel or even 40 cents, and we can not afford to let you have the money. The buyer then says, "I will go to the exchanges and sell some 10,000 bushels of wheat for future delivery." He takes that contract, and leaves both contracts with his local bank. wheat goes up, he gains on one contract and loses on the other; if it goes down, it operates just the reverse. So in either event he has made his commission.

In other words, so far as the local buyer is concerned, the gambling features of the situation are eliminated and he is able to operate on a much narrower margin than if he had to finance the whole transaction. This bill will not interfere with that kind of transaction which is known as hedging. But there are men who have lived off of this exchange business who never buy, never pay for, and never deliver a single bushel of grain. They own nothing in connection with this transaction; they contribute nothing to it; they own no farm; they own no mills. In other words, "They toil not and neither do they spin, and yet Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like some' of these.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. BLACK. I have not had an opportunity to study this bill, but if I understand correctly there is no prohibition on individual or corporation from contracting to sell the actual grain or contracting to buy it, provided he does it through one of these authorized exchanges?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not at all.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, he really may be dealing on a pure speculative basis, but he must make an actual contract?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Now, my friends, I believe that some day something is going to grow up in the way of a system of distribution that will make the present system of exchanges unnecessary. That is one of the pressing problems of to-day. The exchanges claim they do not cost the country any money; for the reason that there are enough suckers who come to pay the expenses; in other words, that the "lambs" pay the bill. I asked the president of one or two of these boards if it was not true that about 90 per cent of the inexperienced purchasers bulled the market; in other words, played on grain going up. And they all said that more than 90 per cent were of that character. In other words, the inexperienced buyer bets on grain going up; bulls the market. Then the professional buyer who takes the other side bears the market, at least, so far as those transactions are concerned, tries to depress the market. In other words, the experienced man is interested, in all these transactions, in depressing rather than in raising the market.

Now, I believe that we are going to develop in this country a system of distribution that will be better than this. I believe we should have a system of standardization of all agricultural products, and then concentration of those agricultural products near the point of production; then by a system of guaranteeing we should have in connection with this transaction a source of information to those who need grain, who need farm products, as to where the supply may be had. We will help to furnish to those people who have the supplies the points and places and people where the demand is located. In other words, there should be a system of direct connection between supply and demand, so that a man who needs a product will be able to have a direct method of connection with the man who produces the product. Now, this may not be used a great deal, but it will enable the consumer and the producer to beat down the middle man who is trying to profiteer and make the middle man operate on a legitimate margin of profit, I believe that the simple usage, or, rather, the availability, of such a method of distribution will enable the people of this country to do away in a large measure with the question of profiteering.

There were sold on the market in Chicago annually during the five years from 1914 to 1918 about 18,000,000,000 bushels of grain. There were delivered on that market about 325,-600,000 bushels. In other words, there was sold on that market fifty-one times the amount of actual grain that was de-livered. There was sold annually on that market during that period about three times as much grain as was grown in the world. Now, I do not believe it is necessary in the economy of this country to have a lot of men supported—and the country must, after all, support them—who stand in the wheat pit and who stand in the exchange and engage in purely gambling transactions.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand from your statement, a man is allowed under the provisions of this bill to buy and sell futures if he is doing it under the hedging contract?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. But he is not going to do it if he is purely gambling? How are you going to tell which is which, and whether when I am selling I am doing it as hedging or as gambling? I am interested in getting information.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will state this: That the words "gambling" and "speculation" are used by most of us not altogether with accuracy, and this bill will not forbid the actual making of a contract for future delivery. It will give the Secretary of Agriculture, by virtue of written reports on all transactions, the right to supervise the exchanges in their conduct of this busi-It leaves a broad, open market on contracts for future delivery and on contracts of buying and selling all along the

Mr. SNELL. It seems that the exceptions in the bill as it stands at the present time would cover almost all contracts that a man could make.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There are no exceptions in section 3. Those particular phases would be absolutely abolished. One of the troubles of the grain market is this: They make no record. It is impossible to tell how much they sell. This requires a record to be made, and publicity will be a great help in connection with these matters. tion with these matters. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the .

gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Purnell].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have no prepared speech to make on this subject, but I do want to call attention to some of the more important feat ires of this legislation as they are proposed in this bill.

I may say, by way of introduction, that after several days of hearings I have somewhat changed my individual opinion of grain exchanges. I think there exists over the country a pretty general feeling that trading in futures and grain exchanges themselves have worked a hardship upon the producers of the country. But after a series of very thorough and exhaustive hearings I have come to the conclusion that in the interest of the producers of the country we must maintain many of the features of our present marketing system. I have no interest in the grain exchanges. I have not any of them in my district. If I looked at this matter from a purely selfish standpoint I would regard only the interests of the men who produce corn and wheat and oats and rye and such other products as are raised in my district. I represent a purely agricultural district. But the surprising conclusion that I have come to, which as I say is in conflict with my former hazy notions, is that the producers in my section of the country profit very largely in many of the transactions and processes of the grain exchanges.

The purpose of this legislation is to strike at the principal objection, to begin a process of elimination that will weed out those features of our marketing system that are injurious and retain those which are good. The committee agreed and all the witnesses have agreed that the one overshadowing evil that must be eliminated is manipulation. This bill provides, in so far as it is humanly possible to do so, for the elimination of manipulation upon these grain exchanges. We discovered from the various witnesses who came before our committee that hedging must be maintained, at least under our present system, and there is no thought in the proposed legislation of destroying the present system. We are firm in the belief that a reasonable amount of pure speculation is necessary under cur present system in order that we may have a liquid market.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes. Mr. DUNBAR. The gentleman says that a reasonable amount of speculation is necessary in order to maintain the market which will insure such prices as will be reasonable. Now, in sections 3 and 4 you impose a tax of 20 cents a bushel. How could any amount of reasonable speculation be indulged in that would cost 20 cents a bushel?

Mr. PURNELL. There are two kinds of speculation. Section

3 is designed to put an end to what is commonly known as "puts and calls." They are manipulative in character. I do not know much about "puts and calls," but section 3 is designed to put an end to that practice, because that in itself is manipulative and embodies an intent to affect the market.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. PURNELL. Certainly. Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. How does a put or call affect the price of spot wheat?

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman has put a hard question to me to answer briefly and in detail. The gentleman perhaps knows what "puts" and "calls" are better than I. I will say, in a general way, that men will pay to-day for the privilege to-morrow of delivering or having delivered to them fictitiously any given number of bushels, and by that operation affect the price of spot wheat.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. How? I am at a loss myself to I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but I myself would like to know how that transaction affects the price of wheat. But I do not wish to annoy the gentleman. I will withdraw the question.

Mr. PURNELL. I do not know much about it. I think other gentlemen perhaps know and they can go into it.

There is another kind of speculation, and that is the kind of speculation that is engaged in by a group of men from day to day. It is of no use to call them anything other than gamblers. It is gambling. They have no wheat, no corn, no barley, no sye, no sorghum seed to sell. They have nothing to deliver. They never expect to deliver anything. They never expect to have anything delivered to them. They are speculators. They are gamblers. But for the purposes of this bill we refer to them as speculators. Speculating and gambling are synonymous terms, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. SNELL. Those speculators that you are describing are allowed under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. PURNELL. They are.

Mr. PURNELL. They are. Mr. SNELL. Who is to judge whether they are good speculators or bad speculators?

Mr. PURNELL. Nobody is going to be called upon to judge as to who is a good speculator or a bad speculator.

Mr. SNELL. Who will draw that dividing line as to just how far we can go and not go and still be called good or bad?

Mr. PURNELL. If those people want to trade, they must trade under the provisions of this b'll on a "contract market."

A "contract market" is one that is so designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, and if I have the time I want to explain to the gentleman why we put that machinery in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, why we give him the power to designate certain markets as "contract markets."

Mr. SNELL. If he designates a certain market as a "contract market" and I am a trader on that market, I can buy to any extent I want to on that market.

Mr. PURNELL. You can.

Mr. SNELL. And still be considered a good speculator? Mr. PURNELL. The Secretary of Agriculture would not say whether you are a good speculator or a bad speculator, and he will not be called upon to say it. If you buy on a "contract market," it means that that market is under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. Let me tell the gentleman the reason for des'gnating a market a "contract market." Suppose you are a speculator and you want to buy on some market. If you avoid the tax, you do business on a "contract market," one that is designated by the Secretary of Agriculture. The reason for designating certain markets as contract markets is just this: We do not want the Secretary of Agriculture to interfere with the business, but we want him to know about it. Before these markets can be designated as "contract markets" under section 5 of the bill they must comply with certain requirements. One of the principal requirements is that they must furnish the Secretary of Agriculture certain information. We all know and the country knows that the thing which has created more suspicion and more doubt in the minds of the people of the country than any other one thing is the lack of information in regard to these grain exchanges. I said in the beginning that I personally have a different opinion to-day from that which I held when we began these hearings, because I have found there are good features about grain exchanges. The whole suspicion in the public mind to-day grows largely out of the fact that we lack information. In this bill we give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to get information, because before any of these grain exchanges can be designated as "contract markets" they must agree to do certain things, and if they do not do those things they can be suspended for a period of six months and may have their permits or designations revoked entirely.

Mr. SNELL. What do you mean by information—a statement of the number of bushels bought and sold?

Mr. PURNELL. That is one thing. They must furnish, if called upon, records and reports. They must provide for the prevention of manipulation as well as prevent the issuance of fake crop reports, and so forth.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman who preceded you told how many bushels had been sold on the grain exchanges of the country in a certain number of years. How did he get that information?

Mr. PURNELL. That has been compiled very inaccurately by digging it out-

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing definite about it?
Mr. PURNELL. By digging it out through the Federal Trade Commission and some of the other commissions that have had charge of getting information. I can not tell the gentleman exactly how it is reached, but it is unsatisfactory and inaccurate, and we want to get that information. It has been estimated by various people that a single bushel of grain may be dealt in on the Chicago Board of Trade, for example, as many as thirty times. Nobody knows whether that is true or not, and we want to get at the bottom of that situation and find out.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. RAKER. Right in connection with the question of speculation I find this in the report in explanation of what the gentleman has started to say. I find this sentence in the report and I wish the gentleman would explain it to the committee. It is as follows:

And while it will not abolish speculation, or what is known to the trade as legitimate trading, it will absolutely destroy manipulation, and it will make for uniformity among different markets.

Just what distinction does the gentleman or the committee make in regard to that—between speculation and manipulation? Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman means to ask what is the distinction?

Mr. RAKER. When this report says this bill will not prohibit speculation, what does it mean?

Mr. PURNELL. We can not prohibit speculation as long as we maintain our present system.

Mr. TINCHER. I think the gentleman from California wants the gentleman from Indiana to tell him the difference between manipulation and speculation.

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a very important proposition.
Mr. PURNELL. It is very important. I will answer the mr. PURNELLE. It is very important. I will answer the gentleman's question by reading from the hearings.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

Mr. McDUFFIE. You can not manipulate without specu-

Mr. PURNELL. You can not manipulate without speculating, but you can speculate without manipulating.

Mr. RAKER. Are not most of the speculators manipulators?
Mr. PURNELL. All of the manipulators are speculators, but very few of the speculators are manipulators.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. PURNELL.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. For instance, a speculator would be a man who would go in and make an individual transaction on the board, but a manipulator would be a man or a group of men who would undertake to corner the market.

Mr. PURNELL. By buying large quantities.
Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Not only by buying large quantities on future contracts, but by undertaking to control the stock market also at that particular time.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I will be glad to yield.
Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will this bill put an end to local bucket shops all over the country

Mr. PURNELL. I think most of the States have laws prohibiting bucket shops now.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Here is a man who is buying on a margin in his local town through a bucket shop or local broker. I am wondering if this bill will put a stop to that kind of speculation or whatever you choose to call it.

Mr. PURNELL, Yes; it will, because the men who buy under the present bucket-shop system will not have any place to buy unless they do business through a contract market.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Can they put in their bids by wire and have them accepted by wire?

Mr. PURNELL Of course you can not stop men from betting.

Mr. PURNELL. Of course you can not stop men from betting on the price of grain any more than you can stop men from betting on a ball game or a horse race.

Mr. VOIGT. The bucket shop is wiped out in this bill, Le-cause a bucket shop is not a contract market.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman is exactly right. I want to read from the hearings what I started to read a moment ago.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can a bucket shop operate if it pays the tax'

Mr. TINCHER. Not long on 20 cents a bushel. Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am asking whether this bill makes it possible for a bucket shop to operate.

Mr. PURNELL. If they paid 20 cents a bushel on each bushel of grain involved in the transaction, I suppose they could do

Mr. TINCHER. Not long.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That raises the question whether they could evolve a system under which they can take care of the tax, but the point I wish to make is that you are not wiping out the bucket shop.

Mr. PURNELL. I asked Mr. Hoover this question: "It has been stated to this committee that this class of traders-referring to the speculators who have no grain to sell and never expect to have any delivered-this class of traders are necessary in order to give liquidity and flexibility to the market. Is that your view?" And Mr. Hoover answered, "This is my impression. I do not believe anyone could determine its accuracy without actual experiment, but my impression is that a certain amount of speculation is necessary in order to get liquidity-a ready market. I do not regard that as especially harmful, for some one must in effect carry the surplus. The real harm is from the man who goes into the market with the deliberate intent of manipulating the price by the continued pressure of selling or buying.

Mr. RAKER. Here is a man who is speculating, who is betting on the price of grain, and is not he a first-hand manipulator,

Mr. PURNELL. I will say that the man who buys 10,000 bushels of grain or sells 10,000 bushels of grain with the idea that the grain will advance or decrease in price can not by such a small transaction hope to affect the market. If a man attempts to manipulate the market he must buy or sell in such large quantities as to bring enough pressure to bear to affect that market.

Mr. RAKER. Is not that transaction purely and entirely a gambling transaction?

Mr. PURNELL. I think so, but I am not discussing the moral question involved. We have to recognize the fact that in this country there is a great system of exchanges and that they perform certain legitimate functions. As I said a minute ago, there is no use in trying to camouflage terms. Speculation involves the sale or purchase of products that a man never expects to have delivered, or never expects to deliver, and yet men who are more or less unbiased, men like Julius Barnes, who served as head of the Grain Corporation, Herbert Hoover, and every representative of the farmers organizations, when we boil down their testimony, agreed in substance that we must of necessity have a certain amount of speculative dealing. Why? Because there are certain seasons of the year when there is no demand for the farmer's product. There are times when men have thousands of bushels of products to sell and nobody to buy. Now, here is a group of men known as speculators who are ready to buy and sell every day, who furnish and give flexibility to the market. They are called insurers, because they do provide a ready market every day for farmers' products.
Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Suggestions were made a minute ago that the bucket shop would be eliminated. Assume that the Duluth or Minneapolis Board of Trade established by the Secretary of Agriculture is a contract market, and assuming that a member of that board of trade desires to establish a branch office in the State of Indiana or in North Dakota; do you mean to say that you or I or some member of the public could not go to that branch office and say, "I desire to buy or sell 10,000 bushels of wheat for May or September delivery"?

"Mr. PURNELL. The branch house is to be under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BURTNESS. The branch house is a branch of the board of trade, and, under the provisions of the law, declared by the Secretary of Agriculture to be a contract market. Can that be done under the provisions of subdivision b, section 4?

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman recognizes the fact that there will be evasions of the law, of course.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is not an evasion of the law; that is a provision of the law.

Mr. PURNELL. What is the purpose of organizing the branch house?

Mr. BURTNESS. They might need that legitimately.
Mr. PURNELL. If they do, it is proper; and I see no reason why they should not. The whole system is put under the man-

Agriculture. He is given a great deal of authority and a great deal of power. The most important thing he is permitted and empowered to do under this law, in my judgment, is to make investigation and keep in touch with the concerns and know what they are doing.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am in thorough accord with the purposes of the law, but what I was trying to bring out is whether it goes far enough. Does the gentleman believe that with sales for future delivery, eliminating puts and calls, there would be any less speculative gambling under the operation of this law, particularly under subdivision b, section 4, than there has been in the past?

Mr. PURNELL. I hope so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asked the gentleman who has the floor the definition or difference between a speculator and a manipulator. The gentleman will recall that Mr. Crosby, of Minneapolis, gave us a definition which at the time seemed to be a good one. Perhaps it will be helpful to the gentleman from Indiana and interesting to the gentleman from California if we read that definition.

Mr. PURNELL. I will be glad to have the gentleman read it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is this:

Speculator: One who deals under existing conditions as he interprets them but does not attempt to alter them.

Manipulator: A speculator who by reason of the large quantities in which he deals attempts to force artificial conditions or to exaggerate conditions for his own advantage.

Further along Mr. Crosby, in answer to a question of mine, said:

The manipulator is the man dealing in huge quantities, not to cover actual transactions but to produce an unnatural and undue influence either of depression or advance, thus creating a situation which interferes with the free play of prices and introduces into legitimate operations elements of danger and uncertainty and hazard. It would be represented by enormous dealings for one man or one director of a deal.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question? I take it the Internal Revenue Office will collect the taxes?

Mr. PURNELL. It is provided for in section 7, I will say in answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. And the Internal Revenue Office will then have to classify what is a manipulator and what is a speculator, will it not?

Mr. PURNELL. It would be very hard I think to deter-

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Let me make it clear. The gentleman is reading there from section 3. The point is this: I am trying to find out whether this bill is simply bow-legged so that the gambling hog can run through it or whether the size is to stop it. In other words, the Internal Revenue then must fix the tax and will tax somebody, and will not they then have to determine which are manipulators and subject to tax and which are not?

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman understands the tax would be paid by the seller.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will yield, does not this bill in effect provide that the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine what is reasonable speculation and what is unreasonable speculation? In other words, the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine when you stop gambling and when you do not stop gambling?

Mr. PURNELL. I think the gentleman is partially correct. Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is not that so in paragraph (b) of sec-

Mr. PURNELL. Of course that is a hard thing to determine. It is as one of the brightest witnesses who appeared before our committee said-it is hard to tell when a pig becomes a hog or night becomes day. You must allow some reasonable amount of latitude to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. It is only a question of size.
Mr. PURNELL. And the successful operation of this law agement and supervision or surveillance of the Secretary of necessarily depends upon the men charged with its enforcement. Mr. CHINDBLOM. There are very few laws, indeed, where an executive officer determines what is a crime and what is not.

Mr. PURNELL, I refer to an instance where we lodge blanket authority with an individual or an official.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Secretary of Agriculture simply requires the exchanges to have certain rules and regulations. Now, in the report it is said these will eliminate manipulation by their own rules, and they all have that rule now. What-

Mr. PURNELL. I think the exchanges are just as anxious as the producing public to eliminate manipulation. I was impressed with the fact in the hearing that under the law as it is proposed they will be able further to do that very thing.

Mr. DYER. What is the meaning of manipulation?

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman, I am afraid, just came in. I have been discussing manipulation for some time.

Mr. DYER. I know the view the gentleman from Kansas had about it.

Mr. PURNELL. Manipulation in this bill has reference to "puts and calls'

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the general attitude of the exchanges on this point? Mr. PURNELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman in answer to that question, as far as I know everybody favors this legis-

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. In just a moment. I was equally surprised with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] when we discovered that the grain exchanges themselves look with considerable favor upon this legislation, and the representatives of the farmers' organizations are also favorable to it, as are all the people who represented the producing public before the com-The Secretary of Agriculture was and, as far as I know, everybody is reasonably favorable to this legislation. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Will the gentleman explain about section 3? As I understand this bill it protects hedging. How can you hedge without bidding, because a man to hedge has got to buy and another man has got to sell.

Mr. TINCHER. If the gentleman will permit, the words used in section 3 are the words used by the different exchanges in operation in the United States, and have exactly the same meaning, and will not at all affect trading in futures, such as the gentleman from New Jersey is interested in, but they are used in that connection so as to cover what are considered puts and calls.

Mr. PURNELL. In other words, they have a specific

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I know they have a specific meaning in gambling, but I want to know how you can hedge without buying or selling?

Mr. TINCHER. Those words are synonymous

Mr. PURNELL. Those words are a common quotation of the market, and they have a specific meaning.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. They are in the law here just the same,

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PURNELL. With pleasure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman be given two minutes

Mr. PURNELL. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas if I can have five additional minutes?

Mr. TINCHER. I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes

Mr. BLANTON. All the gentlemen of the committee state the purpose of this law is to put the present exchanges out of The gentleman from Indiana indicated that the presbusiness. ent exchanges were favorable to the passage of this resolution. I want the gentleman now simply to explain, if he can to my satisfaction, why the present exchanges could be favorable to legislation that will put them out of business?

Mr. PURNELL. I think the gentleman has misunderstood if he understood anyone to say that the purpose of this legislation is to abolish grain exchanges.

Mr. BLANTON. No. I mean the present exchanges as conducted now, with puts and calls.

Mr. PURNELL. That is not the intention of it at all. They are perfectly willing to abolish "puts and calls," because they are manipulative in character, and they are just as anxious, I firmly believe, in wiping out manipulation as any member of the committee is.

Mr. BLANTON. The customers of the exchanges are merely pawns for the manipulators, are they not?

Mr. PURNELL. I do not know about that.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This is true, is it not, that quite a number of the large exchanges have themselves abolished puts and calls, and did it some years ago?

Mr. PURNELL. They have taken, I understand, every step possible to prevent manipulation.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I know that is true in the Minneapolis Exchange. Puts and calls have been abolished there. Mr. PURNELL. At least it was so represented before the committee. It is not possible for us to go back of that.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PURNELL. I will.
Mr. LAYTON. I understand that legitimate exchanges are in favor of this bill because they expect it will put the ordinary bucket shop out of business?

Mr. PURNELL. I hope it will put the bucket shops out of business. And the principal thing, as I see it, to be accomplished by this bill is to bring the business within the supervision of the Agricultural Department, not to the extent that it can be controlled by the Government, because none of us want Government control or ownership, but in order that the Secretary of Agriculture may know more about the business and determine what markets are fit markets to be designated as "contract markets."

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for another question? He seems to have given this matter extraordinary care and attention. It has been stated on the floor of the House many times that last year's crop was sold about fifteen times over, if not

Mr. PURNELL. The estimates are that it was sold from fourteen to thirty times over, I think.

Mr. RAKER. That is better yet, so far as the question I want to ask is concerned. Would this bill if carried to-day eliminate that selling of the grain from fifteen to thirty times

Mr. PURNELL. I can not answer that by yes or no. I do not know whether it will or not. The chances are, if I may say it to the gentleman frankly, it may not interfere with that at all. The question we must determine, however, is whether the sale over and over again of the specific number of bushels of grain affects, one way or the other, the price.

Mr. RAKER. Grain that does not exist?

Mr. PURNELL. That does not exist.
Mr. RAKER. I just imagined from what I had heard that the people were against this method of gambling by which grain may be sold fifteen to thirty times and affect the producers in that way

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman will be surprised if he will read the hearings to learn how unanimous witnesses are in approving certain speculative features of the present system.

Mr. RAKER. One more question and I will finish. Are the representatives of the producers of grain in this country in favor of that way of handling their crops?

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Clifford Thorne, of Chicago, who represented the farmers, and whom I regard as one of the brainlest men in the country, urged that before we get away from the present system we should extend it two years and not cut it off suddenly. I think the hearings will bear me out that he, too, recognized under the present system a certain value to hedging and speculation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice in section 3, on page 2, line 13, there is levied a tax of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved in such transactions. There is no "bushel" involved.

Mr. PURNELL. Only mathematically.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is no bushel of grain involved. Suppose they would say technically that there was no grain involved in it?

Mr. PURNELL. Certainly the intent of the law is to tax every bushel of grain that is involved, either actually or theoretically. In other words, if a man buys in a speculative way, with no intention of having it delivered, 50,000,000 bushels or 1 bushel, he must pay the tax.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any bushel of grain involved in the "puts and calls"?

Mr. PURNELL. No; there is not.
Mr. HAUGEN. There is a contract.
Mr. PURNELL. That is the point. There is a contract.
Mr. LAYTON. If this bill becomes a law, will the Secretary of Agriculture have the same control over the bucket shops as over the grain exchanges?

Mr. PURNELL. Bucket shops will certainly be eliminated, which will do away with the necessity of any control over them. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

KINCHELOE] is recognized.

Mr. KINCHELOE, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as everybody knows, in this country there has been a great demand coming from the producers of grain for some regulation of the grain exchanges. I believe that the growers of grain are reasonable, conservative men, and want only such regulations as are reasonable and that no longer mitigate against the price of their products. To me the fluctuation in the price of grains is the most uncalled-for and inexcusable than in that of any product that is not only raised by the farmer but any raw product or mineral that comes out of the bowels of the earth. Because when the grain is raised and thrashed there are just so many bushels, and you can not enlarge that number. You can not contract that or expand it. There are so many bushels. There is a certain demand for that number of bushels, and we all know that when wheat sells for a certain price per bushel to-day and the amount is ascertained that is raised in the world or in this country, and it fluctuates on dif-ferent exchanges and is quoted at different prices per bushel in a few days' time, there is nothing less at the bottom of it than manipulation.

There is a unanimous report on this bill, and we realize that so long as the present system of boards of exchange is in vogue, and the market for the grain of the farmers of the country, of course, that must be dealt with and the vicious practice stopped. I believe that the time will come when you and I will see in our lifetime the farmers of this country owning and operating their own elevators. We will see the time when they are going to take care of this market, and there will be cut out the profit of the middleman by improving the marketing system in their owning their cooperative elevators where they can sell the grain they raise direct to the miller. But until that is done, this is the only method that the farmer has of marketing his grain—through the grain exchanges of the country.

If that is true, then we have got to recognize certain facts. It is not the purpose of this committee to hurt any legitimate business of the boards of trade of this country, because we realize that the only system by which the farmer has to market his grain is through these boards of trade and these grain exchanges.

But the manipulator is the vicious man in this great system, and he ought to be cut out and eliminated. The board of exchange at Minneapolis has cut them out. But the trouble about it is that without a Federal law governing all the exchanges in all the States of the Union, you get into trouble, and that is what we undertake to provide against here.

I am frank to say that section 3 of this bill imposes, in my judgment, a prohibitive tax. But I want to see that imposed. I do not believe that any speculator can operate and pay a margin of 20 cents a bushel and still survive.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Where does the gentleman get the idea that these technical designations here—"privileges," "bids," "offers," and so forth, cover speculation in grain?
Mr. KINCHELOE. We do not undertake to cut out altogether speculation in grain.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I understood the gentleman to say that he thought section 3 would do it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think that section 3 would cut out this character of manipulation; but to cut out speculation entirely, I think, would destroy the system and the market.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. These transactions that are enumerated in section 3 are to be considered as transactions that are never consummated?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Exactly. They are never intended to be consummated, and when made they are not consummated.

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KING.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I would like to know if these privileges, bids, offers, puts and calls, indemnities, and ups and downs are manipulators of the market?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think the man or the firm or the combination of individuals that manipulates the market is one who goes on the market and buys or sells in such quantities as help to fix the market price of grain.

Mr. KING. These are only the little fellows that play on the curb on the outside.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Which ones?

Mr. KING. Well, the put and call men.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, the evidence shows that some of the big fellows play it, the big fellows who gamble in grain, and never owned a dollar's worth of grain, and never expect to own a dollar's worth of grain.

Mr. KING. That is done on the boards of trade.
Mr. KINCHELOE. First and foremost, I think it is going to put the manipulator out of business. The light of publicity that is provided in sections 4 and 5, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, whereby all these transactions of every kind and character shall be a matter of record in the various boards was the question of hedging. I asked the representative of the of trade throughout the country that he designates when they comply with the various provisions placed here, will prove valuable, because every man who goes on a board of trade designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market" and every transaction that such a man makes there has got to be a matter of record and accessible at all times from that board of trade to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Justice. Therefore, the Secretary has the power not only first to designate these various boards of trade as contract markets, but they must comply with certain provisions set out in sections and 5 before they can become a contract market, and then when they become a contract market by complying with these provisions they must comply with other provisions in the bill that every transaction that is made in buying or selling grain in these various contract markets designated by the Secretary of Agriculture must be made a matter of record and at all times evidence as to these transactions is to be accessible to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Justice.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes. Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think it would subserve a better purpose if these records were made accessible to the public as well as to the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Over here in section 8 it is provided that they can be made public by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should they not be made public in the first instance and not have it left to the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KINCHELOE. In the hearings it was represented that if these matters were made public it would give information to the various competitors who operate on the various boards of trade. That was their first objection to making public record of it. Some of us on the committee then suggested to them, "Why can you not have your record sealed in an envelope and made accessible to the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice when they want access to it?"

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Is not the reason why provision is not made for the publicity of these transactions in the first instance is the fact that they want them to come to the attention of a responsible person?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; a responsible part of the Government. That is one of the reasons.

Now, under subsection (e) of section 5 the Secretary of Agriculture can designate boards of trade as contract markets only when the government thereof admit to membership thereof and all privileges thereon on such boards of trade lawfully formed and conducted cooperative associations of producers having adequate financial responsibility. The State of Missouri passed a law to make the boards of trade in that State admit these members of the farm bureaus to membership. They are contesting that in the courts, and when they came before the committee to testify the only objection they could offer to letting the members of the farm-bureau organizations become members of these boards was that they divided their profits among their members. That is the only reason that they ever say they welcome them. Everybody knows they do not welcome them. What difference does it make to the other members of the exchange if I am a member of a farmers' organization which has 2,000 members and I am their representative? difference does it make what I do with the profits we get out of that? This is simply, in my judgment, a camouflage to conceal their real objection.

In my judgment, this is the most complicated and technical of any business in the country. It takes a lifetime on the part of men who make a study of it, yet they all admit that they do not know all about the grain business. So when this committee approached this subject our idea was not to make it too radical. Our idea was to cut out the speculator in grain; but it was urged strongly before our committee, both by members of the farmers' organizations and by members of various boards of trade, that these speculators in grain create the steady market the year round for the sale of the grain. They say there are times of the year when there are hundreds of thousands of bushels of wheat that come onto the market, and that if you should eliminate the speculator there would be no market for it. Therefore they claim—I do not know whether it is true or not—that it will create a constant market the year round, because these speculators will buy the grain, of course taking chances Grange if he thought hedging was necessary to the continuation of this policy of marketing, and he said he did. He said he believed that if you cut out the legitimate hedge, which, as he described it, is simply an insurance, you would be doing an unwise thing. A man who buys 10,000 bushels of wheat to-day for delivery in December protects himself by selling 10,000 bushels of wheat on the exchanges of the country. Therefore they claim he is insured to that.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Would it not obviate some of the viciousness of this hedging if we should make the people who want to hedge simply take out an insurance policy? Then it would not be under the guise of a sale. It would not affect the market, and yet the man would get his insurance.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think it is really an insurance proposition in another form, anyhow.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But the other form gives it the guise of a sale, and it goes into the pot to help make up the mess from which we have suffered so long.

Mr. KINCHELOE. At least it protects the buyer of the

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But would he not be protected just as well by taking out an insurance policy?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I would not disagree with the gentleman on that proposition. But there is another benefit of this system of hedging. You can call it insurance or whatever you choose. Mr. HARDY of Texas. It is insurance if it is honest.

Mr. KINCHELOE. For instance, a miller wants to buy enough wheat in the summer time to make 40,000 barrels of flour, and he wants his bank to advance him the money with which to make the purchase. He will have less trouble in getting credit in his own bank to buy that wheat to make that flour if he has hedged. These hearings developed the fact that the first thing a banker asks a grain merchant who wants to buy some wheat for future delivery, before the bank will loan him the money, is the question, "Have you hedged your pur-chase?" They all said that where the man has hedged his purchase he not only has less trouble in securing the loan but he can get it at a less rate of interest.

So, it was the thought of your committee that there ought to be some protection to the farmer against fluctuation. never have been such great fluctuations in prices in the history of the country as there have been recently. In three or four weeks there have been enormous fluctuations, the like of which this country never had seen before. There never has been such a great spread between the price that the producer of wheat received and the price paid by the consumer of flour than there is to-day. After giving this subject the study that I have tried to give it for weeks, I am convinced that this bill is absolutely sound. I do not think it is radical. I believe it will cut out the manipulator, and if I am thoroughly convinced that some amendment will give double assurance of doing that, I will favor such an amendment to cut out the manipulator, because, in my judgment, that has been an evil at all times. it would be a serious mistake to cut out hedging, and I think at last under the publicity of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, when he makes these contract mar-kets comply with certain specific requirements before they are recognized, it will help the cause of legitimate business.

In addition to that, he comes to him and says under this bill that every contract for the purchase of grain covered by this bill shall be a matter of record which shall be accessible to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Department of Justice; and I am as firmly convinced as I am that I am standing here that it will eradicate these evils and absolutely eliminate the manipulators of grain in this country, because of the publicity given and because of the power given to the Secretary of Agriculture

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does the gentleman think it will affect the average price of wheat for the entire year to any considerable extent if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think the more you cut out the manipulator of the market the more you will stabilize prices. more the manipulator of grain is cut out of the opportunity to do business the greater the necessary tendency will be to establish a uniformity of price under the great law of supply and

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Does the gentleman think the tendency of the bill will be to steady the price to a higher level?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know whether it will be to a higher level; that will depend on the quantity of grain produced each year and the demand for it.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. In the gentleman's judgment the difference between what the producer obtains and what it is sold for in the ultimate market will be less?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think so, for when you stop the manipulation of grain it goes back to the old law of supply and demand, and I think the producer will get more than he did before, but of course that will depend on supply and demand.

Mr. PETERSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Certainly.

Mr. PETERSEN. If a man buys 10,000 bushels of wheat and sells it at a higher price, that is what you call hedging.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If he buys 10,000 bushels of wheat and sells it to protect himself, that is called hedging.

Mr. PETERSEN. If he buys 10,000 bushels of wheat and sells 10,000 bushels of flour, that is not hedging; that is busi-

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is legitimate business, and when you cut out legitimate hedging you destroy the market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Voigr].

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture, of which I have the honor to be a member, had under consideration during nearly the whole of last January, and also for about a week last month, various bills the object of which is to curb the evil of gambling and speculation in the grain supply of the country and to regulate grain exchanges. During that time the committee took over 1,400 printed pages of testimony, and many prominent men interested in the subject appeared before it from all over the country. Among those who appeared may be mentioned Secretary of Agriculture Wallace; Senators Caraway and Dial; a number of Members of the House; Herbert Hoover; Julius H. Barnes, former head of the United States Grain Corporation; Gray Silver and Clifford Thorne, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the largest farmers' organization in the country; C. S. Barrett, president of the Farmers' National Union; B. C Marsh, of the Farmers' National Council; W. G. Eckhardt, of the so-called Committee of Seventeen; F. M. Crosby, of the Washburn-Crosby Co.; F. C. Van Dusen and F. B. Wells, of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce; J. P. Griffin, president of the Chicago Board of Trade; and men owning or operating private and farmers' cooperative elevators. I think the committee can claim without boasting that it is quite accurately informed as to the manner in which our vast grain crop is merchandised; the functions performed by grain dealers, the exchanges, and their members; the value of these agencies; and the abuses which exist in the grain-marketing machinery. Our grain crop for 1920 exceeded 6,000,000,000 bushels, and its proper handling from producer to consumer is of vital interest to the whole people.

At the outset I wish to say that I am convinced that our marketing machinery for handling the grain crop is the best in the world, but there is room for improvement. There is a in the world, but there is room for improvement. popular impression that the grain exchanges are only gambling places, and might as well be done away with. Under our present system of marketing, these exchanges perform a very necessary function and should be retained. What we need is more marketing facilities, and not less, but the evils existing in present practices should be done away with, so far as it is possible

In my judgment, the greatest economic problem before the American people to-day is to cut out the waste which takes place in transferring commodities from the producer to the consumer. The man who can devise a system which will measurably reduce this waste is entitled to be numbered among the great. It is claimed that for every dollar the consumer pays for the farmer's product the farmer receives about 35 cents. In other words, it takes about twice as much money to get the product to the consumer as is paid the farmer for raising it. difference is appalling, and the intervening loss to the American people amounts to billions of dollars. The farmer and consumer both complain, and I am convinced that with a better system of marketing both can be benefited. I have given considerable thought to this subject, and my conclusion is that the first step for improvement lies with the farmer himself. The farmers must organize; they must standardize their product as far as possible, pack it properly, and, wherever possible, market it The farmers should own cooperative warecooperatively. houses and feed out their products to the markets according to demand. Sufficient marketing facilities must also be provided for in our large centers of population, so that farm products will find a broad market. Our transportation facilities, by rail, water, and motor truck, should be brought to the highest state of efficiency. Good roads, on which the producer can haul large loads with speed to points of shipment or consumption, are a necessity. The Government should provide a highly organized system of market reporting, so that the centers and quantities of supply and demand for all agricultural products

Returning now to the subject under discussion, it is recognized by all that the two great evils in the grain trade are manipulation and speculation, commonly called gambling. It is impossible to draw an exact line between speculation and gambling. It is hard to tell just when a pig becomes a hog or when day changes into night. There is an element of speculation in all business, and for practical purposes the difference between speculation and gambling lies in the degree of risk involved and the intent of the speculator or gambler. A speculator is a man who risks his means in a business venture, attempting to deduce from information known to him the existence of a state of facts in the future which will result in profit to him. A gambler is one who risks his means on blind chance. He may know what the probabilities of winning are under the law of averages, but outside of that no amount of reasoning can influence the outcome of his venture. A man who enters into a grain transaction who is possessed of accurate information from which he draws conclusions as to the future state of the market may well be called a speculator, whereas one who enters into the same transaction without any knowledge whatever may be called a gambler. Of course, it is impossible to draw such a distinction for practical purposes, and therefore the law makes the test of whether a grain transaction is a gambling transaction the question of whether there was an intent in good faith on the part of the one who seeks to enforce a contract to carry out its terms. Two-contracts may read exactly alike and a court might hold one void and one valid. This illustrates one of the difficulties in legislating on the subject.

It is probable that comparatively small speculative and gambling ventures in the grain markets do not appreciably influence prices. These trades offset each other, and the law of supply and demand takes its course. But it is different with the manipulator. He is a real danger to producer and consumer, and therefore the committee has done the best it could to provide effective checks against manipulation. manipulator is a speculator or gambler who by reason of his tremendous resources buys or sells grain in such large quantities either for present or future delivery as to affect the price. The history of the Chicago Exchange shows that in times past many such manipulations have taken place. If a man or set of men go onto an exchange and sell millions of bushels for future delivery, they can, of course, depress or enhance the price. During the past year we have had such violent fluctuations in the grain market that no other conclusion is possible than that they were the result of deliberate manipulation. The committee has dealt with the subject from a practical standpoint in an endeavor to help producer and consumer rather than to legislate against gambling from a moral standpoint. That feature may well be left to State legislation. The bill before us does not make legal or illegal any form of grain contract, but we seek to regulate the whole subject by recourse to the taxing

For practical purposes a vast amount of so-called speculation in grain is properly called gambling, and if I could see my way clear to vote to report out a bill which would stop all this gambling I should be glad to do so. But there are insuperable obstacles. In order to stop all the gambling it would simply be necessary to pass a law requiring that on all contracts for the sale of grain an actual delivery must be made, excepting cases where delivery becomes physically impossible, and providing a tax or penalty for failure to deliver. We know what the remedy is, but the entire committee is satisfied that it would do infinitely more harm to producer and consumer than the present system. Such a law would destroy a practice which is very prevalent in the grain trade now, called hedging, and which by the great weight of opinion of farmers and grain tradconsidered legitimate. The whole ers alike is grain marketing regulation revolves around the hedge, and it is impossible to understand it without knowing exactly what a hedge is, the different ways it is used, and the amazing ex-tent to which it is used. A hedge may be defined as an insurance against price fluctuation. It is more feasible to illustrate it than to fully define it. For instance, the operator of a country elevator in North Dakota is buying wheat from the farmers after harvest. He knows by experience that probably to-morrow his receipts will be about 20,000 bushels. He knows that wheat on the Minneapolis exchange is selling for $1.50 per bushel. He then telegraphs to his broker at M nneapolis to sell 20,000 bushels at or near that price for delivery in some future month. This is called "selling a future." He then knows what he can pay the farmers for their wheat. If the elevator man, for instance, figures 20 cents a bushel for freight, his profit, insurance, interest, and so forth, he can pay the farmer $1.30 per bushel. After he has bought from the farmer he sends the actual wheat bought to Minneapolis. During a time of car shortage this may take a month or two. Now, suppose when this wheat reaches Minneapolis it is worth $1.60 per bushel. He then makes 10 cents extra on the actual wheat sold, but he loses the same amount in settling on the contract he made for future delivery. This latter contract he does not complete by delivering grain, but by paying the difference in market price. wheat actually shipped had dropped to $1.40, he would lose 10 cents a bushel on it, but he would gain 10 cents a bushel on his future-delivery contract, because his broker could buy in the wheat on another fictitious contract at $1.40 and get $1.50 for it.

So it will be seen that the elevator man, by making this fictitious hedging contract against grain which he actually has or expects to have, insures himself against a fluctuation and makes his money out of handling the grain. This is only one illustration of the hedge. It is used for the same purpose by other buyers and sellers of grain, by millers, and exporters. The Washburn-Crosby Co., of Minneapolis, the largest flour millers in the world, make from 40,000 to 50,000 barrels of flour a day. They use about 50,000,000 bushels of wheat a year. The storage capacity for wheat at Minneapolis is only a small fraction of this amount. Consequently they are obliged to buy for future delivery. They sell vast quantities of flour for future delivery. In order to protect themselves against a fluctuation in the price of wheat they resort to the hedging operation. It will be seen at once that if the country elevator operator could not protect himself against loss by hedging he would incur an additional risk, and to compensate himself for that risk he would of necessity pay a lower price to the farmer. Likewise a dealer who agrees to deliver actual wheat to a consumer at a future day would have to demand a higher price if he could not insure himself against fluctuation by hedging. is therefore certain that if by law we destroy the hedging privilege the spread between producer and consumer will be increased, to the loss of both.

Now, while the hedge is considered legitimate to protect a man who has actual grain, or who has contracted to buy or sell actual grain, it will be seen at once that as it takes two parties to make the hedging contract, one may be a legitimate hedger and the other a gambler. When the country elevator man above referred to telegraphs his broker to sell 20,000 bushels for future delivery, the broker must find a man who will agree to buy it for future delivery. Here is where the speculator or gambler comes in. If he thinks that at the future delivery date wheat will be higher, he buys the 20,000 bushels, and thus the transaction is completed. Of course, the elevator man and the gambler both know that on this transaction there is not one chance in a hundred that actual wheat will be delivered, although delivery can be legally demanded, but that the contract will be fulfilled by payment of the difference in market price. Of course, it should be understood that these two parties do not know each other in the transaction; each one deals with his broker as the principal, and each is at liberty at any time to relieve himself from liability on his contract by paying or receiving the dfference between the contract and market price at any time prevailing. The problem therefore is, Can the hedging privilege be retained and at the same time wipe out the gambler, the man who has no grain, who expects to receive or deliver none, and who possibly would not know it if he saw it? The committee is unanimously of the opinion that it can not be done and that under our present marketing system we must put up with this necessary evil in order to preserve the hedge.

We have therefore done the best we could to frame a bill to

We have therefore done the best we could to frame a bill to destroy manipulation of prices, to minimize gambling, to compel boards of trade to make proper rules to prevent unfair practices, to abolish the so-called bucket shops, to compel exchanges and brokers to keep proper accounts, to prevent the dissemination of false market reports, and to compel exchanges to admit to membership cooperative associations of producers, who have heretofore been denied that privilege. Under the Constitution there are but two sources of power under which Congress can act in this matter—the interstate-commerce clause and the taxing power. As manipulation and gambling may take place within State limits, we could not frame an adequate remedy under the interstate-commerce clause, and therefore had recourse to the taxing power, which, as is well known, includes the power to destroy. The following are the chief provisions of the bill:

(1) It covers wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, flax, and sor-

(2) It levies a tax of 20 cents per bushel on every bushel involved in transactions known as puts and calls. Puts and calls are options, giving one the right to deliver or call for delivery of a specified number of bushels of grain at a fixed price and time. For instance, A, in consideration of $5, gives B the right to deliver to A up to a certain hour to-morrow 5,000 bushels of wheat at a certain price. If during that time the price goes down B buys the wheat and tenders it to A and pockets the difference. In a "call," B has the right to demand delivery. There is not a case in a thousand, probably, where actual grain is ever delivered on these contracts. They are conceded to be a gamble on the price, and the committee therefore deems it proper that they should be taxed out of existence.

(3) A tax of 20 cents per bushel is placed on all contracts for the future sale of grain, except where the seller is the actual owner of the grain or is the grower thereof, or in case either party is the owner or renter of land in which it is to be grown, or is an association of owners, growers, or renters.

(4) The foregoing tax on future sales is not imposed if the sale is made by or through a member of a board of trade which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market," and providing the contract is in writing, showing names, dates, kind and quantity of grain, price and terms of delivery, and providing a permanent record of the sale is kept by the broker.

(5) The Secretary of Agriculture may designate certain boards as "contract markets" which are located at terminal points where a sufficient volume of grain is dealt in as to reflect market values. The board must provide by proper rules for the keeping of detailed books and records by members open to Government inspection. It must prevent its members from sending out false or misleading market reports. The board must prevent manipulation of prices and must prevent individuals from having an unreasonable amount of future trades outstanding. The board must under reasonable rules and regulations admit to membership cooperative associations of producers. The Secretary has power for cause shown to suspend or revoke the designation of "contract market," and his action may be reviewed by a circuit court of appeals. The Secretary may investigate as to the operation of exchanges and may call at any time for reports.

It will be seen that the Secretary of Agriculture is given a strong hand over the exchanges. They must prevent manipulation and unfair practices or stand in danger of having their designation as contract markets taken away. If the Secretary suspends the designation or revokes it, that action for the time being or permanently puts the particular board out of business, because no one can afford to trade on it and pay a tax of 20 cents a bushel. It has been said that this bill gives the exchanges a monopoly of the future trading business. true; but it gives them no advantage they do not now have, as all future trading is conducted on them.

There are at present no statistics in existence showing the total volume of grains dealt in for future delivery in the United States. The Federal Trade Commission in its report on the grain trade-volume 5, page 35-has deduced from tax payments and other statistics that on the Chicago Board of Trade alone from 1910 to 1918, inclusive, future grain contracts involved a yearly average of over fourteen and a half billion bushels; in 1916 it ran over 23,000,000,000 bushels. Actual grain delivered at Chicago is only a small per cent of these figures. It is true that immense quantities of grain are sold and hedged in the Chicago market which do not reach Chicago, but making due allowance there is still a vast amount of trading which is nothing but a gamble on the price.

The bill puts the bucket shops out of business, because a bucket shop is not a contract market and can not operate on a contract market. A bucket shop is a place wherein men speculate or gamble and the owner assumes the risk of the trades, like the keeper of a gambling house or a bookmaker at a race track.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I will.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I am very much interested in this question of hedging. I want to make a preliminary statement. If you eliminate gambling altogether and the market is controlled by supply and demand, would there be any danger of the elevator man in buying grain being caught in a falling market? The trouble to-day is that our markets are being manipulated up and I to call it so.

down by reason of speculation, and is not that the real reason that hedging is necessary?

Mr. VOIGT. At times the market has been manipulated, but if you cut out all manipulation on grain exchanges, there will still be violent fluctuations at times. If the gentleman will consider, commodities that are not traded in on exchanges are subject to fluctuations. Take, for instance, rubber, its price has fluctuated in the last two years more violently than grain. Rubber is down to a third of what it was two years ago, and all other commodities have fluctuated. Suppose the elevator man could not hedge his grain. He is buying it or about to buy it from a farmer, and he does not know what he is going to get for it when he ships it to market. In order to cover that risk, he is going to pay the farmer less for the grain. If he knows that he can turn around and instantly by wire to the market resell the grain, he can afford to buy it on a closer margin than if he had to run the chances of keeping the grain for several weeks. Put yourself in place of the country buyer. You buy the grain and it may take several weeks, or sometimes months, before you can ship it. You do not know whether the price will go up or down. It may fluctuate 5, 10, or 20 cents a bushel, and if you can not hedge, you are going to pay the farmer less to compensate you for the risk of carrying the So the committee could not see its way clear to stop speculation entirely because we could not see our way clear to cut out the hedging. I will say personally I was much amazed at the amount of grain hedging that is carried on in the country. You can not cut out gambling, or speculation in grain, whatever you choose to call it, unless you want to abolish the hedge.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Suppose I buy 100 bushels of grain, then can I sell 100,000 bushels under the bill as a hedge?

Mr. VOIGT. I will say to the gentleman that under this bill you can gamble in grain to any extent. If the bill were effective to-day you could go in and gamble.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then it does not prevent future gambling in grain?

Mr. VOIGT. The bill does not. You can not stop all gambling or speculation, unless you are willing to do away with the hedge.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not this bill stop gambling by imposing the 20-cent tax; does not that practically make the transaction prohibitive?

Mr. VOIGT. No; the 20-cent tax is levied only in two instances. The tax is levied on puts and calls, which are considered by everybody to be purely gambling transactions, and also on future sales not made on a so-called contract market.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Texas put the question to the gentleman from Wisconsin whether or not this bill would stop gambling, and I took it that he referred to puts and calls, and it occurred to me that 20 cents a bushel would necessarily stop that gambling.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I referred to the sale by the owner, of whether or not he could sell more than he really had on hand at the time. That is the question I was trying to develop

Mr. VOIGT. I will say under this bill you can sell any quantity of grain even if you have not a bushel.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then that is gambling.

Mr. VOIGT. This bill attempts to minimize the gambling in grain but does not prohibit it. It does prohibit the gambling in puts and calls entirely by imposing the 20-cent tax.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And there it stops.

Mr. VOIGT. Most of the gambling in grain is in the form of future contracts. Puts and calls in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred are made only for 24 hours. The bulk of the business is done by future contracts, where they buy or sell for May, June, July, or December delivery, for instance. Now, that form of contract is not prohibited by this bill providing it is made on a grain exchange and it is made through a broker and a record kept of the transaction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman be given a couple of minutes. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I will yield.
Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman and his colleagues on the committee have all stated that for the purpose of legitimate grain hedging that these exchanges are necessary to the extent that is designed by this bill. Now, if that question only were embraced in the bill, for a man to hedge who buys 10,000 bushels of wheat for legitimate purposes, he would then have to sell 10,000 bushels, and yet under the gentleman's statement he can go upon the exchanges and sell a million bushels if he sees fit. Is not that the fact?

Mr. VOIGT. The fact is that under this bill you can sell a million bushels by way of speculation or gambling if you choose

Mr. BLANTON. Then it does not confine gambling to legiti-

You can not have a hedge on a board of trade Mr. VOIGT. without permitting gambling, for this reason: It takes two parties to make a contract. For instance, if you are a legitimate grain dealer or a country buyer and you sell 10,000 bushels for the purpose of protecting the grain that you have bought, that is considered a legitimate hedge. Now, you wire in your order to the man you do business with in Minneapolis or Chicago. He goes onto the exchange and completes your contract. When your broker sells the 10,000 bushels some one must buy 10,000 bushels. The man who buys may be a hedger, who seeks to protect an actual amount of grain, or he may be a pure gambler. How are you going to regulate that proposition? I say it can not be done under our present system of marketing.

Mr. PURNELL. Is not this further to be said, that there is this indirect limitation, under subdivision (d) of section 5, which provides that the boards themselves must limit transactions to such an extent that there will be a limit? There is that indirect correction. If it becomes manipulation it becomes the duty of the contract market to curb that buying or selling.

Mr. VOIGT. I was going to say this, that in my judgment the two most valuable features in this bill are those which stop manipulation and which provide for the keeping of records, so that we may know for a certainty how much future trading is

Of course, the bill does indirectly limit large gambling or speculative operations by prohibiting manipulation and limiting the amount of future contracts an individual can have outstanding, but the bill does not state any specific figure. The committee could not see its way clear to name an arbitrary figure, because a contract involving only a small quantity may be a pure gamble, and a contract involving a million bushels may be a perfectly proper and lawful one. I have no doubt that the Washburn-Crosby Co. sometimes buys more than a million bushels for future delivery and expects to take the wheat and grind it into flour. The best we could do was to compel the exchanges to supervise their own business and, if they did not do it properly, to give the Secretary of Agriculture the weapons with which to expose them and to suspend or abrogate their powers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. VOIGT. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes

Mr. TINCHER. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. VOIGT. The Secretary of Agriculture can tell these exchanges how he wants their records kept and what reports he wants them to make. He can go to them under this bill at any time and say, "Tell me how many transactions you have had last week, or last month, buying or selling 50,000, 100,000, or 1,000,000 bushels," for instance, and if he thinks the public is being hurt he can publish the facts, and buyers and sellers in good faith can hold their orders until conditions become We are going to get under this bill full and reliable statistics on which future legislation can be based. The boards of trade and their members have in the past few days flooded Members of Congress with protests against this legislation; they object to being regulated, but there is nothing in this legislation which will hurt any honest man. It will even permit some of the gamblers to operate, whose contracts in form are the same as those of men who actually buy and sell grain. [Ap-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this time to extend the general debate on this bill one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate on this bill be extended for one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, that can not be done in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The committee may rise—there can be no objection to the time, as this morning it seemed to me the time for debate was limited for a bill of this importance.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be done with unanimous con-

Mr. TINCHER. I move that the committee do now rise. Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HUDSPETH. If I understood the Chair correctly, he said it could be done by unanimous consent-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have entertained such a suggestion if there was no objection, but there seems to be some objection, and the Chair will recognize the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Campbell of Kansas having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 5676, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order fixing the time for general debate on this bill at three hours be changed to four hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas—Mr. TINCHER. And that the additional time be divided in the same proportion as originally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate on this bill be extended from three hours to four hours and that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether he wishes to conclude the consideration of the bill this afternoon?

Mr. TINCHER. If we get that time we can not, because the bill will have to be read for amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection to the extension, and I was just going to suggest that there could be an agreement that debate run through the remainder of the afternoon, the general debate to be equally divided and controlled as heretofore provided.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I will modify my request and ask that the order be changed and that general debate shall extend during the afternoon until 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill continue until 5 o'clock to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if he means the entire day?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The time to be controlled as

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time to be divided equally between the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman whether he considers it more important to debate the bill or to pass it?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, there are some gentlemen who have asked for time on the bill, members of the committee who gave as much as 30 days time in the consideration of this bill, and I do not like to be responsible for their not being heard.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I do not object. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5676.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5676, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5676, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes,

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK]

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on the 11th day of April, the first day of this session of Congress, I introduced a warehouse bill, H. R. 2343, and wish to speak to that measure. I believe the desire of Congress and our entire citizenship is to see the Government taken from an uncertain, temporary war basis to a stable, businesslike peace basis. After the armistice we are confronted with many per-plexing questions, the settlement of which is now before us. The question in our minds is what to do at this time. Every citizen is anxious to see the channels of commerce opened and trade relations resumed with the nations of the world. Our markets and the markets of the world are at a standstill. Something is wrong, a remedy should be given, and no time lost. What is the best thing to do to stabilize prices under present conditions? Different remedies are offered. What is wrong with our markets and why are farm products at such a low While the condition of our foreign relations has had much to do with the present price of farm products, I believe the lack of storage facilities and selling agencies are two of the greatest causes of present prices.

From figures compiled from comparisons of the Department of Agriculture showing the quantity and crop value, we find that if we add the value of live-stock products to the crop value of 1920 the total wealth production of the farms of the United States for 1920 would be $16.500,000,000, compared with $24,- 982,000,000 in 1919 and $22,479,000,000 in 1918. The corn crop of 1920 is reported at 3,232,367,000 bushels, the largest ever produced. The wheat crop for the same year was 787,128,000 bushels, or 147,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1919. Our greatest corn crop for 1920 brings our total grain production for that year to 6,039,320,000 bushels, a gain of 10

While we had our greatest grain crop in 1920, there was a great decrease in value, depression of prices, and a general slump in our markets. The value of our grain crops of 1920 was $4,509,561,000, or $2,881,938,000 less than the value of our 1919 grain crops, though the grain production for 1919 was 571,000,000 bushels short of the 1920 crop.

The cotton crop of 1920 was 12,987,000 bales, valued at $914,-In 1919 there were 11,421,000 bales, valued at $2,034,-658,000. While the cotton crop of 1920 was 1,566,000 bales more than the crop of 1919, yet the value of the 1919 crop was

All will agree that a tense situation has arisen since the slump in farm products. Business is stagnant, wages are reduced, home building is waiting, while we number the unemployed by the millions. How can it be remedied? Some say that the farmer should produce more and reduce the high cost of living. He has produced more, with greater cost to himself and higher prices for material, and thousands of our farmers have lost money in crops and live stock and many of them now face bankruptcy. Yet, with all these adverse conditions, in 1919 the total commercial value of the farmers' crops was more than $16,035,111,000. The five-year average value for 1914-1918, inclusive, was $10,156,426,000, and in 1920 the value, based on December 1 prices, was $10,465,015,000. All this has been accomplished under difficult labor conditions, and at the same time the farmer is producing more with less labor than ever before. For the past three or four years it has been difficult to get hired help on the farm, and to hold down the cost of production the farmer must do all the work himself, with the assistance of his

If a system of Government warehouses, as provided in this bill, were established it would enable the farmer to receive a fair price for the products of his toll and his prices would not be fixed by the gamblers in farm products. This bill will put these gamblers, who "toil not, neither do they spin," out of the illegitimate business of price fixing. They have no right to sit in their costly furnished offices and tell the producers what they must sell their products for. The farmer is not situated like the manufacturer, who can pass the cost of production to the consumer by adding the increased cost to the price of his articles. He can not pass this cost on to the consumer. He can not add the increased cost in that manner and does not fix the price at which he sells. He is the only producer of the necessities of life in the land who has nothing to say about the price of his articles. The prices are fixed for him when he sells. He must sell for the price offered and pays the price asked when he buys necessaries for his family. The law allowing the price of his products to be fixed for him is wrong, inequitable, and should be remedied. You ask how it can be done. I shall try to show you the way and the remedy for the present poor prices of farm

During the war when the cry came for more wheat and other farm products our farmers responded nobly to the call and did much to save civilization. Laws should be enacted for his benefit, for when the farmer prospers everybody shares in his prosperity and there is plenty in the land. It means good wages for the people who work and enables them to live in a respectable manner. Other industries have been fostered and protected, and I believe that this Congress will do something tangible for the greatest industry in the land. Big business in computing their net incomes deduct their salaries as part of the cost of management. If the farmer should deduct a reasonable sum for his work and that of his wife and children, he would have but little, if any, net income left.

Oklahoma ranked sixteenth in 1920 and seventh in 1919 among the States in the total value of all crops. She is first in the production of oil, and raises more broom corn than all the other States combined. She also has millions of tons of coal, asphalt, salt, limestone, and granite. Cotton is the leading crop in the State in money value, but, while Oklahoma in 1920 ranked fourth in the United States in the production of cotton, she ranked third in the production of winter wheat, thirteenth in the production of corn, second in the production of kaffirs, thirteenth in the production of oats, and eleventh in the production of all grains. In addition to this, she produced $100,000,000 worth of milk and cream in 1920, and poultry and eggs to the value of $50,000,000. Therefore the merits of this bill are not directed to one class of products nor one section. It will benefit the wheat raiser of the north as well as the cotton farmer of the south. The largest city in Oklahoma is in my district, and the people are not all engaged in agriculture. This bill will stimulate business and thereby benefit all classes and professions. Agriculture is the chief industry in this Republic, and the one upon which all others depend. Therefore when we assist that industry we are assisting all others. That is why not only the farm associations of the country are for a law of this kind, but many business men and organizations as well. Some people who do not know seem to think that when a farmer gets 40 cents a pound for cotton, a dollar per bushel for corn, $2 per bushel for wheat, and so forth, he is becoming rich, but such is not the case. He is entitled to some rest and to enjoy some of the comforts of life. He is the main wealth producer, and should share in its prosperity. The farmer should get a price for his products that will pay him a reasonable wage for raising his crops, reasonable wages for his wife and children who assist thin in the work, reasonable pay for the use of his teams and tools, reasonable allowance for the depreciation of his farm implements, teams, and lands, and, in addition to all this, he should have a fair margin of profit and a square deal, and he is certainly entitled to this much.

I quote a statement from the Memphis Commercial Club of last year. This is the business men of that great city:

Memphis only prospers through agricultural prosperity. The farm bureau is the recognition of that fact by the Memphis merchants' interests. Help maintain the gift of Memphis to its trade territory, that "united we stand, for divided we fall."

The South's cotton crop averages annually 12,000,000 bales, produced by 2,000,000 families. Average family is man and wife and three children—equals three hands. Average family produces six bales. Three bales of cotton goes to pay land rent, foed bills, fertilizers, etc. Three bales left, or one bale for each hand at 40 cents per pound, or $200 per bale. This will allow each farm hand $16 per month. The average appropriation for a pauper at the county farm is $25 per month. Think it over.

Suppose an average family produces 10 bales of cotton, which is an extraordinary production, at 40 cents per pound. That would bring $2,000. If he is a renter, he must pay the landlord $500, which leaves fifteen hundred dollars for himself and family. Counting the work of himself and one team at $75 per month, which could not be done in 1919 and 1920, would make $900 per year. Then allow his wife the same salary as a hired girl to do the housework—and many wives help in the field—and this would amount to at least $50 per month, or $600 per year, which, added to the $900, would make fifteen hundred dollars. Then his children would be doing their work for nothing. Feed for his family and stock is not estimated in this statement nor taxes and depreciation of his working capital.

About the same ratio of loss will be true with other crops. A statement from the Department of Agriculture for 1920 shows that from 167 farms in three counties in the State of Iowa the average yield of wheat per acre was 18.5 bushels, at a cost of $1.88 per bushel. Forty acres at that price and yield would cost $1,391.20 to produce, and even at $2 per bushel the farmer would have $88.80, not estimating anything for his wife's labor, feed, depreciation of his capital, and so forth. A summary of 481 records prepared by the Department of Agriculture for 1919 from the States of Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Minnesota, North and South Dakota shows that the net cost of producing wheat for that year was $2.15 per bushel.

In normal times there is a loss of $70,000,000 to baled cotton as a result of permitting it to remain exposed to weather for months at a time without attention or covering of any kind, according to estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture, based upon experiments made. According to the department, in one instance, a bale of cotton placed out in the open, flat on the ground, with no covering, was damaged to the extent of 870 pounds at the end of eight months. Another bale placed on edge and turned over once a week lost 110 pounds. A bale placed on end but not turned over lost 78 pounds; a bale placed on timbers and turned once a week lost 49 pounds, while one placed on timbers and covered with a tarpaulin lost but 14 pounds. A bale of cotton placed in a warehouse for the same period lost but 1 pound.

The department's statement says:

When it is considered that in many instances the total cost of warehousing cotton, including insurance, is no greater than the insurance rate alone on exposed cotton, it would appear to be the utmost folly for a grower not to spend his money to a greater advantage. The insurance rate on exposed cotton is about $4 per hundred per annum. Every hundred dollars' worth of cotton stored in properly constructed warehouses can be insured for 25 cents per annum and the difference of $3.75 would in many cases pay all the other warehouse charges.

You ask how this warehouse bill would remedy the cotton and grain situation? It will furnish a place for storage and thereby prevent the more than $70,000,000 loss each year, on cotton alone, as estimated by the Department of Agriculture, and in addition will stimulate the producers to establish selling agencies and more directly market their products to the manufacturer and consumer. Under this bill producers must first establish a selling agency. I believe this warehouse bill and selling agencies will solve the problem of our marketing conditions. Agriculture is of so much importance that warehouses should be erected by the Government, and under its supervision, and thereby assist the producers of the absolute necessities of life to that extent. I think the Government should build them outright and pay all the expense, but have drawn this bill cooperatively between the States and also with farmers' cooperative associations.

The warehouse bill under consideration provides that when any State makes an appropriation for warehouses, or when any farmers' cooperative association having a selling agency makes an appropriation, the Government shall duplicate such appropriation. We now have a good roads law, and a wise law it is, to the same effect so far as the appropriations are concerned. Good roads are necessary for farmers, but not so necessary and will not stimulate agriculture so much as this bill provides. We can live and enjoy life without hard-surfaced roads, but can not live without agriculture. It is our most important industry, always has been and always shall be, and more should be done to encourage and protect it by the Federal Government, and it should be done now. Some say that the State should not engage in the warehouse business. As an answer to that criticism and as a precedent I will say that the Government built warehouses for the storage of liquor, and at the present time, after many months of prohibition, we still have 348 liquor warehouses in the United States. Is not cotton, corn, wheat, oats, wool, and other farm products about as important to provide storage facilities for as liquor, and especially in time of prohibition? I am sure that the gentlemen of this House want to assist and promote our great agricultural interests in this country, and I shall invite your careful and patient hearing to the provisions of this bill under consideration.

The Secretary of Agriculture is the head of the farming activities of the United States and is interested in the promotion of The bill provides that he, the president of the this industry. board of agriculture of any State where the warehouses are located, and a representative chosen by the farmers' cooperative associations in any such State shall constitute the board of This provision will encourage the organization of control. This provision will encourage the organization of farmers' associations, which are necessary to the farmers' interests and will have a wholesome effect upon the business of farming. The warehouses shall be under the management of the board of control, which is authorized to acquire property and property rights for the erection of the warehouses. is made for the employment of a warehouse superintendent in each State whose salary shall be paid by the State. Several States now have warehouse laws of some sort and employ a warehouse superintendent, but the provisions of the State laws will work in with the provisions of this bill. It is provided in this bill that the official standards of the United States for farm products shall be the official standards of the warehouses created by this till. It is necessary that uniform grades be established and not have thousands of unofficial graders, each of whom can set his own standards. It is to the best interests of the farmers and the country that the grading be under the supervision of the Government. The issuance of warehouse receipts is provided for which shall be negotiable and in the form prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. Adequate punishment is provided for any violation of the provisions of the act. The locations for the warehouses are subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Rural credits have been discussed and have been a favorable theme for orators and candidates for many years. I believe the most effective way to provide adequate and suitable methods for rural credits is for pro ision to be made for the Government to loan money on certain chattels as provided in this bill. If a farm product is properly stored, why not loan money on that warehouse receipt, which is a most satisfactory and safe investment? The warehouse receipts would be so convenient, and little expense attached in recording, as is the case in voluminous mortgages, that the local banks would be glad to loan money on the receipts. In order to prevent any association which might be formed against the system and which might be interested in banks, it is provided that if the local banks refuse to loan money on the warehouse receipts then loans shall be provided by the Federal Reserve Board.

By reason of the importance of the agricultural industry I have provided in the bill that stored products shall be insured at actual cost. I believe the Government should provide a system of insurance similar to the soldiers' insurance and that the Government or the State should pay for the insurance. Some may say that the Government must not go into the warehouse business as it leans toward socialism, but there will be a greater leaning to socialism if something is not done for the farming interests of the United States.

The bill provides that the board of control shall prescribe the fees to be charged for the storage of farm products, and the fees shall not be in excess of the actual cost of maintaining the warehouses. It has been said that if the farmers want warehouses let them build them at their own expense, like other business organizations. Farming is an entirely different business to merchandising, banking, and so forth. One of the greatest fights the farmers have had to make is to get money with which to finance their business. It is not organized like other business and more obstacles have to be overcome. You may say, "Let them organize." Organization of farmers' societies will be promoted if this bill is enacted into law. It will encourage the farmers of the country to greater efforts and the entire Government will prosper thereby.

Congress has seen fit to appropriate millions for the assistance of the railroads of this country and to guarantee them a certain rate of profit. But it is said that the railroads were taken over by the Government during the war and they must be turned back in as good condition as when taken. To this statement I say that the farmer's business was also taken over and he was called upon to plant wheat and the price was fixed. Then in the readjustment he lost millions, and it will be years before he recovers. Why not do as much for him as for the railroads? Were it not for the farmers there would be no business for the railroads and nothing to transport. It would be much less difficult for the railroads to recuperate than it will be for the farmer. He planted his crops when seed was high in price and employed labor at its highest in the history of the country. He paid more for his farming tools and feed. necessaries of life cost him more to make the crop of 1920. Many were driven into bankruptcy, and all that he asks is a square deal. He is certainly entitled to as much consideration as the railroads. He was as patriotic during the war and his occupation more important, for it was the farmer who fed and clothed the allied armies. He planted what the Government asked him to plant and never grumbled. He has done his part and is only asking for a small appropriation. It will assist him to recover from the disaster of last year. He could not borrow money on his crops and could not sell for enough to pay the harvesting. His faithful wife and children who assisted him in raising his crops were often left without sufficient elothes and his children in many cases were compelled to remain away from school. We must have the respect and cooperation of the farmers, always have had it, and will continue to do so if they are treated fairly. They are asking no special favors. Some say if warehouses were erected at public expense that it should be done by the different States. Why not let the different States construct hard-surfaced roads? Why does the Government assist in this enterprise? There is only one answer, and that is for the reason of their importance to the Government. In measures like the good roads law and laws as provided in this warehouse bill there should be cooperation between the Federal Government and the States. On account of the importance of the farming industry our courts have held that appropriations for farming associations are not unconstitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.
Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SWANK. One legislator said to me that this bill could not be passed for the reason that I was asking for an appropriation of $100,000,000. That would make a good start and I will be satisfied to have this bill passed with an appropriation equal to three present modern battleships. Just cut out an appropriation to that extent for one year and use it in building warehouses for farm products, or use a small amount of the appropriations for the railroads. The Government should operate the warehouses and therefore should own them. It will be a cheap investment for the Government to build these warehouses and operate them for the greatest of all industries.

Something must be done before another crop is harvested. It would be a hard matter to forecast the result should another price failure hit us like it did last year. The farmers of this land could not stand another disaster like that. In order to prevent it this Congress should act and act now. We can not afford and the Government can not afford to procrastinate on a matter of so much importance. It is of vital importance and close to the vitals of this Republic. Fostering our agricultural interests and the payment of good, living wages, that workers may enjoy some of the comforts of life as well as the necessities, is the best bulwark against bolshevism, which thrives on unrest and low prices. Prices that will return a fair per cent of profit on his investment to the farmer and good wages which will result will keep bolshevism from gaining a hold in this country. But the farmer and worker must not be neglected. Business of every kind will thrive with fair prices paid for farm products.

The provisions of this bill will bring the producer and the consumer closer together. It will save the loss on farm products occasioned by laying out in the elements. It will provide for the storage of large quantities of products that can be sold to a better advantage and will encourage closer cooperation among the producers.

The products can then be sold directly to the manufacturer and consumer and will eliminate many middle and useless profits. I want to see this Congress do something for agriculture. We maintain a great Department of Agriculture which has done and is doing a great deal for farming. We wisely employ experts in the different departments, farm demonstration agents and the like, but I think the enactment into law of this bill will give more beneficial and noticeable results than all else that is being done. Last fall the reserve banks closed down when it came to loaning to the farmer. I do not claim to know the reason why. Perhaps it was necessary, but under this warehouse bill there will be no reason for not loaning money on warehouse receipts. The Federal reserve act is one of the greatest pieces of legislation in the history of the American Congress, but, like all other creatures of man, it is not perfect. Section 28 of this bill enlarges the usefulness of the reserve act. I can see no reason why the Government should not loan money in this way. Bills have been introduced providing for the loaning of money on other chattels not so safe as is provided in this

If this is enacted into law it will bring the producers of the necessities of life into closer contact with the Government. They will then know that the Government is interested in their If the Government can fix farm prices, why can it business. not build warehouses and loan money on the products in storage? But it is said that the price fixing was a necessary war measure. The Government has power to fix prices at any time that the necessity arises. They also have power to appropriate money as provided for in this bill. It is only a question as to whether this Congress agrees with the bill and thinks the Government should assist the farmers in this manner. The amount asked to be appropriated is small when considering the greatness of our Government and the many and enormous appropriations for other purposes. This is only even-handed justice, and I believe that justice will still prevail.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SWANK. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman assumed the price of cotton in his argument at 40 cents.

Mr. SWANK. I said that because that was the price they got in 1919.

Mr. BLANTON. The fact is the gentleman has seen cotton sell as low as 5 cents.

Mr. SWANK. Yes. Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman indicate what his position is toward the bill that is before us?

Mr. SWANK. Yes; I will say that I am for it.

Mr. Chairman, of course I am a Democrat, and I believe in the great principles of that party like a little child believes in the love of its mother. But I do not belong to that class of citizens who do not like to see a man succeed in any kind of business or in public or private life. The President of this great Republic is our President as well as yours [applause], and you will never find any man. I believe, on this side casting any obstacles in the way of his great work of construction and any obstacles in the way of his great work of construction and great progress along the path of peace. I want to wish the administration success, because when it is a success it will benefit us all. We are American citizens first and Democrats and Republicans afterwards [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma

has expired.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Ten Eyck].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I wish to preface my remarks and make a statement as regards New York State's relative position to the various agricultural pursuits of the United States and the three great forces that tend to regulate and govern this country.

While its relative position in area to the other States is only 29, it is first in population, first in wealth, first in the production of dairy products, first in the value of dairy products, first in the production of buckwheat, first in the production of potatoes, first in the production of hay, first in the production of apples, second in the production of pears, and third in peaches.

I might enumerate its leadership in many smaller agricultural pursuits, but merely bring this to your attention to show you why we farmers in New York State are interested in the legislation which relates to the farming industry of the United States.

The country itself is like a great beehive and the people the This beehive rests upon a tripod, one leg of which bees therein. represents capital and the financier, another leg represents labor, and the third leg represents the farmer and the farm industry of this country. No tripod is stronger than its weakest leg. Finance has organized and has created large industries through cooperation, which necessitated the organization of labor, which represents the second leg. These two great forces in the past have tended to press down upon the farmer, and to-day the farmer's duty is to organize, so that he in turn will strengthen the third leg and make it as strong as either of the other two, not to dominate the country, but to put himself into a position so that he is as strong as either of the other two legs, so that he may cooperate with them for the benefit of the entire public. [Applause.] And that is why to-day we are considering legislation not only for his benefit but so that we can benefit the consuming public of the United States.

This bill takes care of a condition which heretofore has hampered the farmer in his line of work; that is, it deals with the marketing conditions of the country to-day. No matter what we consider to be the trouble with the farmer, we can trace it sooner or later to poor marketing conditions, whether they be of national origin, or whether they be of State origin, or whether they be of local origin. We have improved, I believe, in this bill the marketing of grain through two paragraphs, one of which puts the entire supervision and regulation boards of trade under the Secretary of Agriculture, and the second is the one that gives him an opportunity to gather statistics and make public the nefarious work, if there be such a condition, existing in any boards of trade, and take away from said

Now, gentlemen, I want to say a word in relation to what we call speculation and hedging. I believe that there are three kinds of dealers in the grain market to-day. One is the producer and the actual dealer in grain itself, the cash buyer and seller, or the man who makes the hedge, who is the actual producer, or the owner of grain by contract or otherwise.

The second is the speculator, the man who buys with an idea that he knows what is going to happen in the market and takes his chances for gain. The third is the manipulator. The manipulator is the man who, carrying out the definition of the word, endeavors through large sales or influence or combina-tion to create prices, whether they be of real value or not, or, in other words, to depress prices when it is to his benefit, through which he may be able to gain additional profit to himself.

This bill endeavors, through regulation and supervision by the Secretary of Agriculture, to do away with the manipulator, but not to eliminate the speculator, because he is a necessity, The farmers themselves have come before us and told us that they needed hedging; that hedging should be permitted to continue.

Now, who will the hedger hedge with? He can not hedge with himself or with the farmer. He has to have certain facilities so that he can hedge with somebody, and that man is the

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I am going to restrict myself entirely to the discussion of farm matters in detail and intend to treat farming from a business standpoint and its relation to other business interests of the country.

Production of the farm and the transportation of the produce are linked so closely together that one without the other would be of little value to the producer or the consumer. Therefore I will speak first of transportation.

We have a trinity of methods of transportation—the highways, the waterways, and the railways—each being particularly adaptable to certain classes of transportation.

The business of the highway is to take care of short hauls from the farms to the markets in the villages and cities or to the railway stations or docks of the navigable waterways.

The business of the railway is to take care of the long hauls of express or what might be called express and freight service.

The business of the waterways is to take care of the transportation of heavy commodities and bulky cargoes between great distributing centers.

The old adage that "competition is the life of trade" is no longer in vogue in the present generation. Cooperation is a slogan which means for insurance against failure. This holds true in relation to our different methods of transportation. We need the cooperation of the highways and the motor truck with the railways and the waterways. Junction terminal facilities should be fostered and built so that the railways, waterways, and the highways will have one point in every community where they can exchange their commodities from the short hauls to the long hauls and where great or small cargoes can be assembled for long hauls between large community centers either by rail or water; and to complete this system of transportation rural motor express should be extended into the rural districts where no express routes now exist. This can be accomplished through the cooperation of the individuals in the various communities that are now without express service.

When all of the above is accomplished the farmer will be in a position to have his produce transported from the farms to the marketing centers without delay and without loss to his perishable commodities and at the least expense and assure reliable delivery service to the consumers at all times of the year in the cities.

The next thing is marketing. It is absolutely essential that proper marketing facilities be installed in the big cities and thickly populated districts, so that a farmer will have a proper and adequate place to dispose of his produce. To accomplish this, the farmer must become properly organized and in turn secure the necessary laws to create and govern proper marketing centers where their produce will be sold and distributed honestly, where prices will be so regulated that his produce will not one day sell for exorbitant prices and the next day he will be called upon to sell at a loss. An honest, just rate should be the desire of the farmer to the consumer, so that investment. Only in this way will the great horde of consumers be assured of proper and sufficient food at all times.

I feel from past experience, from knowledge of the farming industry, from long study, and personal connection with the transportation methods of this country, and having been born and brought up on a farm, and now owning and operating a stock and fruit farm, I am well qualified to say from a practical standpoint that the farm bureau is the one organization with which all other farm organizations can affiliate and cooperate to make in each county, State, and Nation a farmers' organization of sufficient strength and which can obtain knowledge of an unusual scope to look after the farmers' interests

It is the duty of every farmer to affiliate himself with this organization, so as to obtain equal rights and justice for the farming community.

Justice will never be obtained unless farm legislation in the town, county, State, and Nation is governed so that legislation will not be passed without first giving consideration to the farming industry of this country, which is the largest one industry in the entire United States. It is larger than the United States Steel Corporation, the railway systems, and the automobile corporations combined, and this country can not be financially successful or the business can not become stable until the farming industry has become financially safe.

If a farmer is prosperous, he will be enabled to improve his living conditions in the home; he will be able to build for himself better schools; he will be able to give his children higher education both in relation to farming and the professions; he will be able to improve his tools and machinery and thus lessen the cost of production; he will be able to hire adequate labor and thus take away part of the drudgery and the long hours; he will be enabled to stand the increased taxation for improvement of rural highways so as to connect himself with better transportation facilities to the markets; he will be enabled to use up-to-date motor trucks for transportation.

tion purposes, and purchase and raise the best stock and poultry and other commodities, all of which will not only be a benefit to himself but to the world in general and the consumer in particular.

Many of the producers of raw food products have migrated to the city to obtain the greater wage paid in manufacturing plants, so that the farmer suffers at times from inadequate help, higher wages, shorter hours, and incompetent farm hands.

For several generations he has been weak financially, which has helped to make farm work a drudgery and has permitted the purchaser to take advantage of him.

As soon as it appears that he is coming into his own, the financier and laborer under the name of consumers, on account of previously being organized, were able to start a propaganda that the farmer was profiteering and not understanding the real cause of present high prices have set out to lower the price of the cost of living by reducing the price of farm products at the farm.

The real trouble is due to the unfair difference between the price that the farmer has to sell his produce for and the price

Let us assume that a farmer receives $8.37 for enough wheat to be ground into a barrel of flour, and the miller sells the barrel of flour for $12.70, the baker, in turn, will receive approximately $59 for the same barrel of flour in the form of bread, cake, and pie crust. The hotel man or restaurant keeper will receive in the neighborhood of $500 for that which was originally sold for $8.37 by the farmer. Of course, I am aware that the cost of labor, transportation, containers, interest on investments, other ingredients, and many other things are justifiably responsible for a proportionate part of this vast difference.

I know of an instance where a gardener sold tomatoes for 60 cents per bushel to a grocery man, and I inquired of the grocery man how much he was receiving for his tomatoes in retail, and the grocery man replied he was receiving 10 cents per pound, which means that he was receiving for the tomatoes $6 per bushel.

The cost of living can not be lowered by merely lowering the cost of food products. There are just as many other things that enter into the high cost of maintenance of a human being, such as rents, fuel, light, clothing, and household furnishings, together with such luxuries of life as the automobile and similar pleasures which within the last two or three years have been used as if they were the actual necessities of life.

I believe that we have got to give to the farmers the same consideration in legislative matters that we accord all other branches of industry. I further believe in the farmers organizing, and the complete cooperation and coordination of all the various farm organizations, whereby and through which they can establish a clearing house and work collectively for the best interests of the producers of the soil. I believe and strengly advocate the purpose of the grange—the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers' Union, the Dairymen's League, the fruit growers, the cattle raisers, and all other kindred associations and organizations whose desire and intention it is to improve farming conditions.

I believe in collective bargaining, for collectively they can protect themselves from bad laws and secure the enactment of more beneficial laws, all of which will tend to keep their sons and daughters on the farm, as well as their neighbors' sons and daughters, and will also attract labor back to the soil.

To-day on account of the improved modes of interstate transportation, such as railways, waterways, and highways, by means of the motor truck, the price of the commodities in one State governs the price of the commodities in another, and therefore it is essential that the farmers be one and stand for a proper understanding with the farmers of all the other States as regards the marketing of their products.

We must increase the capacity of our cold storage in the cities as well as assist the farmer to equip himself with adequate storage facilities on the farm, which is the only remedy that will prevent a feast and a famine. A feast and a famine, we all know, is unprofitable both to the producer and the consumer.

The cost of marketing farm products must be reduced. This can be done by lessening the time of the farmer in drawing his products to market, increase the size of the load by improving the highways, and cutting out the unreasonable profits of the middleman by creating a condition where the farmer will deal direct with the distributer or consumer.

We should prevent profiteering by a few speculators, but at the same time due consideration must be given to the legitimate commission houses. We must not create a feeling in the minds of the commission merchants who deal in food produce that will create uncertainty as regards the future, for if we do we will restrict the storing of products from the surplus in the large producing months. This condition can arise very readily, due to the fact that the farmers have not the facilities or proper storage capacity on the farms to take care of the surplus, the lack of which creates a shortage of supplies in the nonproducing menths of the year, which is detrimental to both producer and consumer

I feel it incumbent upon all the people throughout the entire United States to use their influence to get as many men as possible to go back to the farms, as well as to educate the children in farm life, help in prevailing upon those who are now on the farms to remain there I know of a number of farmers' sons who have left the farm to go to the cities within the last two or three years to earn the large wages which are now paid in the shops. This condition, that I know of personally, exists throughout the entire country, and can not help but reduce the output on the farms, at the same time increase the consumption of food in the cities. The farmer, the laborer, and the financier interests are the same; they must govern themselves by the motto "Live and let live."

We can not destroy wealth, nor should we attempt to enslave labor, neither should both of these endeavor to stamp out the very existence of the farming community of the country, because, after all, it is the farmer who actually produces that which sustains life and is one of the master divisions of organized society.

As previously stated, the farming industry is the largest and most important industry in the United States. It represents more money invested than any other one single line of business. such as the railroads, manufacturing concerns, or the United States Steel Corporation, or any other group. All other special combinations are small in importance, and, what is more, they all depend upon the farmers, as it was they who started with this world progress, and it will be they who will be on the job to the end of all time; for without the farming industry life will have to stop, and we all will have to live on air, which I do not feel will come to pass in our generation at least.

What are the farmers' interests? Their interests are in greater production, cheaper production, better production, better marketing facilities, collective selling, collective purchasing, better banking facilities, sufficient community storage plants, better roads and transportation facilities, better sanitary condi-tions in the household, modern rural schools, better rural delivery service, a sufficient supply of efficient labor, with an opportunity to get a fair return profit on their commodities for service performed and money invested, so that they will be able to give their children an adequate education, all of which in turn will tend to keep boys on the farm and eventually revert to the benefit of the country and the people as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very glad indeed to give my support to this legis-For a great many years producers of grain have felt themselves at an entire disadvantage-indeed, in a hopeless position-with regard to the marketing of their grain. It has been not only in the hands of speculators, it has been in the hands of gamblers.

I desire to compliment the committee upon the care they have exercised in reporting this legislation. I desire to compliment them on the result of their work. Through many long weeks and even months this committee has with open minds heard the testimony of everyone interested in this question. have heard the farmers; they have understood their position. They have heard the dealers and the speculators on the board of trade, and even the gamblers on the board of trade, although those gentlemen would refuse to recognize the designation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not posted on this. Would the gentleman give us the distinction between these two classes-between the gambler and speculator on the one hand, and the legitimate dealer or hedger in the market?

Mr. TOWNER. That will be done, I will say to the gentleman, by men who are a great deal abler to do it than I am. They have heard all the testimony and have brought in a bill here which will, in my judgment, make at least some attempt to regulate some of the inequalities that now exist. They have not attempted to take away the right of the farmer to make a contract for future delivery of his grain. That has been granted to him, of course, as it should be granted to every man. They have not attempted to prevent men who purchase grain from holding or making contracts for future deliveries That has not been attempted. It is the purely of grain. gambling processes or operations that are intended to be controlled by this legislation.

Now, gentlemen, manifestly that should be prevented. The farmer is at a great disadvantage in any respect, because of the fact that it seems impossible for him to fix the price of his product. Alone among all the producers or of the dealers in merchandise or in goods, alone among all of these, he can not fix the price, but must depend upon a market that depends upon other conditions. Those conditions ought to be not artificial conditions. They ought to be natural conditions. It ought not to be the case that the price of grain, which is the principal food product of the country, should be determined by the manipulation of gamblers, who have no interest whatever in either securing a fair price to the farmers or in giving a fair price to those who are the final consumers of grain. Their only desire is to speculate for their own advantage. would depress the price if it was to their advantage. They would raise the price if it was to their advantage. If by making combinations and manipulations and affecting conditions they could bring about their own profit they would do it, no matter what the effect might be upon the producers or the consumers of the country. If such conditions exist, certainly the people of this country have a right to prevent it. This legislation is intended to do that. As I have looked over the bill I have seen nothing in it that in my judgment would prevent any legitimate transaction in grain. I can see nothing in it that would prevent any man who was a producer from trying to take advantage of the conditions that might arise by which he could secure a fair price, nor do I see anything in the bill that would prevent those who are merchants in grain and not producers from dealing in it upon their judgment for future delivery without speculating in it upon a gambling basis. All of these things are provided in the legislation. I can see no reason why any man can not give this bill his support. It is an intelligent attempt, as it appears to me, to reach and remedy this great evil. Therefore I am very glad that the House will have an opportunity of putting into effect this, as I hope and believe, very beneficial legislation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I am not asking this in a controversial spirit, but the gentleman has studied this question and I wish to ask him what is the difference between a bona fide hedge and a gambling hedge?

Mr. TOWNER. I had rather that should be answered by some one who knows more about the technicalities of this

Mr. WINGO. I am not criticizing the gentleman, but I am serious in saying that for eight years I have been asking that question of every man with whom I came in contact who was supposed to know about this subject, and they have always given me the same indefinite answer. Does the gentleman know and can he tell me?

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can answer the gentleman's question to his entire satisfaction, but will try to answer it.

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PURNELL. If I understand the gentleman's question, he wishes to know the difference between a legitimate hedge and a gambling hedge?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. I should say a legitimate hedge is a hedge that butts a hedge.

Mr. WINGO. That is just as clear as mud to me.

Mr. PURNELL. I am not responsible for the gentleman's failure to understand what I mean by a hedge butting a hedge. Mr. WINGO. I appreciate that fact. If there is anybody here who understands it, I wish he would explain it.

-Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman does not understand what is meant by a hedge that butts a hedge?

Mr. WINGO. No.

Mr. PURNELL. Then I will ask the gentleman what kind of a hedge he is talking about?

Mr. WINGO. I have read the testimony and I have listened to these explanations, and I wish to know what is the difference between a bona fide legitimate hedge, the kind that you want to protect, and a gambling hedge.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman let me start again?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; gladly, with the permission of my friend

Mr. TOWNER. I yield all of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. PURNELL. I will yield myself two minutes in order to try to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. WINGO. Gentlemen all around the House are asking the same thing. I am frank enough to admit I do not understand these provisions. Now, can the gentleman enlighten the House's

Mr. PURNELL. I will attempt to do that. Let us suppose a case. Suppose I as a local producer should go to the elevator nearest my farm—if I were fortunate enough to have one and sell the elevator man 5,000 bushels of corn to be delivered next week or next month. My local elevator man has not the money to carry that transaction, and he has not the storage space in which to put the corn, but he wants to furnish me with ready money that I need to pay notes or to pay help. Now, in order to protect himself and in order to furnish me a market for the 5,000 bushels of corn that I must necessarily sell, he sells 5,000 bushels of corn in Chicago.

Mr. WINGO. On the board?

Mr. PURNELL. On the board, against the 5,000 bushels that he has purchased from me. That is a hedge. He has hedged against any loss in the purchase of my 5,000 bushels. That is a leg timate hedge, is it not?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know. I am just trying to find out. Mr. PURNELL. It is. That is a legitimate hedge. Now, the element that determines its ultimate legitimacy, or whether it is partly a gambling transaction, depends upon who buys it at the other end of the line.

Mr. WINGO. Now, may I ask a question, not in any spirit of controversy but for the purpose of really trying to acquire information?

Mr. PURNELL. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman sells to protect himself against fluctuation.

Mr. PURNELL. The elevator man does. Mr. WINGO. That is what I mean. The elevator man has gone on the board and he has sold on what is called a future contract in order to protect himself against fluctuation in price between the time that he has purchased from this farmer and the time the farmer is going to deliver.

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Who buys that contract? Is it bought by some speculator on the board?

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman asked me the question, What is the difference between a legitimate hedge and a gambling hedge?

Mr. PURNELL. If the man at Chicago who buys that 5,000 bushels that my elevator man sells, buys it as a hedge to protect himself on a legitimate bona fide sale, that is a completed, legitimate hedge. If John Jones, a speculator, bought it, who had no expectation of ever receiving the grain, never deals in grain at all for receipt or delivery of grain, then just in so far as that fact exists it is a gambling hedge. That is as near as I can come to telling the gentleman the difference. coming back to my first answer which the gentleman resented

Mr. WINGO. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon. Possibly I expressed myself awkwardly. I did not intend to be critical or resentful. I was just thinking aloud and was a little bit facetious, but of course not intentionally discourteous.

Mr. PURNELL. That is all right. We all get that way frequently. If the man who bought the hedge in Chicago was in earnest and wanted to buy 5,000 bushels to protect himself another deal, then one hedge butted the other hedge. dr. WINGO. When the time comes for the farmer to de-Mr. WINGO. liver the grain to the elevator man he does not undertake to deliver it to the man on the board, but closes it out by a counter sale and there is no grain delivered there. Now here is where the trouble seems to come in. Suppose to-day there are a million bushels of bona fide wheat offerings as a desire of a number of men to hedge, and there are only sufficient bona fide purchasers of the hedge to the extent of half a million; that is, you have a half million to butt the legitimate hedge.

Mr. PURNELL. And a half million of speculative gambling. Mr. WINGO. Does this bill cut out that half a million of speculative buying that does not butt the legitimate hedge?

Mr. PURNELL. It does not, and without a single exception the witnesses that came before the committee said that the opportunity to buy or sell the extra 500,000 bushels through what we call speculative transactions constitute insurance; that it gives liquidity and stability to the market; makes the lative feature without tearing down our whole market system. That would have a serious reflex action on the producer.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, if one-half of the transactions

Mr. PURNELL. You do not have to have any part of it bona fide; there are only two transactions that are taxable, and that is the "puts and calls," which we are trying to drive out of business. Every bushel dealt in on the board of trade in "puts and calls" is taxed 20 cents a bushel.

Mr. WINGO. Let me use another illustration. Suppose I make up my mind that wheat is going up, and I go to-day and speculate by dealing in futures to the extent of any number of bushels. You believe it is going down and you indulge in the opposite transaction. Neither one of us gets any wheat. Would that be taxable?

Mr. PURNELL. It would not unless your order brought it under the provisions of section 4. I tried to discuss that a while ago and am sorry the gentleman was not in.

Mr. WINGO. I was in, but I do not know anything about these technical provisions, and it is difficult to understand these fine distinctions.

Mr. PURNELL. I do not think there is a more highly theoretical or speculative question than is this question of grain futures, but the thing we hope to accomplish is to give the Secretary of Agriculture the right, in a quiet time when he can do it systematically and thoroughly to get into the business, find out whether there is anything wrong that ought to be remedied, and thus help us work out further remedial legislation if it be needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture on bringing in a bill of this kind. have always felt that contracts of the kind enumerated in this legislation should be taxed in a proper way in order that they might pay their proportionate expense for running the Govern-

But I want to bring to the attention of the House to-day a statement relative to tubercular conditions in the United

TUBERCULOSIS.

The greatest scourge that humanity has to deal with is the dreaded disease known as tuberculosis. It is practically impossible to cure a person suffering with this disease unless he is taken to some place where the climatic conditions are such that the malady will yield to proper treatment. This being true, every person interested in the welfare of humanity should likewise be interested in securing information relative to the geographical condition of the United States with relation to tuberculosis.

IDEAL LOCATION.

It is not generally known to all of our people that there is one section of the United States where it has been proved that tubercular germs do not exist and where the climatic and other conditions are such that practically every person who is taken to this section suffering from tuberculosis in its incipiency can be restored to normal health. The reason I am bringing this to your attention I am hoping that this information may go out to the people so that some unfortunate who is suffering with this disease may profit by the same, and that those who are charged with the responsibility of selecting a site for the Government tuberculosis hospital to be constructed in the near future may be prevailed on to carefully investigate the statements I am making and then later locate this institution in the section best adapted for the cure of tuberculosis.

FRENCH SURGEONS.

Practically all of the Members of Congress have had brought to their attention a statement which has been prepared by Hon. D. P. Marium, a prominent editor of Woodward, Okla., in which he calls attention to a statement made some years ago by a body of eminent French surgeons who were sent to the United States by their Government to find, if possible, a suitable location for the treatment of tuberculosis. The following is a statement that has been taken from the report made to the French Government:

In the United States of North America on the 100° of longitude west of Greenwich we found an area the like of which does not exist in the world. From a central point on the said 100° midway between the Arkansas River in Kansas and the Red River in Texas, a circle drawn with that point as the center with a radius of 100 miles will contain an area within which tubercle bacillus does not and can not exist.

This report was made before very much of the territory in this section was opened for settlement. Let us see how it market flexible; and is a necessary factor in the whole transaction. Under our present system we can not destroy that speculin this area than is to be found in any other State. Practically all of the congressional district that I have the honor to represent is in this prescribed area. Roger Mills and Harmon Counties, according to the census of 1910, have a population of 24,189. Both of these counties are bounded on the west by the 100° of longitude west of Greenwich, and it is remarkable that during the past 20 years no death has ever been reported from this disease. The other nine counties in the district report 30 deaths, and according to the report of the Public Health Department all of these immigrated from other States except a few of the Indians who contracted the same while away at Government schools. Summing up the facts it is found that no person has ever contracted this disease from natural conditions while residing in this section, and to my personal knowledge hundreds have recovered their health who have gone there for this purpose.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS.

It seems that the all-wise Creator in arranging the elements has taken into consideration that there must be some place provided that would be suitable for the ailments of humanity, and that this is the section of the world that has been set aside as an Eldorado for those who are afflicted with the dreaded white plague. The altitude is neither too low nor too high; it is neither too dry nor too wet; the ozone is a little purer and more invigorating than is to be found in any other place in the world. The water is obtained from underground stratas of sand, which filters it in such a way as to leave it as pure as any to be found anywhere. The winds blow practically all of the time, thereby causing all dead vegetable or animal tissue to dry up instead of rot. In the summer time the days are warm and the nights very cool; in fact, double blankets are very desirable for use at night during the hottest months of the year.

IDEAL LOCATIONS.

There are many progressive, hustling little cities located in this section that would make ideal places for the location of a tubercular hospital if it is decided to locate the same in some city; however, the thought has come to me that this institution could be located in the Wichita game preserve, which is a few miles east of the 100° longitude line, that this would provide the most ideal spot in all of the world for this kind of a This reserve is about 30 miles square. mately 500 native wild deer are protected by both State and National laws, and they are free to roam at will; a most wonderful herd of buffalo, numbering nearly 200, are in the big pasture near the headquarters house; a herd of elk, numbering approximately 150, graze on the mountain sides; and numerous herds of wild turkeys and other small game are likewise to be found in this park. Beautiful mountain streams trickle down into the valleys below and the lakes furnish protection for the thousands of wild ducks that stop in this section in season. [Applause.] A more ideal location for this kind of hospital could not be found. The same could be constructed at the right elevation on the top or the side of some mountain out of most wonderful native granite, which compares favorably with any building stone to be found anywhere. Tubercular patients should be given every opportunity to build up their health. Proper diet, coupled with necessary exercises and surroundings, is very necessary; and, according to my viewpoint, the climatic conditions, the beautiful scenery, and the other natural advantages of this park make this place ideal for the location of this institution in one of America's great playgrounds. [Applause.]
Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Young].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to congratulate the author of the bill [Mr. Tincher], the Committee on Agriculture, and also the Members of the House and the country that this bill has been brought out of the committee so promptly. It seems to me that with this early start we ought to be able to get some legislation on the subject of future trading before this Sixty-seventh Congress is a thing of the past.

Some people seem to think, judging from questions asked, that the committee has not gone far enough. When you consider the difficulty and complexity of this question, the wonder is that they have gone as far as they have. It would seem to me that perhaps they have gone as far as prudent men ought to go at this time until further information is obtained by actual experience under the law. We have had to-day different defini-tions of a hedge. So far as this bill is concerned, the hedge might be defined as insurance against price fluctuation. If you get that idea, that this is an insurance bill, then you will understand better what the House Committee on Agriculture is trying

The testimony before the committee was very clear along the line that some kind of price insurance is necessary, although they did not call it that. They called it hedging. It is interesting to recall that all kinds of insurance was at one time gambling. Away back centuries ago a man in London would bet $5,000 against $50 that a boat would never return to port. There was no sanction in law and no regulation on the part of the Government. The same was true of other kinds of insurance. Finally, Governments began to see the necessity for regulation, and, of course, all that kind of insurance was greatly improved by Government regulation. It was called interference then as now but it was beneficial. We have had controversies at different times in this country as to the wisdom of the Government regulating insurance. We have it even at this late day. There was the great controversy in the State of New York in respect to regulation of the great life insurance companies not very long ago.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Where do you get your authority to levy a 20-cent tax on a bushel of wheat in the transaction?

Mr. YOUNG. As I understand this bill it marks out the broad lines under which these great exchanges can do business, and you only pay the 20 cents a bushel when you get entirely

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Where does the gentleman get his authority to levy the 20 cents?

Mr. YOUNG. That is under the general taxing power of the Government under the Constitution.

Mr, JOHNSON of Mississippi. Under section 8 of the Constitution? Is that the authority under which the gentleman is proceeding?

Mr. YOUNG. Does the gentleman question the right of the Government to raise money by taxing grain transactions?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I do not; that is just the point I am getting at. The gentleman now proposes to impose a penalty or prohibit the doing of a certain thing, and his bill states that it is for the purpose of raising revenue; and the only authority that the gentleman has for writing in the bill is under section 8 of the Constitution, the taxing authority. The gentleman proposes to tax out of business a thing that he could not do otherwise. What does the gentleman say on that point?
Mr. YOUNG. This is not the first time that the Congress has passed a law that would be regarded now as constitutional, but it might have been regarded as unconstitutional 50 years ago. We assume that the Supreme Court will construe the Constitution itself liberally.

If there is any virtue at all in what they call future trading, I think it will be very greatly improved and become very much more valuable if the Government regulates it. If hedging is price-fluctuation insurance, it will be a mighty sight better if the Government sits in on it and regulates it than what we have now without any regulation of any kind. At Monte Carlo they have a gambling proposition in which the roulette wheels pay a certain percentage to the house. It is a known percentage, and in so far as the conduct of those establishments are concerned, they are run according to that idea. So far as I know, there is no crookedness in the handling of those machines. Everybody knows it is gambling and that there is a percentage in favor of the house which is a definite mathematical proposition, but the business is conducted according to that on the square. Now, so far as these grain exchanges are concerned, there are no exact and definite rules of the game.

These future contracts on the great exchanges are ambiguous and difficult to understand, and in the matter of administration they operate them crookedly. Government control and regula-tion will correct much of this. Government regulation is often a blessing in disguise. It proved so to the packers, who opposed Government meat inspection. Who knows but that even the grain exchanges will find in the future that future trading handled absolutely on the square as price fluctuation insurance will place the grain business on a better foundation than it has ever had heretofore.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am interested in the question of wheat, and the gentleman will recall that when the Government had a guaranteed price for wheat, when that guaranteed price was terminated that wheat declined very rapidly. What, in the gentleman's mind, is the cause of that? Did these exchanges have anything to do with that sudden reduction?

Mr. YOUNG. I can not yield to the temptation to discuss the Government wheat price guaranty, as I have only 10 min-

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman is well advised about all of these matters, and that is why I asked the question.

Mr. YOUNG. The losses which the farmers suffer are not all traceable to future trading. It is only one problem.

Mr. CLAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. YOUNG. Very briefly.
Mr. CLAGUE. I will state to the gentleman that instead of going down wheat went up.

Mr. YOUNG. One of the best features of this bill is that which will enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect a fund of reliable and dependable information in respect to future trading. It is almost impossible for Congress now to obtain dependable information concerning the amount and character of transactions on the grain exchanges.

Mr. Chairman, during the hearings before the committee on this subject I had the honor to present the views of John M. Anderson, president, and Benjamin Drake, attorney, for the Equity Cooperative Exchange, St. Paul, who had prepared able and comprehensive briefs on the subject of future trading. A number of their requests have been complied with in the bill now before us. It pleases me greatly to know if this bill passes cooperative concerns such as the Equity Cooperative Exchange, the great farmers' sales agency of the Northwest, must be given membership on the grain exchanges. That alone is a tremendous step in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Kansas is to yield me 10 minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of the immigration bill I promised to take up the question of unemployment. I want to indict the two leading political organizations and accuse them of lack of knowledge and of competence in dealing with great social and economic problems. Both the Republican and Democratic Parties are intellectually bankrupt. They repeat the old slogans, slogans a century old. We hear "protection," "free trade"; again "protection" and again "free trade," as if employment or unemployment had anything to do with it. We have unemployment in countries which have the most of protection and in countries of free trade. We have unemployment in countries from which there is emigration; we have unemployment in countries in which the population is very small. Take, for instance, Australia, which is the size of the entire Continent of Europe and almost the size of the United States, with a population of not exceeding 5,000,000 people, and they have unemployment. Unemployment is ordinarily the result of maladjustment in industry, of the absence of order in industry. Take the seasonal industries, such as the building trade. Take the industries which serve the needs of fashion, the caprices of women. Take the ladies' garment industry. New York City, with an invested capital of more than $300,-000,000. It furnishes employment during seven or eight months Every change of fashion involves a change of material, of machinery, a shifting of workmen, and the displacing of men. In the building industry they work four or five months a year and are idle the rest of the year. In the mining industry we have exactly the same situation. The shoe industry—strangely enough, even the shoe industry is seasonal, although people have to wear shoes all the time. The shoe industry is subject to the change of fashion. I understand that there are some 272 styles of shoes, and every change of style involves the displacement and the separation of the worker from his job.

When a farmer needs men he welcomes them with a brass band, but as soon as he gets through with them they are chased out or arrested as vagrants.

It stands to reason that every new machine which saves labor, every new appliance, every new method of division of labor, every new system of efficiency, results in the temporary idleness of workers. Of course, ultimately every new machine is a benefit to society, unless it is used for war or for destructive purposes. But it is a very poor consolation to the man who loses his job to know that some time in the future society as a whole will benefit by the introduction of a new machine. The abandonment of an industry, the loss of an old market, the gain of a new one, an upward or downward revision of the tariff, all these things affect employment. Competition in industry means the rivalry between the workers for a job and necessarily involves the presence of unemployment, while in industries which have reached a state of monopoly unemployment can be produced artificially in order to weaken the resistance of the workers. Just now the state of employment depends a great deal also on the international situation.

What I complain of is that the two old political parties have failed to take up that question. We do not know even approximately the number of unemployed. I have seen it estimated all the way between 3,000,000 and 5,000,000 men. To think of it! There is no clearing house of information on the subject. To think that with the gigantic industries that we have built up, and with the expensive governmental machinery which we maintain, we should not be in a position at a moment's notice to know the exact number of unemployed in the country. If there are 4,000,000 of them, it means that one-seventh of the breadwinners of the United States are out of employment to-day. You realize what unemployment means. It means the destruction of all standards of life. It is destructive of the independence of men.

In many a State, where the protective tariff has been an issue, men have been compelled against their convictions to vote the Republican ticket, not because of a threat, but because of a prediction, repeated so frequently that it assumed the character of a threat, that if the protective tariff would not be adopted, the factories would be shut down.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. I will, if I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not see the gentleman from Oklahoma here.

Mr. LONDON. I do ask, Mr. Chairman, that I may be permitted to extend my remarks.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The two gentlemen from New York ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to do so, I wish to say that I believe we have had the most accurate record of the debates and proceedings during the past few months of any time during the past eight years, and it has been due to the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic] has insisted that the record kept here must be a record of what is actually said and done. I really think it is worth while to have it kept that way. As far as I am concerned, I feel as though the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic] ought to be complimented for taking it upon himself to see that the RECORD of mented for taking it upon himself to see that the Record of this House is kept in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Ten Eyck] and his colleague [Mr. London]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Now I will yield.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Suppose we ascertain the number of unemployed in the United States—and the gentleman is complement that the two old parties are responsible for that complaining that the two old parties are responsible for that condition-what would the gentleman do about it after we find

Mr. LONDON. I will come to that, if the gentleman will only permit me to develop the subject. It is understood that in order to legislate on a subject you have to understand; you have to know

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is the reason I am asking the gentleman for information.

Mr. LONDON. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt. have to develop my subject connectedly. You must know the subject. My complaint is that most of you do not know and most of you do not care to know. The great labor problem is something which completely escapes your attention. You content yourselves with denouncing those who desire a change. The present method is to denounce every suggestion of a new thought as bolshevism. A man who eats fried eggs with a spoon is a bolshevist. Great patriots travel throughout the country and address so-called patriotic societies, warning men against the coming of immediate, violent revolution. We have these two groups in the United States, one at the very bottom of society, helpless and impotent, with scarcely sufficient money to enable them to furnish 500 copies of a pamphlet, and then we have a powerful plutocratic group on top controlling the medium of public information, and very often exercising a baneful influence in government, and who say that a violent revolution is imminent. They say so in order to have us adopt a policy for the crushing of liberty, for the destruction of the freedom of the press, and to prevent the workers from organizing. It is the same group that want us to take care that no radical ideas are imported, as if you could export or import an idea, as if the world of thought could be legislated against.

Now let me get back to the unemployment problem. First of all, let us gather information. What is the next proposition? The next thing is to give to labor the right which is now being denied to it, to follow the law of evolution and to organize.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Where is that right being denied? Mr. LONDON. That right is being denied by ingenious methods to restrain workers from exercising their legitimate functions.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not think the gentleman from New York can point to a single place in this Union where by any law of the United States laborers are prohibited from organizing.

Mr. LONDON. Well, I say there is now a very strong effort being made to prevent the workers from organizing by passing legislation prohibiting strikes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Where?

Mr. LONDON. You take the Kansas industrial court, and you take the various decrees of the courts prohibiting them from striking, in effect.

What you say is this: "You are allowed to strike, but your strike must not be effective. You are permitted to form unions, but they must not be 100 per cent organized, because as soon as you perfect your organization you have reached the stage of You may organize, but your efforts must be futile. monopoly. You may form unions, but they must be abortive organizations, and such as will not accomplish the objects for which they are formed." There seems to be an effort on the part of capital to crush all labor organizations. This is not only morally but economically unsound.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman know of a place in the world to-day where labor is so much oppressed as it is in the country where his ideas are in absolute control-in Russia?

Mr. LONDON. Well, the gentleman is utterly wrong in his statement. My ideas are not in control anywhere. I do not know whether I would like to have all my ideas in absolute control, anyway. [Laughter.] I know that every idea must be tested by the limitations of time and space. I know that; I know that there is no perfection except in the grave. There is no perfection in this life, and I do not expect to see any perfection. The man who amounts to something seeks to improve, and as soon as he has lost the idea of improvement he ceases to be a man. The statesman who tells his country that it has reached the highest state of perfection is doing harm instead of good.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. I assume that the gentleman would be willing to inform the House what his judgment is as to the comparative status of this country and Russia.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, Russia is in misery to-day. How can you compare the two countries? How can you compare this country with a country where they had a thousand years of the rule of czarism, where they have had an ignorant, superstitious church, almost heathenlike? How can you compare it with a country which has had 400 years of political development and which has enjoyed the blessings of religious freedom and of political democracy? It is only three years since they have overthrown czarism in Russia.

Mr. KETCHAM. Under what kind of institutions has that progress been made if it has not been under the kind of institutions that are established here?

Mr. LONDON. Exactly; and because this country has reached this stage of progress the man who says we can progress no further disregards the law of evolution. The reason we have made such progress is because we had such a great opportunity. It is not enough for you to say, "We have had a Lincoln and a Jefferson, and other great men." Because Lincoln was a great man it does not follow that we must be small

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PETERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given one more minute. I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Texas give me five minutes more?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman five minutes more

Mr. PETERSEN. I would just like to ask the gentleman from New York why this country was prosperous if the two major bodies or parties have no brains?

Mr. LONDON. The country enjoys prosperity in spite of the two old parties. [Laughter.] The gentleman knows that the overwhelming success of the Republican Party was not the result of the indorsement by the people of a particular economic to relieve the distress caused by unemployment.

policy advocated by the Republicans. The gentleman would not care to give me an opportunity to analyze the reasons for the success of the Republicans. You know the Republicans were elected by disgust. [Laughter.] You know that. People wanted to punish the Democrats; that is all. [Laughter.] So they elected you instead. They jumped from the frying pan into the fire, finding comfort in the process of jumping. is all there is to it. [Laughter.] But they will not find much comfort in staying there. That is my hope. [Laughter.]
Mr. WILLIAMS. Why do not they ever jump in your direction? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. Gentlemen, let us be serious. All I was trying to do was to present to you this question: First of all, we must give an opportunity to organized labor to develop. financiers and leaders of industry are mistaken when they think that their salvation lies in the direction of crushing the labor unions. Man and man must be permitted to organize and unite, just as dollars and dollars are permitted to organize into corporations. It is as clear as day. In the case of corporations you have united action; action united in a corporation. You must permit soul and soul, man and man, to unite in organization for the improvement of their condition. I wish I could have on the floor of Congress a discussion where a man would say, "I represent the Lumber Trust, and I speak for the lumber industry," and another man "I represent the Sugar Trust, and I speak for the sugar industry," and then somebody who would say, "I represent the railroad workers; I worked with them and know their needs," and then have a discussion of the programs proposed by the various interests so as to come to an understanding of the general program which should be adopted by the people as a whole. Then we would have more earnest and frank and honest legislation.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there, so as to get into the RECORD the fact that his statement there is equivalent to an approval of the soviet system in Russia?

Mr. LONDON. No; my statement is this: The evil of the so-called soviet system to-day is that in the excess of revolutionary zeal they have taken a small portion of the population, the industrial group, and through the dictatorship of that small group they attempt to rule society. That is the difficulty and the vice of the so-called soviet system.

Mr. GRIFFIN. But the virtue of it the gentleman says is in having various groups represented. Is that what he says?

Mr. LONDON. No; they prevent any group from finding expression except the industrial group. That is the vice of their system.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Is the gentleman's speech equivalent to an expression of approval of the soviet system?

Mr. LONDON. One moment. Let me say for myself what I think. The gentleman will realize that all modern legislat on is economic legislation. We have no more legislation along oral lines. The decalogue is sufficient for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. moral lines.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman give me two minutes more,

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman two min-

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman at this point—
Mr. LONDON. Please do not take away my two minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman answer whether he approves of the soviet system or not?

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman does not know a thing about the soviet system. Our legislation is all economic legislation, Protection or free trade involves economic legislation. we legislate an eight-hour railroad day, it is economic legisla-When we adopt a law to protect against gambling in grain, that is economic legislation. All modern legislation is economic. My theory is that we would be better off if economic groups would honestly and plainly speak in their own names, instead of speaking in the name of the whole of society. When a protectionist speaks, he undertakes to speak in the name of the entire American people, instead of speaking in the name of the particular industry that desires protection, and so does every other group.

I submit that the continuous interruptions have made it impossible for me to take up the constructive side of the question. The soviet system has been brought up several times in the discussion. It has no relevancy to the subject. I have never championed the soviet system. I am endeavoring to present an American problem in the hope that an Amer can solution will be found for it. At the first convenient opportunity I shall again take up the subject. In the meantime, I shall present in as few words as possible an outline of a program calculated

That would be as follows:

The establishment of a national network of unemployment exchanges.

The adoption of a national minimum wage law.

Unemployment insurance for those that are involuntarily

The complete elimination of child labor.

The reduction of hours of labor in keeping with increased productivity.

The reclamation of arid and of swamp lands.

Reforestation.

The exploitation of natural resources contained in the public lands of the United States.

Prevention of floods and inundations.

Building of public roads, canals, and similar public under-

The authorization of a suitable loan-in the form of bonds bearing a nominal interest-to municipalities, to cooperative building loan societies, and to labor organizations for the construction of the 1,500,000 homes of which there is a shortage at the present moment.

The creation of a special commission whose function it shall be to study the problem of the regularization of industry so as to reduce to a minimum the evil of unemployment.

Of course it goes without saying that the adoption of a policy of conciliation in our international relations with all of Europe, including Russia, will help bring about order in the world and help bring new life to industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am always interested in what the gentleman from New York [Mr. London] has to say on this floor. He is a very intelligent man. We respect his opinions, and, unlike a great many who profess his beliefs, he seems to be sincere and entirely honest in his views, and I believe he is. He started out this afternoon by indicting both the Republican and the Democratic Parties. Of course, I agree to half of that indictment. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman appears on behalf of the prosecution! [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from New York indicts both the Republican and Democratic Parties for their conduct of the affairs of the United States, and he particularly pointed out the question of unemployment, and said he thought there ought to be set up somewhere an agency to ascertain the number of unemployed. At that point I asked him what he would do with the information when he had it, and he promised he would give me an answer to that question; but I submit to this committee that in his 25 minutes he did not again directly refer to the solution of the problem of unemployment,

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield me three minutes?

If he will do so, I will give him an answer.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have only five minutes, and the gentleman had 25. I did not know before that the gentleman was a believer in the doctrine of 16 to 1. [Laughter.] Now, it is rather remarkable that the gentleman from New York should indict both the Republican and the Democratic Parties for their conduct of the affairs of this Government, and then in the next breath admit that opportunities for advancement and conditions of life in the United States are better than in any other country. and that in those respects no other country can compare to the United States. During the whole history of the Republic one party or the other, either the Democratic or the Republican Party, has been in control of the affairs of this Government. Yet notwithstanding that wonderful, marvelous development the gentleman stands here and indicts them both for bringing into being and conducting the greatest civilization that the world has ever seen.

But the gentleman suggests that our system is not perfect. We all grant that. Of course, we have not reached perfection, but compared with the other political systems of the world our institutions bear the most favorable comparison. But the gentleman says there are millions of unemployed in the United States. That is true.

One of the reasons for that is the fact that we have in the past built up artificial forces that have affected trade, and our friends on the Republican side are largely to blame for that, because they have built up the industries and the congested centers of population at the expense of the rural districts through the prohibitive protective tariff system which has taxed the country districts, and taken those taxes and paid them over to the industrial centers, thereby building up an artificial condition of industry that has attracted to the centers of population great masses of people who, in times like these, when European trade is not open to American commerce, become unemployed.

Now, what is the remedy? Would the gentleman suggest that we open public workhouses to give them employment? was tried in France after the revolution of 1830; I believe it was after Louis Philippe came into power.

Mr. LONDON. That was in 1848, and the system was organized by people who wanted to smash it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. At any rate, they tried public workhouses in France at the time of one of their revolutions and invited all of the unemployed to come and labor at the expense of the State. What was the result? It was a miserable failure, and even those who proposed it had to admit that it was a failure, and they found that it was such a failure that it was both bankrupting the Government and absolutely disorganizing the industries of France. I would not charge the gentleman from New York with professing ideas of sovietism, because he disavows them; but at the same time gentlemen in the Hall seem to draw the conclusion that the irresistible logic of the remarks of the gentleman from New York leads to sovietism.

has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I should like a little more time.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman five minutes

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Gentlemen contend that the logic of the gentleman from New York irresistibly leads to soviet.sm. I will allow him to square himself with that charge. I do not make it. But the gentleman is at least frank in his statement when he says that his ideas of government and of industry not only are not in operation in any place in the world, but he is candid and frank enough to admit that he hopes they will not be in operation. Now, the gentleman perhaps has a beautiful theory, but the trouble about his theories is that they never have been put into successful operation anywhere, nor will they ever be put into successful operation anywhere. The trouble about a great many of the unemployed in the United States is that they want to select their own employment, they want to select their own conditions under which they will be employed, and they want to select their own compensation. They want to congest themselves in the great cities and to have somebody give them positions at their own wages, on their own terms, instead of going out into the open places and seeking employ-

They want to remain in the congested districts in the great cities, and unless somebody offers them a position at their wage and at their terms, instead of seeking employment somewhere else they want to extort employment at the end of some violent act or at the end of a torch. I will say that if some of the unemployed in the great cities of the country will go out into the agricultural, ranch, and mining districts they can secure employment. Last year in my section of the country labor was worth three times what it was in normal times, and sufficient amounts could not be obtained at any price. At the same time in certain centers of the country reports were sent out that there was unemployment and labor could not be distributed over the country as needed. The trouble with the gentleman from New York is that he has become saturated with the theory and atmosphere that surrounds congested centers, demanding the right to eat. He says a man who is hungry has got to eat. Yes; and I want him to eat, but I want him to eat in the sweat of his own brow and not in the sweat of some one else's brow. [Applause.] If the gentleman wants such to eat, let those who desire to eat earn the bread that they eat. Let them produce something to eat and not content themselves by staying in New York and Chicago, demanding that some one else shall produce the things to eat out of the ground, pay the transportation of the article to the market, and bring it to their doorstep and deliver it to them without getting in return actual compensation in labor.

Now, I do not want my remarks to be construed as an attack on the gentleman from New York, because I respect him, but when he gets up and makes the open charge against the existing system and order of things I want him to point out something that will supply the remedy, and I submit to this House that in his complaint against the existing system and against the facts of existing unemployment, he has totally failed to show anything that his system or those who advocate it can offer to solve the question.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield? I know he does not wish to place me in a false position. The gentleman must know that I have been interrupted so frequently by questions that I have not been able to develop my statements, and that is why I asked leave to extend my remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know the gentleman did, and I tried to help him secure consent to extend his remarks. But I suggest that he will have to extend his remarks a long way if he offers a solution of unemployment that will square with his theory and prove practicable. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson].

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I trust that it will not be amiss with the membership of the committee to come back from the theoretical to the practical, because every consumer of food and every producer of grain, in my judgment, is interested in this legislation. I am very glad that the committee in bringing out this bill confine it to one subject. The first time I started to prepare a bill I made it cover all food products. I found that there were so many phases to the different food products included in agricultural products that it was impossible to cover all in one bill. The second bill I introduced, like the one introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], confined the bill to grain alone, and it is the grain proposition that I think should be the subject of this legislation, and I hope that you will confine it solely to the control of future grain speculation and in that way limit the scope of the bill.

There are only five or six future markets at the present time in grain. The greatest future market is at Minneapolis for wheat and at Chicago for corn. They have a future market in Kansas City, one in Toledo, and some future market in wheat at Baltimore. In my judgment, the futures could be limited to actual sale and delivery of the commodity, but this bill does not attempt to do that. It is the belief of those experienced in grain markets that if you limit the futures to the delivery of the commodity you will destroy the hedging privilege. In other words, in the bill I introduced I said that contracts were subject to the tax unless you could show a final delivery of the property. Every experienced man that has been long in the grain business came in and said if you pass such legislation you would do away with the future markets. If that is the case, it may be well to take the step you are taking in this bill. I am for the bill and believe it has many beneficial provisions. I believe it will inure to benefit of the grain pro-

The one thing I object to is that instead of slapping the wrists of the fellows that manipulte the market I would like to hit them with a sledge, but probably that is not wise legisla-tion at the present time. What do we do in this bill? You put tion at the present time. out of business puts and calls, and that is one of the abuses of the present system. That is one of the worst abuses. Why? Because to-day the outside fellow is simply in there dealing on the margin alone, not attempting to benefit anybody or helping anyone to produce grain or attempting to benefit anybody but himself. He simply bids on a margin for his own benefit, and I believe he is the man to eliminate. What else do you do? You say that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the right to license boards of trade at market places where grain is sold; that he shall have the right to revoke the license if the privilege is abused. I do not know but that we are putting in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture an incorrigible child that has known no law and recognizes no God; but, being from Iowa, I have every confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture, for he is a student of the grain market, and has been for more than a third of a century, having studied it all his life, and I believe he can well establish rules and regulations that the beard of trade must operate under that will be beneficial to the producer and the consumer of grain in this country.

What would it permit him to do? Why, it would permit him to impose on these boards the requirement that they should limit the amount of grain one concern could handle in one day. These recommendations have been made by some members of the boards of trade. I believe that a great majority of the grain men are honest fellows. I believe they are trying to run their business in a straightforward, legitimate way, and that they are as much afraid of the big speculator and manipulator as the producer is and would welcome the pressure from the Secretary of Agricul'are that would permit them to impose upon their boards rules and regulations that would prevent a man coming in there with extensive credit, unlimited funds, and buying for 10 days or 2 weeks and then selling for 10 days or 2 weeks, simply paying for the margin that he could create on the large quantity he could handle. I believe the Secretary of Agriculture will be wise in his discretion in working out these regulations. Why? Because he knows that he must not abuse the privilege; that he can not destroy the present market, because it is the only system we have to deliver the producer's crop to the consumer, and if he did destroy the market he would seriously handicap the people of this country, because it would affect the producer and the consumer alike. Therefore, the present market system must not be destroyed. It must be encouraged and it must be controlled and operated along the lines that will produce the best results for both the producer and the consumer.

The only indictment I think we can charge against the present marketing system is the fact that nearly all of the best writers on markets tell us that from 7 to 10 per cent of our product, wheat and corn, that is exported fixes largely the price that we can charge for the balance here in this country. that is a serious indictment against the present marketing system. I believe that under the present sales organization being organized by the cooperative concerns of this country whereby they expect to extend their storage facilities, whereby they expect to have something to say as to when their crops shall be sold and what they shall be sold for, will be very beneficial in doing away with the present theory that the export part of our crop shall fix the market for the balance of the crop that is sold here. I believe that this legislation, working in conjunction with the sales organization that is proposed by the producers of this country, will work hand in hand to bring about the results that all of us are interested in and we hope will be for the benefit of those who produce the grain. [Applause.]

There is one other phase of this question. The Secretary of Agriculture if he cancels a license contract of a board of trade for future trading may cancel erroneously. He may be a man who may not be in sympathy with some of the actions of the board of trade. This bill gives the board the right of appeal to the court. Now, nearly everyone will immediately say that is just as good as not having any right of appeal. I do not believe he will find any board of trade that will appeal from the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture to the court for relief. Why? Because in the meantime according to the provisions of this bill they would be compelled not to deal in futures, and the great market centers of this country are dependent upon their future trade. In Chicago, I believe, it is shown that the market is stimulated largely by the future trading.

The further provision of this bill giving the Secretary of Agriculture authority over the reports to be filled out by the beards of trade, showing the tendency of the market up or down, will be beneficial in that it will prevent the circulation of false reports, having a tendency to fluctuate the market or manipulate the same. This provision is not as complete as it might be, but will have a tendency to expose to public censure the reports of grain on hand, weather conditions, crop esti-mates, and so forth. All of this is valuable data in determining what price should be paid.

The bill also will eliminate the private wire for the reason that the private wire can not operate under the existing regulations which will be prescribed for board of trade operations.

It is my belief that this bill, by the publicity it will give by recording all future and cash sales of grain on the board of trade and showing the parties of interest, will prevent manipulation by large concerns for personal gain. Criticism has been made of this bill in that it will tend to centralize the market in the hands of a few corporations. It does not seem to me that this criticism is well founded for the reason that under the provisions of this bill cooperative concerns are given a place on boards of exchange which would permit the sales corporation of the American Farm Bureau to hold a place on the board of trade and buy and sell as a member thereof.

The publicity that will be given the operations of the boards of exchange under this bill, together with the working of the sales corporation for marketing of grain, will be tested within the next two years in their operation, and we will then be able to determine whether or not future sales should be limited to the actual delivery of the commodity, and also whether or not with the assistance of this bill and the operation of the said sales corporation, the export of the 7 per cent of our grain product will be able to determine the price of the other 93 per cent consumed in our own country. It seems to me that if this bill, working in conjunction with the said sales corporation, does no more than provide a storage capacity for the 7 per cent that does not need to be shipped abroad but is held for consumption here during the short production period we could then determine what additional legislation is necessary in order to further protect our marketing system. It is, therefore, my hope that this bill will pass and receive the sanction of the Senate and the Chief Executive and will be tried out in an effort to regulate the present marketing system which so materially affects all of the producers and all of the consumers in this country.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I desire to add my word of appreciation to those already spoken for the excellent work of the committee in the preparation of this bill and getting it before this committee so promptly. I realize, I think, from some experience in these matters, some of the difficulties which they have had to confront, and it does certainly seem to me they have brought us a bill that meets a difficult situation in splendid fashion. Possibly a little incident for which I am indebted to a good friend of mine, Mr. Atkeson, for long years representative of the grange, will best illustrate how they have met the situation. One morning a West Virginia farmer and his son were out watching a deer lick. It was very early, and suddenly as the morning light was breaking, an animal appeared. Neither of the hunters could quite distinctly determine what animal it was, and an argument arose between the father and the son as to whether the animal was a colt or a deer and whether or not they should shoot. After a long debate the father said to the son, "I think I can so shoot that if it happens to be a colt I will miss it and if it is a deer I will hit it." I think the committee has so well written the provisions of this bill that they will not hit the colt of hedging, but are dead sure to crack the deer of manipulation.

I desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer three reasons for supporting this measure. First, because I believe it to be for the common To-day there is no question of greater economic importance to the people of the United States than the question of distribution. The statement is made that out of every dollar that the ultimate consumer pays for the product that comes from the farm the farmer receives 35 cents. The statement is also made that last year the farmer received for the products mentioned in this bill the sum of nine and a half billion dollars. If this is 35 per cent of the cost to the ultimate consumer, he would expend over twenty-seven billions for these products of the farm. Making a deduction of nine and a half billions paid the farmer for the crops, we find that there would be a bill for the ultimate consumer to pay of seventeen and a half billion dellars as the cost of distribution. In contrast with this statement, gentlemen of the committee, I would like to hold up before you the experience of Denmark, where it is said that the expense of distributing farm crops through the cooperative plan is 10 cents out of each dollar instead of 65 cents.

For just a moment notice how the common good would be served if in a small measure the provisions of this bill correct the abuses which have arisen in the matter of distribution of grain crops. Grant that we can never approach the perfection of the Danish system. Instead of 65 cents, allow 20 cents of every dollar for distribution, and then make the proper deductions, and you will have a saving of $12,000,000,000 that might be made in the distribution of the grain crops in their journey

Gentlemen of the committee, I say to you, with all due regard to the many splendid measures we are considering on the floor of this House, that there is no question fraught with greater significance to this Nation than the conditions this bill seeks to partially remedy. Therefore, I believe for the common good, which is the ultimate purpose of all legislation, we should stand for this bill without division, and I hope that such will be the result.

There is a second reason why, I think, the bill should be supported. It is because, in my judgment, it affords justice to the farmer himself. May I inquire who these farmers are? Some days ago, I think, some insinuations were cast here with reference to class legislation; and I beg the indulgence of the committee for a moment while I try to answer the question as to who these American farmers are and whether or not they are deserving of consideration in connection with this and similar bills that have been proposed.

There are in the United States 6,460,000 farms. With an average of four and one-half to the family, the farm population proper reaches 29,070,000, or 27 per cent of the total. What are they worth? According to the best statisticians, $80,000,000,000. What is the average wealth per farm? Twelve thousand three hundred and eighty-eight dollars. Prof. David Friday, one of the great economists of the country, states that the income of the farmers for 1917 was fourteen and one-third billions. This would yield an average income of $2,218 per farm. Deduct 6 per cent for capital invested and you will find the average income of the average family on the American farm, based on the figures of 1917, to be $1,476. Therefore, I think if you weigh this matter fairly and consider the percentage of farmers in relation to the whole population and his wealth to the whole wealth of the country you will agree that it is but fair to give him every consideration which can be given in enacting legislation of this character.

Again, the farmers are a splendid holding power against all influences that breathe the spirit of unrest and revolution. They own their homes for the most part. One of our leading statesmen has said not long since that an 80-acre farm free from debt lived upon by the owner supplied with a good quantity of live stock and with a comfortable degree of improvements upon it and a bank balance was the best social unit we Touching still further the vital question of home ownership, I bring to your attention the alarming statement carried by the Banker-Farmer, a conservatively edited publication of Illinois, that the census of 1910 showed that 60 per cent of the people of the whole Nation did not own their own homes. The percentage of such home owning is high in the country and low in the centers of population, reaching 80 per cent in New York No better work can be done by this Congress than to encourage home owning and home building and, so far as these are concerned, in the rural sections they await improved economic conditions which this bill clearly seeks to develop.

What happened to these farmers in 1920? According to Bradstreet's they grew 8 per cent more of the leading grain crops than in the bumper year of 1919, and when they marketed them took 39 per cent less than for the smaller crop of the previous season—a neat little total fluctuation of $5 500,000. Manipulating of the market certainly was measurably responsible for the awful slump. If it be urged that the farmer must take his loss with the rest, the comparison of prices of pig iron and corn as fairly representative of the general price levels in industry and agriculture are interesting. In 1914 and for years before, the ratio between pig iron and corn was 1 ton of pig iron to 18 bushels of corn. In 1918, when prices were at the peak, the ratio was 1 ton of pig iron to 28 bushels of corn. In February of the present year the ratio was 1 ton of pig iron to 47 bushels of corn.

In view of these inequalities it is to be regretted that distinguished men of this House stand on the floor and oppose legislation for the development of the farmer group and make charges that this or any particular measure is in the nature of class legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for an extension of time. May I have five minutes?

Mr. TINCHER. I have only 10 minutes remaining. I yield

2 more m nutes to the gentleman.

Mr. KETCHAM. One further reason for the passage of this bill has not been sufficiently stressed as the discussion has developed in the committee. A business revival is greatly needed. Our distinguished friend from New England laments the idleness of eastern cotton mills. The farmers make up nearly 40 per cent of the buying power of the country. They are not now buying. Deducting more than five billions from their buying power in one year reacts powerfully against the business of the country. One sure way to help start a permanent business revival is to enact legislation such as the bill under consideration. By so doing you will help the farmer to escape the terrors of fluctuation and will secure for him a fair share of the dollars paid by the ultimate consumer for his product. Increased returns to him means increased business for the whole country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan

has expired.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to complete that statement. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I object. The CHAIRMAN. The ger

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to revise his remarks without obtaining consent.

Mr. KETCHAM. I just desire to extend. I already have the right to revise.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am for this bill, but for reasons that may not commend themselves to the average Member voting for the bill. My judgment is that this bill goes as far as any bill can go under the present system of marketing.

This bill does not do so very much, if the gentlemen who were good enough and wise enough to draft the bill will permit the observation. Under this bill anybody can buy and sell a hedge who wants to do it. Under this bill anybody can gamble on these exchanges who wants to do it.

This bill, however, does prohibit "puts" and "calls" and does provide that the Secretary of Agriculture may prevent manipulation, or rather does attempt to do this, and I am of opinion the power is conferred. That is an important thing to do. That is about the only thing that can be done and preserve the present system. It does not show that gambling is right. It shows how bad the system is, in which it is admitted gambling must be permitted. The fact that gambling must be permitted shows that the system is economically unsound also. God did not rig the economic machinery so that it is necessary to do an immoral thing in order to do a necessary thing. This bill does eliminate certain sorts of gambling and to that extent it meets the moral test. Anything which decreases that which is wrong is worthy of sup-Not only is the present system wrong in that fundamental particular, however, but no institution can function as an exchange in the general economical distribution of agricultural commodities, produced in a wide area which requires delivery at the place where the exchange is located. The cost of moving out of the natural channels of commercial move-ment in order to clear through these exchanges, especially the cotton exchanges, creates a prohibitive differential against such movement. Another thing, no future contract made on a basic grade can be a contract under which the ordinary commercial transactions and deliveries can properly be effected.

I make that statement with regard to cotton without fear of any contradiction. I am not so sure about grain. Take, for instance, the case of a miller, however, who wants for his mill Nos. 1, 2, 3, or 4 wheat, according to the kind of flour he is Now, so long as the contract on which he purchased can be complied with by the delivery of either grade of wheat the miller can not depend upon the deliveries on such contracts. He would not know in advance whether he would get what he

In cotton there are usually about three grades at the outside which a mill can use. Deliveries outside of those grades are no more valuable than flax or wool would be. This is not an argument against this bill. It is against the system with which this bill has to do.

Take the matter of hedging. I admit that hedging is neces sary under the present system, but hedging is more responsible than anything else for the instability of the price of agricultural products, and I defy anybody successfully to contradict that statement. What the farmer needs more than anything else is a broad market, a stable market. No business can be more stable than the market in which it sells. There is no other business which sells in so unstable a market as does agriculture. When you have a broad market and a stable market you have economic strength in your business; you have a foundation upon which you can build; you can forecast the future. Nobody can properly conduct a business that is shot all to pieces by all sorts of speculation and manipulation, as agricultural prices are. I said that hedging is more responsible for instability than anything else.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In a moment. Now let me show Suppose when the grain crop has "come into sight" and a third of that crop has been sold for $2 per bushel, two-thirds remaining with the farmer. Suppose the people who bought the third had not been able to hedge. Do you suppose they would turn loose for less than $2? No; and the farmers who had sold the one-third would not sell the remainder for less than $2. The tendency of that market would be upward, reflecting interest and carriage cost, and so forth, until it got within the shadow of the next crop. It would be a gradual, slow, upward movement, in the absence of some general controlling influence, When a part of the crop, however, is hedged those who hedge cut themselves off from every hope of gain if the price goes up and from every fear of loss if it goes down, so that that hedged part of the crop is like a derelict on the high seas, blown hither and thither by every wind of speculation. The minute the future market is driven down 15 cents per bushel, for instance, the people who hold that one-third of the crop can sell at 15 cents per bushel less than they could have sold for if the decline had not come and make as much money out of it as if they had sold it for $2.15, futures going up also 15 cents per bushel. They say it is an insurance. That is true. But it is too blooming good an insurance. The unsold part of the crop is carrying all the weight of the whole crop. The unsold part of the crop is as safe as his neighbor's would be if a man could get an insurance policy on his house under which he could get every cent of its value even if he himself were to apply the torch

You will never be able to get a stable market in this country, nor have economical distribution of farm products, until they are properly standardized, protected physically, and are given an opportunity to reach the general market through a system of real produce exchanges, where the actual commodities may be sold by specific grade and move from the first point of concentration to the point of need by the shortest line of movement and in quantity and quality in accord with the demand for use.

I have introduced a bill to make this possible and had it here ever since I have been in Congress. I do not seem to be able to get anybody interested in it, and one of the reasons why I want to see the pending bill pass is that I want it to be demonstrated, as soon as possible, whether or not we can build a stable public market on these privately controlled, merchant-operated, so-called exchanges. I hope I do not appear egotistical when I say that it can not be done.

With regard to cotton, we keep trying to get the New York and New Orleans cotton exchanges to do that which they say they do not want to do, can not do, and will not try to do. Did the gentleman from Oklahoma want me to yield to him?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman has answered my question. Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not in favor of the Government doing things which ought to be done by individual enterprise. I voted against all this stallion distribution and freeseed business and all that sort of rot. [Laughter.] in favor of the Government doing anything that the private citizen can do, but I am in favor of this Government helping to create a proper market machinery for the sale of farm We have the necessary parts of the machinery, we have the great Department of Agriculture, organized for no other purpose than to help the American farmer to deal with the big problems which confront him; and the biggest problem of the American farmer is distribution. Is not that right? What in the name of common sense is the Department of Agriculture for? Why does it send out these fellows driving little Ford automobiles all over the country scattering the dust and bulletins and hot air everywhere, while the department refuses to do the big thing that needs to be done? I want to fire about half of that bunch and have the Department of Agriculture coordinated with the State Department, build a real produce-exchange system. I want it to properly standardize these agricultural commodities, so that when we talk about them everybody will have the same mental picture of them. That gives to them a universal commercial status while yet at the point of first concentration. Then I want to see these standardized commodities while at the place of first concentration listed on a real produce exchange, not on a basic grade, but the actual thing that is physically and morally protected, listed for sale by its specific descriptive grade, and when it is sold have it moved from the place where it was first concentrated to the place where somebody wants to use it. Then every article would have direct trade access to every market and every market direct trade access to every source of supply, Then, when you have got your commodities standardized physically and morally protected, and in trading contact with the markets of the world, you will have a real foundation on which you can build a rural credit system.

Gentlemen, this is tremendously important. You can never build a rural credit system on the haphazard farm-selling methods that we have in this country to-day; but if you had these commodities properly standardized, physically and morally protected, and in trading contact with the markets of the world it would not take a great deal of Government supervision, but enough Government supervision to give entire strangers confidence in trading with each other-you would have a real foundation for a real chattel rural credit system. Farmers could take warehouse receipts covering these commodities so protected and bid successfully for the cheapest credit in the country. could build their own credit system. Then these commodities could move out gradually and the people who live in the great cities of this country would have a better chance to get what they buy at a price nearer what the farmer gets.

Take this hedging. Who is paying for that and all the other economic waste and the physical waste? Not now, but to-morrow, the people who live in the cities will have to pay every overhead cost and give the country boys as much net profit to encourage them to stay on the farm as industry will bid for them or else the people in the cities will starve.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What does the gentleman think of the plan of the farm bureau and cooperative marketing? Does the gentleman think that is sound?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think the cooperative organiza-tions of the farmers can build their warehouses, establish selling agencies, and by a limited cooperative, general financial responsibility behind their grades guarantee them, and guarantee delivery according to tender. The Federal Government would not have much to do to help them to a proper system of marketing. It would simply have to establish a few produce exchanges. It would not sell or ship. It would provide the market possibility and protect it against abuse. Before closing I want to emphasize that I propose nothing new with regard to governmental duty. The maintenance of opportunity for freedom in commerce is the chief duty of government with regard to commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KINCHELOE. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois remaining?

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. My time is pretty well exhausted.

will yield to the gentleman another minute.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does anybody wish to ask me a question?

Mr. KINCHELOE. In what way does your proposition

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I could not answer that question in one minute. Ask me a question that I can answer briefly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I simply want to say that I think the farm bureau is the most constructive idea along that line of anything that I have seen yet.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. When we get to the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule I want to talk a little more about this.

I congratulate the committee on having brought out the best bill, in my judgment, which they can bring out at this time. They have gone as far as they can. Time will demonstrate if they are right. Of course, if they are wrong, we are going to find it out pretty soon.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] agreed to give me five minutes.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman who agreed to give that time

Mr. TINCHER. I have only 10 minutes left, and I have promised more time than that.

Mr. BLANTON. Can not the gentleman give me three min-

I seem to be the only man opposed to the bill.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to be sure that the bill will pass, and if the gentleman is going to speak against it I am almost constrained to give him all the time I have. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I thank the gentleman.
Mr. TINCHER. But I can not do that because I have promised it to another gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 12 minutes left and the gentleman from Illinois has 12 minutes left.

Mr. TINCHER. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas

Mr. BLANTON. That gives me 12 minutes, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe if we were to bring in a bill here granting to every person in that vicinity a free Saturday afternoon once a week at Coney Island, and call it a farmers' bill, you could get enough votes here to pass it. If this bill would benefit the farmers I would be for it. If it would stop gambling in the food products raised by farmers I would be for it. The proponents of this bill, our friends on the committee, have stated as an argument for its passage and an argument in favor of the farmers' interests, that every year in the United States there are from fourteen to thirty times as many bushels of grain sold on exchanges as are raised in the United States. They state that in the United States each year there are three times as many bushels of grain sold on exchanges as are raised in the whole world. They declare against gambling transactions, and they say that they want to stop gambling, and that the farmers want gambling in farm products stopped, and therefore they bring in the best bill they know how to frame to stop gambling.

But does it stop gambling? We can not bet on horse racing, because that is gambling and it is stopped. We can not bet on poker, because that is stopped; we can not bet on the game of craps, because that is stopped; we can not buy a Louisiana lottery ticket, because that is stopped; we cannot buy a lottery ticket that is issued in Cuba, because that is stopped; we can not play bridge for money, because that is stopped; and now, under this bill, you can not speculate in what they call puts and calls, because that is to be stopped by this bill. But puts and calls constitute a very small part of the gambling done on exchanges.

They would stop the gambling that occurs after the market closes each day, known as puts and calls, but they permit the gambling to occur in the markets. Right here to-day, when the distinguished Public Printer of the United States Government has stopped gambling upon futures in the Public Printing Office—and I want to say that I commend him for it, and for recently suspending 14 men and 1 woman in his department for gambling against his orders-we come in with a bill licensing gambling in grain futures and putting it under Government protection to make it lawful by a statute of Congress. For, under the provisions of this bill, there will still be three times as many bushels of grain sold each year on the authorized exchanges in the United States as are raised in the whole world, and without one penny of tax.

I do not know that the farmers in my district are so very different from the farmers in your district, but I want to say that I keep in pretty close touch with the farmers in my dis-When I have the time and opportunity I go among them, talk to them, and get their ideas and views, and try to find out what they are thinking about and what they want. I am here to tell you that I do not care how many farmers' organizations have approved this bill; I know that the farmers of my district do not want the Congress of the United States to legalize gambling by law, as is done in this bill.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment I will yield. I asked the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Voigr], a member of the committee, if under this bill a man could go beyond a legitimate hedge that our friends say is absolutely necessary for the protection of the grain producers, under the provisions of the bill, and speculate by buying futures to an unlimited number of bushels. He said, why, yes; that any man could go upon one of these designated markets and buy a million bushels of grain in a gambling way-not in a hedge, but in a gambling transaction. If you want to limit it to legitimate hedge, why do you not provide in this bill that where a man buys a certain number of bushels of grain in a legitimate enterprise, to protect himself he has the right to go on the market to the extent of his purchase and sell an equal number of futures? Then you would have a strictly hedge bill. But you go further and you provide that on an authorized market, which you are providing for by this law, that any gambler can go and buy or sell futures to the extent of any number of bushels of any kind of grain. Now I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. Has the gentleman ever introduced a bill for the farmers of his district on the subject of markets?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not on that subject, but have on others, but I have from this floor advocated the passage of marketing provisions already pending before the committee.

Mr. TINCHER. Has the gentleman ever gone before the Agricultural Committee for the last two years and given the Agricultural Committee, which he is now criticizing, the benefit of his judgment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the gentleman has seen me in the committee room.

Mr. TINCHER. I have never seen the gentleman there, and I have attended every committee hearing for the last two years. Mr. BLANTON. Well, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY | has seen me in the committee room several times.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I have seen the gentleman from Texas there.

Mr. TINCHER. I have seen the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] there. Has the gentleman ever made any suggestion or appeared before the committee when it held these hearings, which comprise 1,070 pages?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not on the Agricultural Committee, but am a member of four other committees, all of whose hearings 1 attend. I want to say that I made several speeches on the floor of the House time and time again advocating the principles contained in the bill of the last speaker, the gentleman from Texas, who has just left the floor. I have indorsed his bill, pending for a long time before your committee, that if you would pass would benefit every farmer in the United States.

Mr. TINCHER. What bill is that?
Mr. BLANTON. The bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. TINCHER. That bill has no reference to trading in grain futures.

Mr. BLANTON. It provides for the proper marketing of the products of the farmers in the country. I am not criticizing the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. TINCHER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners] has no bill on the subject of grain futures. I did not know that the gentleman could see any good in that bill.

Mr. BLANTON. He has had a farm product marketing bill pending before your committee for a long time, and I have several times advocated its provisions. I always indorse anything good, regardless of its source. I vote for good measures whether they are called Republican or Democratic; I always do. I indorse everything that is good in this House. I have voted for as many measures that came from the Republican side as I have from the Democratic side when it appealed to me as being a proper thing for the country. I am not criticizing the committee. I am not going to vote for the bill. I am not going to vote for any single piece of legislation which legalizes gambling. I know where the farmers in my district stand. And I am going to vote as I think they would were they here in person.

Mr. VOIGT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. VOIGT. I want to say to the gentleman that the bill does not legalize gambling.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I want to say to the gentleman, and if I am wrong he can correct me, that under this bill the very minute the Secretary of Agriculture designates the market I can go with the gentleman and buy a million bushels of wheat and he can buy a million bushels on a speculative proposition alone, a gambling transaction, when neither one of us expects to deliver or receive the grain. Is not that so?

Mr. VOIGT. I will say to the gentleman that we could go to that exchange and make a contract.

Mr. BLANTON. A gambling contract. One to sell and buy 10,000 bushels of wheat. And we do not expect to fulfill it; we expect to pay the margin.

Mr. VOIGT. It may be we do not, but our contract as made is legal and is not determined by this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, you can not get around this proposition. Under this bill any man may buy or sell a million bushels of grain futures. You are legalizing gambling, and you might just as well admit it. You might as well look facts squarely in the face. I do not care whether you propose it as a so-called friend of the farmer or not—you are not any better friend of the farmer than I am, you have not got the confidence of the farmers in your district more than I have in mine

Mr. BLANTON. The whole bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What section?

Mr. BLANTON. Section 4 and the provisions which follow

Mr. KINCHELOE. Where does the gentleman find that section 4 legalizes gambling?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Kentucky has heard the argument and knows that he can buy or sell a million bushels of wheat when he does not expect it to be delivered, but merely the gambling margin to be paid.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I say there is not a line or a scintilla in this bill that legalizes gambling, and the gentleman can

Mr. BLANTON. This bill makes gambling in grain futures on authorized markets legitimate speculation. It legalizes speculation in wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, and sorghum futures, in unlimited millions of bushels, on certain authorized markets, without any tax, when you have not got any wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, and sorghum to deliver, but merely gambling margins to pay according to fluctuations. If that is not gambling I do not understand what is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not sufficiently expert in ornithology to mention the name, but I understand there is a certain bird that is dis-tinguished for the characteristic of befouling its own nest. Whatever it is, I have very little respect for the creature. Kicking at Congress seems to have become a popular sport. Heretofore it has been confined to the newspapers. The other night I attended a movie exhibition which would seem to indicate that the art had crept into the film business. To-day we listened to a Member of this House as he engaged in this delectable occupation of finding fault with the American Congress. Gentlemen, the American representative idea is the last word in popular government. All other forms of representation in legislative bodies have been tried out some time or other in the world's history. Even the soviet system now in vogue in Russia had its career in ancient times and miserably failed, even as it is failing in Russia. The English adopted the system of having class representation and still stick to it with bullheaded per-When our Government was organized we abandoned the old idea of having a representative body made up of any class, creed, race, or condition. The American idea in forming the Congress was that every citizen of our country, irrespective of his wealth, irrespective of his race, religion, or condition, should be represented in the National Legislature. That is the true basis of democratic government, and when I suspect that a Member of this House, my colleague from the city of New York, is arguing for an apparent approval of the soviet system, I feel I am justified in resenting his allusion. I leave it to the judgment and the recollection of the Members of this House whether I quote the gentleman correctly. He said that he would like to see in this body a representative or representatives of the lumber interest, representatives of the railroad interest, and representatives of the employees. I asked him if that were not equivalent to an approval of the soviet system and he evaded the question. Now, if his language bears any interpretation whatever within the bounds of reason-

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GRIFFIN. It is certainly susceptible of the construction I put upon it, namely, an approval of the soviet system of government. I can not yield now. However, there is one retreat to which he may resort in palliation of his obvious indorsement of the soviet system. The soviet system does not go as far as the gentleman does in being willing to accord representation in its representative body to wealth and capital. He, it seems, is willing to accord that privilege. Under the soviet system representation is confined solely and wholly to the working classes. The mere fact that a man employs help excludes him from citizenship and from representation in the various soviets. They recognize only labor. He would recognize capital as well. In that respect he has some defense to make, but the basic idea that groups or industries should be represented is purely of soviet origin. The gentleman would like to see representatives of certain groups or interests in this House in order that they might be consulted with on questions that come before this body. That, I think, is equivalent to an indorsement of the basic idea of the soviet system. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, whether this bill entirely prohibits gambling transactions in the price of farm products or not, it is certain that it goes a long way in that direction. It affords me a great deal of satisfaction to close the debate on a bill that goes as far as this does, and I congratulate my colleague [Mr. TINCHER] for bringing this bill out of the Committee on Agriculture and giving us an opportunity to vote on it here. Some 12 or 15 years ago I introduced and finally saw the passage of a bill closing the bucket shops in the District of Columbia and in the Territories of the United States where we had jurisdiction. At that time I made a study of laws that had been enacted in the countries of the world limiting gambling transactions in the price of food products. At that time this country stood out practically alone among the great nations of the world as the one in which the people were permitted to gamble in the prices of food products. Wheat, oats, corn, and meats of all kinds have their pits on our exchanges: and men who do not raise grain or meat—men who do not desire to buy and have none to sell—buy and sell millions of bushels of grain and millions of pounds of meat. These transactions fix the price to the real producer and to the ultimate consumer. The law of supply and demand may have a remote relationship to the gambling that takes place in the price of these products. But if a crowned head in Europe stumps his toe on the way home from the theater, it has quite as much effect on the price of wheat on the Chicago market the next morning as rain or drought out in the wheat belt. If somebody introduces a resolution in the Congress or a State legislature to investigate a stock exchange, that also affects the price of wheat, corn, oats, or beef or pork. This is wholly indefensible. This bill, going as far as it does, is a long step in a direction which. I hope, will ultimately result in stopping all betting in the price of food commodities. There is not a shoe manufacturer in the United States who could continue his business if the price of his shoes were fixed in a shoe pit in Chicago or New

If men who neither make nor buy shoes controlled in those pits the price of the product of shoe factories, every shoe factory in this country would close. The same is true of hats, finished clothing, and practically every other finished product that reaches the consumer. The farmer alone is the great producer whose product goes upon the market and sells for a price fixed by a lot of gamblers. This bill will stop the most vicious and injurious part of that gambling.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can not yield.

The farmers are not so well situated as the shoe manufacturers or the hat makers, who fix the price of their own product that you and I pay, but I hope and confidently believe a better day is coming. We passed a bill through this House a few days ago that will enable the farmers to form organizations that

I trust will in the future enable them to put their products upon the market at a reasonable price that they fix themselves. not? We pay the price that the manufacturers of agricultural machinery make on their products. We pay the price that the manufacturers of shoes and clothing see fit to make. We pay the price that the manufacturers of our own raw materials see fit to make when they return them to us as finished products, Why, with a proper organization, can not the farmers of this country, after ascertaining, at the close of the season, the supply of grain, the supply of meat, after estimating as carefully as the manufacturer of shoes and clothing the supply and demand for their products, announce their price to the world, plus the freight rates from the producing points to the markets? That will stabilize the cost of living in this country, will place the farmers in the position of the manufacturers in the production of their commodities, and enable them to meet the necessities of the country's life by engaging in a business in which the price of their products is not fixed by gamblers who manipulate the price up or down to their own gain, but neither buy nor sell the real article.

Section 4 gives the Secretary of Agriculture control over these gambling places. They are to-day absolutely untrammeled, unhindered, except as local legislation may in a very limited way affect them. This bill will prohibit certain vicious species of gambling. It will prohibit "puts" and "calls." It taxes them so high that it will stop the practice.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we have made much progress to-day by advancing this kind of legislation. The Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of this bill, I have no doubt, by keeping a close hand and close eye over the transactions in the pits that deal in the products of the farm, will make suggestions of practices that he has discovered that will secure additional legislation, amendatory of this act, that will be beneficial to the producers as well as to the consumers of the country.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] says that he is acquainted with the farmer. The gentleman probably never started to town with a load of wheat on a Thursday, having learned in the weekly paper he received the Saturday before that the price was 85 cents a bushel—the paper having been published the previous week-and after he had reached town found that the price of wheat was down to 65 cents a bushel. I know a young fellow who had just that experience. of wheat had been manipulated down to suit the gambler's game and I lost 20 cents a bushel on a load of wheat. Men are having that experience to-day in every part of this country.

It is true the people to-day have the advantage of rural free delivery and every farmer receives some time during the day the market reports of the day before. In the days when I was raising wheat we got the weekly paper on Saturday when we went to town, and that was our latest report on the market, But even now the price of wheat changes, the price of meat changes, the price of everything that is produced on the farm changes, over night. If the President sneezes and the doctor says that he has influenza, that fact changes the price of wheat, If there is a lack of rain in North Dakota just at the time wheat ought to have a little rain to bring it out, that changes the price on the pit in Chicago months before the wheat is to be harvested. Any pretext is sufficient to enable the gamblers to change the price of wheat in the pit. Out of these speculations, which are a pure gamble, we have seen monuments erected to great gamblers. I shall not name them. You know them. They made their fortunes in wheat and never raised a bushel of wheat or sold an actual bushel of wheat. They made millions by betting on the price of other people's wheat, wheat that other people raised, and wheat that other people had to Men of that kind are opposed to this bill and to every bill se it. They are opposed to limiting the kind of gambling that has enabled them to pile up the millions that they have made. They have not made their money out of the farmers directly, but they have injuriously affected them indirectly. I have very little sympathy for the people these gamblers have taken their money from. I have very little sympathy for a man who will bet on another man's game, whether it is a shell game, roulette, or poker, or betting on the price of wheat in the pit. It is not more safe to bet on another man's game in wheat, in pork, in corn, than on a roulette wheel. So I have very little sympathy with the men who have directly contributed millions of money to the gamblers in the price of farm products. Let us pass this bill and stop as far as possible the injury to the farmers who raise and sell the products. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the report from the Committee on Agriculture was unanimous for this bill. On account of serious illness in my family, I was unable to be present at the hearings. I further understood there was a unanimity of opinion amongst the various exchanges and members of boards of trade favoring this bill, and no objection to same being called to my attention from any of the members of the Chicago Board of Trade, I decided to refrain from speaking during general debate and allotted to the various Members all the time under my control. But two minutes remain, and I wish to suggest that since debate began I have received several telegrams from members of the Chicago Board of Trade suggesting their opposition to this bill.

I agree with our President's suggestion of less government in business and am opposed to the broad powers given the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations. It places these boards of trade under bureaucratic control.

I am in favor of specific legislation. If, as is claimed, gambling exists on the board of trade, and you wish to correct this practice or abuse, pass some specific law to do away with such gambling, but do not attempt, as is done in this bill, to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct other people's business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title "the future trading act."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes, had come to no reso-Intion thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE,

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as fol-

To Mr. Shreve, for one week, on account of official business. To Mr. PERLMAN, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

EXECUTIVE ORDER RESPECTING POSTMASTERS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to propound an inquiry. Was there any provision made for the printing of the Executive order of the President?

The SPEAKER. None that it could be printed, except in the

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the order may be printed as a document for the use of the Members of the House, to be distributed through the folding room in such quantity as can be printed for the sum of $500, I think, which does not require a concurrent resolution, or it may be $50.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the request, but I am sure that "he gentleman can get all the copies of this order that he desires at the Post Office Department if he requests them. I made such a request this morning, and they promptly told me-

Mr. WALSH. It may be that there might be a larger demand for them on this side than on the gentleman's side. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. But I have no objection to the gentleman's

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does that mean just the order, or also the statement accompanying it?

Mr. WALSH. I do not care anything about the statement. Mr. GARNER. Let us have the statement go with the order. Mr. WALSH. I do not ask for the printing of the statement.

Mr. GARNER. It seems to me the statement ought to go with it. It seems to me the statement explais the Executive order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the "resident, it ought to be printed. He gives his reasons.

Mr. GARNER. Why does the gentleman from Massachusetts object to the statement going in with the order?

Mr. WALSH. Because I assume that the operations will be under the order and not under the statement.

Mr. GARNER. The statement will certainly give information that will be beneficial to the gentleman's constituents.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know about that.

Mr. GARNER. The President may have to amend it some time, as I hope; but at the same time it is the President's statement accompanying the order, and I think it should go in.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the gentleman's desire that due publicity should be given to the statement of the President, and I do not object to that in this instance. However, if the gentleman is going to object unless that request is coupled with it, I will ask that the Executive order and the President's statement accompanying it be printed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not amend his request. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object to the original request.

Mr. GARNER. I do not object; but I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is likely to come back with the statement that his constituents desire the statement.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my original request. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 12, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon,

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

127. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation, in the sum of $514.26, heretofore transmitted to the Congress and printed with accompanying papers in Senate Document No. 407, Sixty-sixth Congress; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 106) authorizing the Secretary of War to Ioan cots and blankets for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic at the Ohio State encampment to be held at Greenville, Ohio, in June, 1921, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 60), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CROWTHER: A bill (H. R. 6110) amending section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. LENROOT submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

culture and Forestry:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),
That a joint commission is hereby created, to be known as the "Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry," which shall consist of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Representatives to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress within 90 days after the passage of this resolution upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the difference between the prices of agricultural products paid to the producer and the ultimate cost to the consumer.

3. The comparative condition of industries other than agriculture.

4. The relation of prices of commodities other than agricultural products to such products.

5. The banking and financial resources and credits of the country, especially as affecting agricultural credits.

6. The marketing and transportation facilities of the country. The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions, and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditures shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives in equal proportions upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ACTIVITIES.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 77), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 77), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:
Whereas it has been charged that various corporations and associations, organizations, and combinations of corporations engaged in various lines of trade, commerce, and industry are and have been carrying on an extensive propaganda throughout the country, and are and have been maintaining offices and lobbyists in the city of Washington for the purpose of influencing tariff, revenue, and other legislation pending in Congress; and
Whereas it has further been charged that the dye industry is controlled by a combination of corporations which is in fact a monopoly, and in order to maintain such monopoly and obtain an embargo against the importation of competing dyes has employed agents, attorneys, and lobbyists to influence Congress in behalf of special legislation in the interest of such dye monopoly; and
Whereas it has been charged that officials in the various departments and bureaus of the Federal Government have engaged in propaganda throughout the country, seeking additional appropriations and other legislation for the extension of their authority; and
Whereas several bills have been introduced and are pending in the Senate to define and punish lobbying and to regulate the employment of legislative counsel and agents: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved*, That a special committee, to consist of five Members of the Senate, be appointed by the Vice President, which committee is hereby authorized and instructed to investigate the charge that various or-porations and associations, organizations, and combinations of corporations engaged in various lines of trade, commerce, and industry are and have been carrying on an extensive propaganda throughout the country, and are and have been maintaining offices and lobbyists in the city of Washington for the purpose of influencing tariff, revenue, and other legislation pending in Congress; the charge that the dye industry is controlled by a combination of corporatio

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 2, line 14, after the word "employees," to insert: and for mileage, at 5 cents per mile, to midshipmen entering the Naval Academy while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, to increase the appropriation "for telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams and cablegrams, postage (foreign and domestic), post-office box rentals, and other necessary and incidental expenses from $250,000 to $400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, after the word "expenses," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the expense of any naval district unless the commandant thereof shall be also the commandant of a navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 19, in the additional proviso, after the word "Provided," to strike out "further"; in line 23, to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$850,000"; and on page 4, line 4, to strike out "$3,500,000" and to insert "$4,000,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerkal, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards and naval stations, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, shall not exceed $850,000, and for necessary expenses for the interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction, and for payment of claims for damages under naval act approved July 11, 1919; in all, $4,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after the word "Navy," to insert: "and for such purposes as he may deem proper," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for aviation, on page 5, line 2, after the date "June 30, 1921," to insert "and to continue the construction of rigid dirigible"; and in line 3, to strike out "$440,000" and insert "$1,440,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $6.125 .-750," so as to read:

Aviation, Navy: For aviation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, as follows: For aircraft and accessories in course of construction or manufacture on June 30, 1921, and to continue the construction of rigid dirigible, $1,440,000; for new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $6,125,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "planes," to strike out "$4,534,181" and to insert "$6,500,000," so as to read:

For maintenance, repair, and operation of aircraft factory, helium plant, air stations, fleet activities, testing laboratories, and for overhauling of planes, $6,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 12, after the word "aircraft," to strike out "$1,615,000" and to insert "$3,000,-000." so as to read:

For continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft, $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 14, after the numerals "$275,000," to insert:

New construction, buildings, and improvements at air stations at a total cost not to exceed $1,339,000, as follows: Cape May, $25,000; Coco Solo, $402,000; Hampton Reads, $78,000; Lakehurst, $360,000; Pearl Harbor, $210,000; Pensacola, $100,000; San Diego, $164,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator who has the bill in charge if the changes are the same as those in the previous bill which was reported to the Senate at the last

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are identical. Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I inquire where Coco Solo is? That is a new place to me, and I am rather curious to know where it is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is on the Isthmus of Panama. It is one of the defenses of the Panama Canal.

Mr. OVERMAN. It sounds very much like "Coca-Cola."

[Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 5, line 19, to increase the total for aviation from "$6,913,431" to "$18,729,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 19, after the amendment last agreed to, to insert:

And the money herein specifically appropriated for aviation shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing laws as aviation, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, determine, and pay out of this appropriation the amounts due on claims for damages which have occurred or may occur to private property growing out of the operations of naval aircraft, where such claim does not exceed the sum of $500: Provided further, That all claims adjusted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the amendment covers? What is the nature of the claims referred to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are claims for damages caused by the negligence of officers of the Navy, by the lack of proper care in the conduct of the work in which they are engaged. It is limited to small claims not exceeding $500. The amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to hear and to settle claims for damages of that kind to the property or to the person of individuals.

Mr. BORAH. It is limited to claims of $500 or less?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Is there no provision with reference to claims in excess of $500?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In such cases claimants have to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BORAH. Is not that now the general law? Mr. POINDEXTER. It is. The amendment simply excepts out of the general law the small claims referred to and authorizes their adjustment by the Secretary of the Navy

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is substantially the same bill that was reported by the committee at the last session of Congress?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is almost identical with that bill. There are only one or two very small changes, which do not involve the appropriations at all. The changes to which I refer I will be glad to call to the attention of the Senator later on. I may say now, however, that one of the changes is in the language used in the limitation of the appropriation for the construction program. The House bill as reported without change by the Senate committee at the last session provided that that money should not be used for any ships which were not already under construction or contracted for. In this bill the House struck out the words "or contracted for," and the Senate committee has made no change in that respect.

Mr. McKELLAR. Do I understand that there is a unanimous report of the committee recommending the passage of the

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is the unanimous report of all the members of the committee who were present. I can not say that all members of the committee agreed to it; but it is my impression that they do, with the possible exception of one member.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason I asked the question was that I recall that during the last session there was a very vigorous and earnest fight made against this bill, practically amounting to a filibuster, as I recall; at any rate, the bill did not pass because of the very great opposition to it. Apparently there is not very much opposition to it at this time, and I was wondering what caused the change. Can the Senator tell me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a very agreeable change, but we have just started to consider the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to suggest that, perhaps, if the Senator will be patient there will be enough debate to satisfy

Mr. McKELLAR. I was merely wondering what was going to happen as we went along.

Mr. BORAH. We do not desire to discuss the preamble. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 11, to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That for the construction of a hangar for rigid dirigible and other necessary improvements at Camp Kearny, Calif., which are hereby authorized at a limit of cost not to exceed $2,500,000, any unexpended balance remaining July I, 1921, from the funds for aviation for new construction at stations appropriated in the act making appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, approved June 4, 1920, is hereby continued in effect and made available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 5, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the word "and," before Corpus Christi, in line 11 of section 1 of the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1911, be stricken out, and following the words "Corpus Christi," in the same line, insert the words "Tampa, Fla., and Portland, Me."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 21, after the word "seamen," to insert "and applicants for enlistment"; and in line 22, after the word "route," to insert "or cash in lieu thereof," so as to read:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation and recruiting: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for Bureau of Navigation, transportation and recruiting, from "$3,500,000" to "$4,500,000."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, referring to this item under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," I see that the increase recommended is $1,000,000—from $3,500,000 to $4,500,000. I should like to have the Senator explain why that increase is recommended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in which he states:

The Bureau of Navigation has made three recent revisions on the cost of "Transportation and recruiting," based on the strength of 100,000, 110,000, and 120,000 men, bearing in mind the changed conditions in the personnel situation since December 31, 1920. These estimates, which have been carefully itemized, show that the cost of "Transportation and recruiting" would be $6,483,843, $6,765,456, and $7,015,258, respectively. In each case the sum of only $404,000 is estimated for recruiting proper, the balances being considered necessary for transportation alone in accordance with existing law.

The appropriations throughout this bill are based upon an estimate of 120,000 as the average personnel strength of the Navy.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is it now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is now that, on the average. One hundred and twenty thousand? Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it averages that. It is perhaps a little more at this particular time, and falls below that at other times.

Mr. OVERMAN. What does the House bill provide?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The authorized strength of the Navy is 143,000. The House bill makes appropriations based upon an estimate of 100,000. That constitutes the necessity for this

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, at the present time there are only about 118,000 in the Navy. The total has fallen below 120.000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is this increase of $1,000,000 in the item on page 8 by reason of the increase of the personnel that has been provided for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the estimate of the Navy Department. In fact, this item is below the estimate made by the Navy Department.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but the increase is necessitated by Mr. BORAH. Battly but increase the personnel of the Navy?
Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.
Mr. BORAH. May I ask, then, that that item may go over, to be considered in connection with the items on pages 29 and 30?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall be very glad to have that done if that is the best way of proceeding, or else to act upon the amendment and then agree to its reconsideration. There are a large number of items throughout the bill, I will say to the Senator, which depend upon the final determination of the personnel strength of the Navy. Perhaps it would be more convenient to act upon them as we go along, and then if the Senator desires to take up any one of them or all of them I shall be very glad to agree to do that.

will be temporarily passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. I ask that it be passed over, to be considered in connection with the items on pages 29 and 30; and if there are other items which are increased by reason of the personnel I shall be glad if we can have an understanding that they will all be reconsidered in case there should be any change.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well, The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 8, after line 14, to insert:

The Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, is hereby directed to furnish to the proper officers in the several States, Territories, insular possessions, and the District of Columbia, on or before December 31, 1921, statements of the services of all persons from those several places who served in the Navy during the War with Germany, and for that purpose an additional sum not to exceed $100,000 is hereby appropriated for obtaining the necessary material and the employment of the necessary clerical force.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 16, under the subhead "Gunnery and engineering exercises," to strike out:

For the maintenance of established shooting galleries, target houses, targets, and ranges, and for transporting equipment to and from ranges, $100,000.

And to insert:

Prizes, trophies, and badges for excellence in gunnery, target practice, engineering exercises, and for economy in fuel consumption, to be awarded under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may formulate; for the purpose of printing, recording, classifying, compiling, and publishing the rules and results; for the establishment and maintenance of shooting galleries, target houses, targets, and ranges; for hiring established ranges, and for transporting equipment to and from ranges, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for instruments and supplies from "$750,000" to "$850,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for naval training station, California, from $125,000" to "$150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 10, to increase the total appropriation for naval training station, Rhode Island, from "$185,000" to "$300,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 10, to increase the total appropriation for naval training station, Great Lakes, from "$400,000" to "$500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 17, after the word "necessary," to insert "to be immediately available," so as to réad:

To make just compensation for land, title to which was taken over under proclamation of the President, dated November 4, 1918, as an addition to the naval training station, Great Lakes, Ill., and for damages occasioned by delay in the payment for such land, or for the use and occupancy thereof by the United States, $546,805, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 22, after the word "Illinois," to insert "and East Camp, Hampton Roads, Va,"; in line 25, to strike out "together with" and insert "also any" before the word "improvements," and after the word "improvements," to insert "that have been," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of, at public or private sale, at a price to be approved by him, any land in the vicinity of the navy mine depot, Yorktown, Va., and the naval training station, Great Lakes, Ill., and East Camp, Hampton Roads, Va., or interest therein, title to, or interest in which has been acquired by the United States subsequent to April 6, 1917, also any improvements that have been placed thereon by the United States that are deemed by him to be no longer needed for naval purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 9, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 9, to insert:

Summer schools for boys: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to establish at two of the permanent naval training stations experimental summer schools for boys between the ages of 16 and 20 years. For this purpose he is authorized to use such buildings or other accommodations at such training stations, to loan any naval equipment necessary for such purposes, and to give instructions which will fit them for service in the Navy of the United States, He is empowered to establish and enforce such rules within the camp as may be necessary and to detail such members of the naval personnel as may be required in order to encourage and execute the spirit of this act. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized to loan the necessary naval uniforms during the period of training and to furnish subsistence, medical attendance, and other necessary incidental expenses for those attending these schools: Provided, That those under instruction, with the consent of their parents or their guardians, shall enroll in the Naval Reserve Force for not less than three months, and no person not so enrolled shall be admitted to said training schools. For carrying out the provisions of this paragraph the sum of $200,000 is appropriated: Provided further, That the appropriation shall be available to reimburse other appropriations for the Naval Establishment for any expenses incurred in connection with members of the Naval Reserve Force who enrolled in accordance with this section for attendance at the experimental summer schools. the experimental summer schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 15, before the words "for wharfage," to strike out " and " and, after the words for wharfage," to insert "and for actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force traveling in connection with organizing and administering the Naval Reserve Force"; and, in line 19, to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

Naval Reserve Force: For expenses of organizing, administering, and recruiting the Naval Reserve Force and Naval Militia; for the maintenance and rental of armories, including the pay of necessary janitors, for wharfage, and for actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers of the Navy and Naval Reserve Force traveling in connection with organizing and administering the Naval Reserve Force, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 24, to increase the appropriation for maintenance of receiving barracks from "$50,000" to "$100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 25, to increase the total appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores from "$14,000,000" to "$15,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent, Bureau of Ordnance," on page 20, line 24, after the word "structures," to insert "except such temporary structures as may be incident to current work of said bureau," so as to

That no part of the appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made for "Increase of the Navy" under the Bureau of Ordnance and no part of allotments of appropriations heretofore or hereafter made to said bureau shall be available for the payment for services or materials used in the construction of any shop, building, living quarters, or other structures, except such temporary structures as may be incident to current work of said bureau, or for additions and betterments to any existing shore station facilities unless the appropriation shall in terms specifically authorize such construction or additions and betterments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, after the word "betterments," to strike out the provisos in the following words:

Provided, That hereafter ordnance materials procured under the various ordnance appropriations shall not be available for issue to meet the general needs of the naval service: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as preventing the allocation of guns and ammunition to ships according to the requirements of the naval

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 6, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, from "$7,500,000" to "$9,000,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Washington whether the Alameda item has been reached?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has not been reached.

Mr. KING. I understood that some other matters would detain the Senate this morning, and I did not expect this bill to be taken up until later in the afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I see that in this item there is an increase of $1,500,000. Has there been an estimate for that increase?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is much below the estimate of the Navy Department.

Mr. BORAH. What is the necessity for increasing the appropriation $1,500,000? The House appropriated $7,500,000 and the Senate committee has increased it to $9,000,000. Will the Senator state why the increase was made?

Mr. POINDEXTER. During 1921 for this item there was an appropriation of $9,500,000, and there were two deficiencies of $500,000 and $133,000, respectively, making a total of $10,-133,000, or $1,133,000 more than the committee has allowed. The authorities of the Navy Department were very urgent and very insistent that with the same personnel the expenses for the next fiscal year will approximate those of the current fiscal year; but the committee, making an allowance for reduction in costs and wages, made a reduction of over $1,000,000 from the request of the department.

Mr. BORAH. That is, the committee made a reduction from what the department asked for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; and increased what was allowed by the House.

Mr. BORAH. Was there no estimate submitted to the House at the time it had the matter before it as to the necessity of having more money? In other words, does the Senator know that the same estimate which he had was before the House com-

I do not think the same showing was made to the House committee that was made to the Senate com-The estimates made to the House committee, of course, mittee. were the same; they had the same information as to the expenditures for the preceding year; but there was a special hearing upon this item by the Senate committee, and additional information was presented to the committee which was not submitted to the House committee.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that this item may go over, in connection with the item on page 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be temporarily passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 18, to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That expenditures from appropriations contained in this act for the maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, including the compensation of operators, shall not exceed $250,000.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that this amendment may go over also. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be temporarily passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 3, after the numerals "$40,000," to insert "; dredging, to continue, $100,000; in all, $140,000," so as to read:

Navy yard, New York, N. Y.: Toilet facilities at shipbuilding slips, $40,000; dredging, to continue, $100,000; in all, $140,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether it is common, in bills of this character, to insert items for dredging, in view of the fact that bills dealing with rivers and harbors carry items for such purposes? I ask the Senator if this matter has not been taken care of in the usual appropriation bill for inland rivers and harbors?

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is not in the commercial harbor of New York. It is for dredging within the limits of the navy yard. It is a matter of considerable urgency in this particular instance. No appropriations are ever included in the river and harbor bill for improvements of navy-yard water frontage.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if he knows what is the necessity for this appropriation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The large ships of the Navy are unable to be docked at the Brooklyn Navy Yard without the deepening of the channel. On a recent occasion the Tennessee went aground, causing some damage, and resulting in considerable expense to the Government. In order to maintain the efficiency of the yard at New York, this dredging is regarded by the department and by the committee as being essential.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator, whether the committee or any subcommittee have investigated the question of the necessity of maintaining the large number of yards we now have on the Atlantic coast, the necessity of maintaining this particular yard, the proposition as to whether or not, in view of the proposal to increase the number and size of battleships and battle cruisers, this item of $100,000 will be adequate to enlarge the yard and make it sufficiently deep and wide that our vessels may be properly handled therein?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, that question opens up a very wide range of naval policy, which would require considerable time to go into fully, as to the desirability of ships of the size and tonnage of those which are included in the program which is now under construction. That matter has been debated to a considerable extent on the floor of the Senate, and the Senator from Utah is perhaps as familiar with it as I am. The contracts have been let, and to raise the question whether it is desirable to have ships of that size brings up the entire question whether we are to cancel the program upon which we have entered, and that larger question has been discussed at consid-. erable length.

As to the number of navy yards on the Atlantic coast, about which the Senator from Utah inquires, that is a matter which is fixed by law, long established. I imagine that some very substantial question might have been raised in the beginning of these establishments as to the desirability in some cases; but the navy yards on the Atlantic coast now represent very large investments of the Government, and a great deal of most important work is being carried on in them.

In what I say as to the questionable merit of some of the navy yards on the Atlantic coast, I do not need to include the navy yard at New York. In fact, I have not heard the usefulness and the desirability of that yard questioned by anyone. At the present time two of the capital ships of the new program are under construction in that yard. One of the great advantages, besides the great harbor which the yard enjoys, and all the incidental service that a navy yard requires, is the labor market. It is a very favorable point for naval work on account of the accessibility to an almost unlimited labor market. I think that, in general, states the situation and answers the two questions which the Senator has asked.

This particular item of $100,000, as the Senator can readily see, is a very trivial amount, relatively speaking. Absolutely it is a large sum of money; but when it is considered in connection with the work upon battleships which cost over $30,000,000 apiece, which are under construction there, numerous other battleships and battle cruisers which come to this yard for repairs, the good policy of providing adequate water frontage for them at the expense of this item seems to me to be obvious. Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some "time,

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield. Mr. BORAH. Before Before the Senator proceeds further, I want to record in the Record the fact that at a time when we are considering an appropriation bill carrying in round figures $500,000,000 there are seven Senators in the Senate Chamber, and when we are considering a bill which involves a policy of tremendous moment to the American people there are seven Senators in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. KING. I want to assure the Senator that when we come to a vote

simply wanted to note the fact.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the statement of the Senator from Idaho to the effect that there are seven Senators in the Chamber equivalent to making the point of no quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so rules,
Mr. SHEPPARD. Then, Mr. President, I make the point that the roll should be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Harris] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to occupy about fifteen minutes of the time of the Senate and to impose to that extent upon the committee in charge of the pending bill by speaking upon another subject.

Mr. President, since I have been in the Congress of the United States, now nearly 10 years, I have at all times been an earnest advocate of Federal aid to education. Primarily, there was an early reason for my being in favor of this policy. I was born in a village in the country. When I arrived at was born in a village in the country. school age we had a public school for only three months in the year every two years. If I had not had well-educated parents and a well-educated elder sister, I am sure my education would have been exceedingly limited. I earned the necessary money plowing and clerking by the time I was 18 years old to go to the State university two years, and borrowed money from my elder brothers to finish my course there. My education was obtained, therefore, under the greatest difficulties. believe that an American boy ought to have such difficulties in securing an education, and in part for this reason I have uniformly supported every educational movement since I have been in either branch of the Congress. Upon coming to the Senate I was fortunate in being put on the Committee on Education. I like the work. I am in whole-hearted sympathy with it. In aiding the States in educating the youth of the country our Government is doing nothing revolutionary. It is but following the well-known precedents of farm-extension work, of aid to road building, of river and harbor work, and all in strict accord with the Constitution of the United States and the decisions of our courts construing its provisions.

THE NEED OF FEDERAL AID.

The need of greater educational facilities in this country is In the census of 1910 it was disclosed beyond controversy. that there were 5,111,163 people in the United States more than 10 years old who could not read and write. Practically double that number were semi-illiterate. The figures have been lessened somewhat in the last 10 years, but the number who still can not read and write is very large, probably 90 per cent of what it was in 1910. Of the 1,500,000 young men first drafted in the United States Army in the late war, the records show that 346,000 were unable to read a letter from home when it came and unable to write a letter back home. Such a condition of illiteracy in the richest, freest, and best Nation in the world is little short of criminal. This illiteracy was not and is not confined to the Southern States, where so large a part of our population is colored, but it exists all over the country, particularly in States like Pennsylvania, where the foreign population is large.

While a member of the Senate committee investigating the steel strike in 1919 I visited Pittsburgh and a number of surrounding towns in western Pennsylvania. In a number of these towns there were so few Americans and so little English spoken that the towns seemed to be foreign rather than American. I could only communicate with the workmen through an interpreter. In one of these towns I was told that the population was 23,000 and 21,000 of them could not speak, read, or write the English language. This condition is a crying shame, and it must be remedied. We must educate and Americanize these people. If the States upon whom the duty primarily rests do not do it, then the Federal Government must see that it is done. It is a question truly national in its scope and importance.

HISTORY OF FEDERAL AID.

The Federal Government until recently has done very little for education. The ordinances of 1785 and 1787 set aside certain portions of the public domain to be given perpetually for schools. Thus we see that from the very beginning of our Government and prior thereto it was the intention to aid schools and the general cause of education. But up until 1862 the General Government did substantially nothing for schools. In that year what was known as the Morrill Act was passed, distributing to certain land-grant colleges the income from Federal land-This act was afterwards amended so that the grant funds. funds distributed were larger. On March 2, 1887, the Hatch Act was passed, establishing agricultural experiment stations and adding to the fund appropriated. It is true that in 1819 an appropriation of $1,000 was made for Indian schools, but only in 1876 were appropriations begun to be made regularly for such schools; and, beginning in 1884, a like appropriation was begun for education in Alaska.

In 1907, what is known as the Nelson Act, enlarging the appropriation to the land-grant colleges, was passed, and in 1906 the Adams amendment to the Hatch Act was added, increasing that yearly appropriation. All told, up to 1914, through a period of more than 118 years, the Federal Government appropriated for schools a total of $172,715,689. Of this, $122,000,000 had been devoted to Indian schools and Alaskan schools. How much of it went to other Territorial schools can not be stated with accuracy. At all events, it thus appears that less than $50,in a period of more than 118 years, was what the United States had spent for agricultural colleges and experiment stations. Since 1914, under these old acts and under the Smith-Lever Act, the Smith-Hughes Act, and the vocational education act, the Federal Government has spent for education the sum of $229,299,628. In other words, in the last 6 years the Federal Government has appropriated for education in the United States more than four times as much money as during the preceding 118 years. During the present fiscal year the amount appropriated is $110,022,190, or more than twice as much as during the 118 years prior to 1914. I take great pleasure in the thought that I was privileged to vote for, work for, and speak for these measures passed during the last 6 years.

NO INTERFERENCE WITH STATE RIGHTS AND DOES NOT AFFECT DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOLS.

It has been erroneously urged against all of these measures that they constitute an invasion of the doctrine of State rights. They do not. In none of these acts is the control of schools by the States and local communities interfered with, nor do they in the slightest interfere with the private or denominational schools. I would not support any provision that did take away the control by the States and local communities of their schools, nor would I interfere in the slightest with private or denominational schools. All of them are good and need to be fostered and encouraged. We can not have too many schools. The charge that any of these laws or contemplated laws affect adversely denominational schools is based on lack of information as to the laws. It has not been long ago that many good people were opposed to State or county free schools. They then claimed that they were an invasion of the rights of personal liberty of the citizen to educate or not educate his children as he saw fit. Few people hold to that view now, and it will soon be so as to Federal aid.

MILITARY TRAINING IN STATE SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

While a member of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House I introduced and earnestly supported a bill creating military schools in the various States for the purpose of training military officers and at the same time giving a great number of worthy young men in all the States a first-class college training. I was not successful with that bill, but in the act of June 4, 1916, the committee authorized a substitute military educational training provision, out of which has grown the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. I supported that measure very heartily; it passed; and the result is that the Federal Government is now training about 100,000 boys in the various schools and colleges of the United States. In Tennessee there are being trained at the University of Tennessee 282; Knoxville High School, 455; Memchiversity of Tennessee 282; Khoxylife High School, 493; Alemphis High School, 614; Nashville High School, 649; Chattanooga High School, 581; Castle Heights, Lebanon, 225; Branham & Hughes, Spring Hill, 114; Columbia Military School, 158; Massey Military School, Pulaski, 126; Sewanee Military Academy, 150; Sweetwater Military Institute, 161; in all, 3,515. All these institutions have been greatly benefited by Federal aid. FEDERAL SYSTEM OF SCHOOLS IN REGULAR ARMY.

I have been at all times an ardent champion of education in the Regular Army. The Army reorganization act of 1916 provided for vocational training in the Army. I was one of the promoters of that provision of the law. Each year since I have sought to make the appropriation for this purpose large enough to give all boys in the Army who want to be educated a real practical education. In the last Army bill I fought for more than a week to secure an appropriation of $2,500,000 for the purpose of giving young men in the Army vocational training. I did secure this sum in the Senate. In a compromise in the conference between the two Houses I secured $1,500,000, and while this particular bill was vetoed, I am sure that the present Congress will not cut it down below that sum. We gave more than 100,000 young men in the Army vocational training of one kind or another last year. I would like to see the Army made a great educational institution in which boys could serve for two years and come out well educated and well equipped for the battles of life. This education might even be made compulsory. We must popularize our Army and make it a highly beneficial peace-time organization as well as a more efficient fighting force in time of war.

BENEFITS OF FEDERAL AID TO TENNESSEE.

Mr. President, I next want to point out what benefits have come to my own State of Tennessee under the provisions of the various Federal educational acts. Under the original Morrill Act with amendments the University of Tennessee received in 1920-21, $23,960. Under the Morrill and Nelson Acts the University of Tennessee received last year $38,000, and the Agricultural and State Normal School for Negroes at Nashville received $12,000. Under the Hatch-Adams Act the University of Tennessee received $30,000. Under the Smith-Lever Act, expended under the direction of the University of Tennessee, our State received last year $172,540. Under the Smith-Hughes Act providing for vocational agricultural training, Tennessee received last year $81,045, distributed for the pay and training of teachers in some 49 counties; and I am told that these teachers are doing an excellent and much-needed work in each For trade and industrial schools the Knoxville city schools, the Crockett Vocational School at Memphis, the Nashville city schools, and the Chattanooga city schools are receiving substantial aid; in home economics the Knoxville, Memphis, Nashville, Paris, and Orlinda schools are receiving substantial aid; likewise schools at Linden, Fayetteville, Greenfield, and Maryville. In vocational training there are schools at Chattanooga, Knoxville, Nashville, Athens, Bristol, Coopersville, Jackson, Johnson City, Lebanon, McMinnville, Memphis, and Sewanee. The University of Tennessee also received last year $17,880 for industrial rehabilitation work. All of these sums aggregate $375,495, of which the University of Tennessee received $282,380, much of which was expended in farm extension work throughout the State. Neither the University of Tennessee nor any one of the experiment stations, nor any one of the 49 schools that received aid under the Smith-Hughes bill are now or have been under any hampering Federal control. not believe anyone can say that the expenditure of this large sum of money-and the sum will be larger next year-in the State of Tennessee will not be of the greatest advantage. When we understand that there were, in 1911, 113 graduates in agriculture and engineering at the University of Tennessee, and that by 1920 there were 420, we can see the good results of this legislation. SO-CALLED SMITH-TOWNER BILL.

The Smith-Towner bill, which has been the subject of much debate in Congress and out of it during the past two or three years, has been again introduced. The bill creates a department of education and a secretary of education. doubtless be changed by making it a bureau in the new proposed department of public welfare. Generally speaking, the bill appropriates $100,000,000 to be apportioned among the States under the following heads: Seven million five hundred thousand dollars for the removal of illiteracy; $7,500,000 for Americanization; $50,000,000 for equalizing educational opportunities; $20,000,000 for physical education, including health, education, and sanitation; and $15,000,000 for the preparation of teachers. Here again the question of Federal control of education in the States is frequently raised. There is no provision in the Constitution of the United States giving the Federal Government control of education, but, on the contrary, the tenth amendment to the Constitution reserves this control to the States, and if the proposed bill is passed, it will not provide for any Federal control. There will be no more Federal control in this instance than there is now under the laws in existence, and surely no one will argue that there is any Federal control under those laws. If the bill is passed, the allotment going to Tennessee will be $2,418,929.92. Of this sum $437,696.96 will be devoted to the removal of illiteracy in our When we recall that in 1910 there were 219,507 illiterates in Tennessee, 122,454 whites and 98,541 colored, 10 years and over, the conclusion is inevitable that the enactment of this law would be of the greatest advantage to education in our State. We also have 18,607 foreign-born immigrants, and $10,326.86 will be devoted to their Americanization. The bill is so worded as to require the States accepting the funds appropriated in the bill to furnish themselves better commonschool educational facilities, and, in my judgment, it will prove to be of the greatest benefits in the removal of illiteracy throughout the country, while it will not in the slightest degree interfere with the local control of any schools. Some say that this is Federal extravagance, yet these opponents of the bill did not protest at all when our Government turned over $100,-000,000 to be distributed by Mr. Hoover to such destitute Europeans as he thought deserved relief, including many Germans and Austrians, just after the war; nor have they protested against the payment of $25,000,000 to the Republic of Colombia for doing her the greatest good that she ever received as a nation, namely, the building of the Panama Canal; nor have they protested against the expenditure in the last few years, excluding the war years, of countless unnecessary thousands of millions of dollars for the Army and Navy. It seems that some feel that the only time for the Federal Government to be economical is when it is proposed to educate the illiterate.

WHAT TENNESSEE MAY EXPECT,

Since I have been in Congress, by reason of the laws which I have helped to enact, Tennessee has received $820,177 more for education than she would have received if the laws had not been enacted. If the so-called Smith-Towner bill is passed, she will receive $2,418,928.92 additional, or more than $3,200,000 for all educational purposes. I shall do everything in my power to have this legislation enacted.

AN EDUCATED TENNESSEE AND AN EDUCATED AMERICA.

According to the 1920 census, soon to appear, there is a total of 182,574 illiterates over 10 years of age in Tennessee to-day. Of these 79,502 are colored and 103,072 are white. The number of white illiterates in Tennessee is distressing. It is true that this is a decrease of 19,382 since the 1910 census, but it is a long way from the goal of an educated Tennessee. At this rate of decrease, it would take 50 years to stamp out even white illiteracy. We must do better during the next 10 years. Our common schools have progressed very much in the last 10 years, and our colleges and universities also. The teachers provided under the Smith-Hughes law will be of great service during the next 10 years. Sergt. York, the great hero of the Ger-man war, has given a splendid impetus to education among the mountain boys and girls by his efforts since he came back from the great war covered with glory. Innumerable other men and women in the State have given their time, their talents, and their money to put Tennessee among the leaders in all educational work. We must all put our shoulders to the wheel and push in order to stamp out illiteracy within our borders. The exact figures for each county should be obtained and placed in the hands of county superintendents and county teachers, and a drive should be instituted to eradicate all white Largely of Anglo-Saxon, Scotch, and Irish origin, our white race in Tennessee has not been tarnished by the intermingling of inferior blood, and of this we are very proud. The Tennessee stock is almost purely American. The result is that we are not menaced by any anti-American spirit, as some of our sister States are. There is but one menace, and that is the large percentage of illiteracy. It should not be, and it must not be. With the State and private institutions that we have, with the great body of schools that we have, with the large Federal contributions that come to us, we have the opportunity, in the next 10 years, to make our people the highest exemplification of the purest bred, best educated, soundest principled Americans on the continent. Tennesseeans, do it.

Nor should we fail to do our part toward the Americanization of all of our people. It is the best and only way to maintain American institutions and make them everlasting, as they should be. It is the only way to stamp out bolshevism, socialism, communism, and other isms that are born of ignorance and are prevalent in some communities in our sister States. We do not have these troubles in Tennessee. Respect for law can only come from ability to read and understand. Fealty to a free government can only come from personal knowledge gained by intelligent reading and understanding of the principles of free government. The United States must be freed from the menace which ever arises from illiteracy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the plan which the Senator from Tennessee has in his mind will cost a great deal of money,

Where are we going to get it?

Mr. McKELLAR. The plan that I have in mind is the plan that is being pursued by the Government to-day and the money for it is being appropriated. I would suggest, however, that we could very properly and safely reduce our great war expenditures and devote a small portion of the money thereby saved to the education of the youth of the land.

Mr. BORAH. Let me make another statement, and I shall not interrupt the Senator further.

I saw a press statement some time ago to the effect that there were 90,000 children in one city in this country who were kept out of school because their parents were unable to buy their clothes and because of the malnutrition of the children for want of food. So long as the Government's expenses are what they now are, how are we going to relieve the people from the burdens which prevent them from educating their children at the time and prior to the time that it is possible for the Government to take hold of the children and itself educate them?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am sure I realize what is going through the mind of the distinguished Senator from Idaho-that so long as our enormous expenditures for Army and Navy are continued we shall have but little money to do these needful and helpful things for our own country, and that the enormous burden of taxation has brought great trouble upon us. I sympathize with the proposition of the Senator from Idaho. I expect to vote, I will say to him and to the Senate, for a disarmament resolution, perhaps not just in the form that it shall be presented, but I believe that it is the duty of the great nations to get together and agree upon a plan of disarmament, so that the tax burdens upon the people may be lessened, and so that other very necessary governmental functions in our country may be carried on. It is monstrous, when we come to think of it, that there are probably in the neighborhood of 15,000,000 of our people who are illiterate or quasiilliterate. It is true that the census figures give the number of illiterates as about 5,000,000, but they give also many million more who are semi-illiterate. The question of education is a more who are semi-illiterate. The question of education is a national question; it is a question that ought to have the serious consideration of the Congress, and I am sure will have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.
Mr. HARRISON. How are we going to bring about disarmament entirely and carry out the ideas of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] when the party lash has been applied to the other side of the aisle by the one highest in authority in Republican council?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the great practical difficulty, Mr. President, which we have to confront. It is most unfortunate that these great questions can not be settled by the Congress itself without outside interference. I believe that we would come much nearer getting together upon a proper program if we undertook to settle the matter ourselves, without outside official pressure. Left to itself I am sure the great body of the Senate is favorable to some safe plan of disarmament.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are so many controversial questions before us now that I shall not undertake to precipitate another by engaging in a discussion with the Senator from Tennessee. I shall only express my regret that he has indorsed a policy which is at variance with Democratic principles, and has confessed the failure of Democratic institutions in our form of government. His position is a condemnation of they 232.)

the States and an indictment of the capacity of the people to govern themselves

In my opinion the States will measure up to the requirements placed upon them. The people are competent to handle their local and domestic affairs, and when fully acquainted with the question involved in this plan to project the Federal Government into the local concerns of the States they will repudiate it and call upon their respective States to fully discharge any and all obligations devolving upon them. There will be no confession of State degeneracy and the necessity of aid from the Federal Government in order that the people and the sovereign States may perform the duties which they have voluntarily assumed. If Tennessee has failed in any respect in the past, I am sure that the patriotic people of that great State will make full amends in the future. I know the courage and spirit of the sons and daughters of Tennessee. They ask for no benefactions and largesses from the Federal Government in order that they may be relieved of duties which rest upon their State. Moreover, any contributions made by Congress must be taken from the people, including the residents of Tennesses. They can collect their own taxes and expend the same better than can the bureaucracy of Washington. The duties and functions of the State are clear, and there has not been granted to the General Government the power to control education or tax the people for domestic matters. The Federal Government has only delegated powers, and it may not transcend them.

I am sorry to see my good friend depart from sound Democratic principles and declare his support of policies which rest upon bureaucracy and paternalism and which in time will eventually change our form of government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator goes out I want to say that the position the Senator takes is a position that many men have taken before him. Many men have opposed progress in this country. It is the same position that the unprogressive always take.

I recall the time when there were men in many communities throughout the country who did not believe in free schools at all. They did not believe in county free schools. They did not believe in State free schools. They said education was not a function of government; that a man ought to be permitted freedom to bring up his children without education or with it, just as he saw fit; that it was not a question of whether the children ought to be educated, but it was a question of the particular views of the father of those children, and if the father wanted to keep them uneducated it was not the public's business

I thank God that that day has passed, and that the rights of children that are brought into the world are now considered by the counties, the State, and even by the United States as a matter of public good.

THE AIR SERVICE.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I noticed recently with great pleasure that the Secretary of War and the Attorney General are looking into the acts of certain people during the war, and are considering prosecuting them. Along this line, being in favor of economy, I desire to introduce and have printed in the RECORD an article showing the great extravagance and waste in the Air Service.

I ask unanimous consent that this article by H. L. Scaife, former captain in the Air Service, be printed in the RECORD. It begins on page 3 of the magazine which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Townsend in the chair).

Is there any objection?
Mr. HALE. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina requests unanimous consent to have an article published in the RECORD. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the April, 1921, number of Current History, pages 3 to 18.] WHAT WAS THE MATTER WITH THE AIR SERVICE?

[By H. L. Scaife, formerly captain in the United States Air Service.]

[The astonishing story, drawn wholly from official records, of one of the most colossal failures in human history—How the United States spent upward of a billion dollars for aircraft production without producing a single lighting plane on the battle front.]

Maj. Gen. Mason M. Patrick, who was Chief of the Air Service of the American Expeditionary Forces in France, having been duly sworn as a witness in the House investigation, made the startling statement that when hostifities ceased our rank in aviation was far behind any of our allies and far below the enemy's strength; that so far as the manufacture of pursuit or bombing planes in the United States was concerned we were in practically the same position as when we entered the war; and that so far as the manufacture of pursuit planes or bombing planes in the United States is concerned it would probably be eight or nine months from the time they settled on the type before they would produce it in quantities. (House hearing on aviation, p. 232.)

What was the matter with our Air Service? Why did the construction end of it fail?

The great achievements of the United States in the World War have passed into history and they will overshadow many shortcomings which were inevitable in so great an undertaking. The story of the loyalty, sacrifices, and daring, of American aviators will fill thrilling pages. In all the investigations there has been nothing but praise for them; no breath of scandal has touched the American birdmen. Aviation, commercially and as an arm of the Military Establishment, has come to stay, and millions of dollars of public funds will be appropriated annually for its maintenance and development. If there was anything wrong with the Air Service, instead of throwing a sheet over the corpse, we should go to the bottom of the tragedy and make sure that the untoward elements in it shall not repeat themselves in our history.

The casualties among our aviators in time of peace, as well as in war, make this branch of the service one where the record ought to be an open book. Because it has become a bone of centention in politics, however, the average man has been bewildered by conflicting statements and does not know whether our air program in the war merits praise or censure. Neither has the average man an inclination to examine approximately 25,000 pages of testimony to reach a fair and just conclusion.

THE TASK WE UNDERTOOK.

THE TASK WE UNDERTOOK.

America's part in the interallied war program was "to win the war in the air," and the special undertaking intrusted to us by our allies was to create a fleet of airplanes which, our Government officially announced, would be decisive of the war before an American army could be placed in Europe. England, France, Italy, and Germany successfully carried out their air programs, and each of these nations produced enormous quantities of airplanes. When we undertook the production of aircraft we had the advantage of the experience of our allies; their best experts were sent over to assist and to warn against the mistakes they had made.

Preparations for our aircraft production began in April, 1917, and on July 24, 1917, Congress appropriated $640,000,000, which was our first outlay, to carry out the aircraft program. The official statistics show that in the nine months from January 1 to October 1, 1918, Great Britain produced 23,509 airplanes, France 18,833, and Italy 2,928, a total of 45,270. (Report of Maj, Gen. M. M. Patrick, House hearings, aviation, p. 561A.) American production has been a matter of contraversy, but the main points can easily be cleared up with proper explanations. It has been stated frequently that an airplane of American make did not reach the battle front, while, on the other hand, it has been asserted by the War Department that at the time of the signing of the armistice there had been delivered for the use of the Army 16,952 airplanes, of which 11,754 were produced by American contractors and 5,198 procured from our allies. Paradoxical as it may appear, in a sense both of these claims may be correct; and at the same time both are misleading and untrue.

THE TRUTH IN A SENTENCE.

THE TEUTH IN A SENTENCE.

The simple fact is that no American-made fighting plane reached the battle front.

For military purposes there are various types of airplanes, the two great classes being training planes and service planes. Training planes are elementary and advanced. Service planes are divided into four classes—combat or pursuit, observation, day bombers, and night bombers. According to the testimony of Gen. William Mitchell, of the Air Service, in the House hearings, the plans called for 20,000 airplanes on the line and in reserve by the beginning of 1918, and it was estimated that the losses of machines which reached the line of battle would be 25 per cent per menth. On June 8, 1917, the official announcement was made that a fleet of 25,000 airplanes would be created. The American program called for enormous quantities of bombing planes and fighting planes which could cope with the Germans and, with overwhelming numbers, drive them from the sky.

The 11,754 airplanes of American manufacture claimed by the War Department are maximum figures of gross production, regardless of the use, if any, to which these planes might be put. These figures include "penguins," which were not intended to fly; training purposes; and thousands of airplanes, such as the Bristol, the Standard J, and various others, which were found to be unsafe and were condemmed and junked. According to the testimony of Col. Edgar Gorrell and the tables of statistics submitted from the War Department, the total number of American-bullt airplanes available for use in the American Expeditionary Forces on November 11, 1918, was 798 De Haviland 4s, of which 196 were on the front, 270 were being used for training in flying schools, and 332 were in the air depots. (House hearings, aviation, p. 3457.) It will thus be seen that the greatest contribution of American aircraft production was the De Haviland 4's, which, as will be shown, could not be used for fighting or pursuit.

The exact number of De Haviland 4's on the front at the time of the s

OFFICIAL CONFIRMATION.

The De Haviland 4's being useless for purposes of combat, the qualified statement that not a single fighting plane of American make reached the front during the period of the war can be accepted as an historic fact. The following testimony of Gen. Pershing before the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives on October 31, 1919 (ibid., p. 3968), is both explanatory and concluding tives on October 31, 1919 (ibid., p. 3968), is both explanatory and conclusive:

"Mr. James. How many American fighting planes were there in France at the signing of the armistice?

"Gen. Pershing. None. We had the De Haviland 4's."

On August 13, 1918, Hom. John D. Ryan, Director of the Bureau of Aircraft Production, testified as follows before the Senate committee investigating aircraft production (p. 1162):

"Senator Reed. That is true, anyway, is it not, that we were capable of quantity production of the 150-horsepower Hispano-Suiza; is that right?

"Mr. Ryan. Yes, sir.
"Senator Reed. It is also true that that engine works admirably in the Spad machine, which was an up-to-date fighting machine?

"Mr. Ryan. I think so.

"Senator Reed. It is a machine that is still used by the French and is regarded as one of the best machines?
"Mr. Ryan, That is true."

"Sonator Reed. As a matter of fact, we have not a single Americanmade fighting machine anywhere, have we?

"Mr. Ryan, I think that is true; that is, that is finally accepted."

Although there are to-day persistent official reperts to the contrary, the matter as to whether or not we produced a fighting plane might be considered at rest in view of the testimony of Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, before the House committee on July 31, 1919 (House hearings, aviation, p. 46):

"Mr. Fream. And we did not during the whole period of the war get a fighting machine or a bombing plane?

"Secretary Baker. Not a fighting machine or a bomber of American manufacture."

Notwithstanding their losses, at the time of the armistice the French had on the line 3,321 planes; England, 1,758; Italy, 812; Belgium, 153; the United States, 740; Germany, 2,730; and Austria, 622. The combined strength of enemy planes was 3,352 and that of the Allies 6,784 (House hearings, aviation, p. 3462). Of the 740 planes belonging to the American manufacture were the 213 De Haviland 4's, which number is reduced to 196 by the testimony of Col. Gorrell, of the War Department, as already shown. The total losses of the American aviation forces during the war due to action on the part of the enemy were 290 alrplanes and 47 balloons, and 1 balloon which was blown over the lines (bild., pp. 3463 and 3464). The relatively small number of casualties, as pointed out in the testimony of Gen. Menoher, was due to the fact that the United States Air Service really entered the aerial warfare at the culmination of activity (ibid., p. 556A). Whatever the significance might be, aviation fatalities in this country reached a much higher figure than those which occurred in Europe.

much higher figure than those which occurred in Europe.

MR. BORGLUM'S INVESTIGATION.

The first substantial efforts from the outside to call attention to the fact that the American aircraft program was doomed to fallure unless the situation was promptly remedied were those of Gutzon Borglum, the well-known sculptor, who prior to the war had been interested in aeronautics, and who now deserves to be decorated for his services in attempting, against insurmountable obstacles and humiliations, to prevent the greatest military and financial catastrophe in the history of our country. These words do not overstate the case, for, considering that the expenditures amounted to three times the cost of the Panama Canal, or about $10 for every man, woman, and child in America, the aircraft fiasce was probably the greatest financial failure in human history. The public funds expended reach a figure which is beyond conception and has been represented as being $1 for every minute from the birth of Christ to the present time. The purpose of the people who furnished the money was to provide 20,000 airplanes by the beginning of 1918 if it cost a kingdom.

Mr. Borglum's investigations were begun with the consent of fite President, and his charges were generally supported in a report by the investigating committee of the Aeronautical Society of America (Congressional Record, vol. 56, pp. 5920-5928). Notwithstanding the difficulties he encountered and the efforts made to discredit him, his work resulted in disclosures and charges sufficient to attract the attention of the President and the Senate. Finally the matter was taken up by the Senate, and hearings were begun before what is known as the Thomas committee, which took 1,226 printed pages of testimony, and its findings were set forth in Senate Report No. 555, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session. The majority of this committee were Democrats. The report was made during the war, when polities were adjourned, and the findings were unanimous.

WORK OF MR. HUGHES.

WORK OF MR. HUGHES. About the same time an independent investigation was undertaken at the request of the President by Hon, Charles E. Hughes, recently an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, who has since become Secretary of State. This investigation was undertaken in response to the following letter;

Hon. Charles E. Hughes,

9 Broadcopy, New York City.

My Dear Mr. Hughes: You have doubtless noticed that very scrious charges have been made in connection with the production of aircraft.

Because of the capital importance of this branch of the military service, I feel that these charges should be thoroughly investigated and with as little delay as possible, in order that the guilty, if there be such, may be promptly and vigorously prosecuted and that the reputations of those whose actions have been attacked may be pretected in case the charges are groundless.

I requested the Department of Justice to use every instrumentality at its disposal to investigate these charges, and, with the approval of the Attorney General, I am writing to beg that you will act with him in making this investigation. I feel that it is a matter of very great importance, and I sincerely hope that you will feel that it is possible to contribute your very valuable services in studying and passing upon the questions involved.

Cordially and sincerely, yours.

Woodbrow Wilsox.

In the Hughes investigation about 280 witnesses were examined and

In the Hughes investigation about 280 witnesses were examined and over 17,000 typewritten pages of testimony were recorded; the report and findings consisted of 182 printed pages. This investigation was made with the cooperation of the Department of Justice, and the report was submitted, through the Attorney General, to the President. To this work Judge Hughes devoted five months, taking testimony in different parts of the country, and it is said that for his services he refused to accept pay.

THE FREAR HEARING. THE FREAR HEARING.

The last major investigation of the Air Service was that by the House Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, the testimony taken by the subcommittee on aviation, known as the Frear Committee, comprising more than 4,000 printed pages. Unfortunately, while this committee was sitting, a political campaign was coming on, and in the findings charges of bias were bandied back and forth. In all the subcommittees investigating war expenditures, majority reports, subscribed by all the Republican members, and minority reports, subscribed by all the Democratic members, were filed. Hon. Clarence F. Lea, the Democratic member of the subcommittee on aviation, frankly made the following statement in the hearings (House hearings, aviation, p. 450):

"The Hughes investigation was strictly a nonpartisan investigation and as free from political influence as an investigation could be. Here we have a bipartisan investigation. Personally I am inclined to believe that perhaps Congress made a mistake in making it a bipartisan investigation. I think an investigation similar to the Hughes investigation would have been a preferable method of developing the facts, and the results would have been accepted by the country as a correct disclosure."

Political partisanship in a matter which strikes close to the vitals in our national life is, indeed, not an editying exhibit; acvertheless, political rivalry in such a hearing is or without dramate, extraless, political rivalry in such a hearing is or without dramate, extraless, political rivalry in such a hearing is or without dramate, extraless, political rivalry in such a hearing is or without dramate, extraless, political rivalry in such a hearing is or without dramate, extraless, political rivalry in such a hearing is or without dramate, and in the conflicting reports, the testimony of the witnesses will be sufficient to furnish a fair conclusion.

The Senate committee and Judge Hughes reported that as early as could have been produced in large quantities.

On August 22, 1918, the Senate committee reported that as early as Cotober, 1917, we were in possession of the necessary facilities to construct the Caproni, a powerful and successful bombing plane, approved by both Italian and English aeronautical engineers, and that, although expert Italian engineers had been on the ground to assist, only one experimental machine had been produced up to August 22, 1918, the heavy observation of the produced up to August 22, 1918, the heavy observation of the committee of a commi

During that one brief flight over Grand Pré I saw three of these crude machines go down in flames, an American pilot and an American gunner in each 'flaming coffin,' dying this frightful and needless death."

MISLEADING PUBLICITY.

this frightful and needless death."

MISLEADING FUBLICITY.

The public was deceived by false and misleading statements given to the press with official sanction. It is not difficult to discover the day this began and the method by which the public was misled into believing that fighting machines were being sent abroad. On this point the report of Judge Hughes may be briefly quoted:

"In the face of delays in production a series of misleading public statements were made with official authority."

In February, 1918, Secretary Baker authorized the public statement that "the first American-built battle planes" were en route to France, (Aviation, Mar. 1, 1918, p. 175, and other current publications.) After the public had been led by various newspaper dispatches to believe that the United States had reached quantity production, the Official Bulletin of March 28, 1918, released for publication in the American press on March 30, 1918, a series of photographs, alleged to be pictures of airplanes and aviation fields in France, and furthering the inference of a large production of American-built airplanes. The public was invited, through the Government's Official Bulletin, to purchase copies of these pictures at 10 cents each, or stereopticon slides at 15 cents, by sending applications to the Division of Pictures, Committee on Public Information, 10 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C. An inspection of these pictures during the examination of Secretary Baker in the Senate hearings (Vol. II, pp. 1134 and 1140) disclosed the fact that they were not photographs of American airplanes, but of French training planes, and a closer examination under a glass revealed the foreign names on them; pictures represented to be airplanes in France proved to be "penguins," which could not fly and were not intended to fly, but were made for beginners to run with on the ground as a part of their preliminary training, in which the machines rise a few feet and immediately drop back to the ground.

On March 29, 1918, the day before these pictures w day, there was a storm of protest from members of the Committee on Military Affairs on the floor of the Senate. Members of this committee declared that the committee on public information was proceeding with these publications, although their attention had been called to the fact that the information they were giving out was false, and promise had been made to the Committee on Military Affairs that every newspaper in the country to which these pictures had been sent would be instructed not to publish them. Senator Thomas, of this committee, denounced them on the floor of the Senate as "primarily, secondarily, directly, and indirectly a fraud upon the press of the country." (Congressional Record, vol. 56, pp. 4254-4256.)

Notwithstanding these protests, misleading information continued to be sent out until the end of the war. Shortly after this episode, when we hement protests were made by Senators of both political parties, an article was published by Secretary Baker, in which it was stated that "Whereas a year ago not a single good battle plane was being turned out in America, now we are producing battle types of the very latest design." (Scientific American, Apr. 6, 1918, p. 320.) Notwithstanding the sworn statements hereinabove cited, including that of Secretary Baker, that not a fighting plane of American make was produced during the whole period of the war, the Government Printing Office is now offering for sale to the public a book in which it is stated (p. 243) that we produced "3,328 fighting planes." (American Munitions, 1917-1918; price, $2.) It is also offering for sale another book in which under the caption of "Fighting or Service Planes," the statement is made (p. 47) that "the actual production of service planes, airplanes built in this country and fully equipped to fight in France, was confined to the De Haviland-4 machines." (United States Army Aircraft Production Facts; price, 10 cents.)

As to the persons in the War Department responsible for giving such information to the Committee on Public

"THE TERROR OF THE AIR."

A sample of the misleading pictures in question is reproduced with the present article. On February 14, 1918, the Committee on Public Information released for publication photograph No. 2339 of the old Nieuport monoplane, which had been discarded by the French for two years, and which was 40 miles an hour slower than the planes they were then using, with the following official description:

"No. 2339. The terror of the air. * * * This Nieuport monoplane, the fastest machine in the world, and used extensively by the French in this war, has been loaned to our forces "over there" to teach our aviators now in France how to chase and bag tretating German filers."

In his testimony before the House committee Elekenbacker explained.

teach our aviators now in France how to chase and bag retreating German filers."

In his testimony before the House committee Rickenbacker explained some of the defects of the Nieuport: The wings were liable to collapse and the gasoline tanks were in a vulnerable position and exposed. Regarding the Spad, for which the French had discarded the Nieuport, he said that in case of fire the machine could dive, and the fire would prochably be wiped out by the rush of air; but with the Nieuport on fire the only chance was to jump, as the position of the fire would make escape impossible. As to this Nieuport, officially described as "the terror of the air" and the "fastest machine in the world," Rickenbacker makes this statement on page 119 of his book:

"From the frequency of accidents to our Nieuports it may be wondered why we continued to use them. The answer is simple—we had no others we could use. The American air forces were in dire need of machines of all kinds. We were thankful to get any kind that would fly. The French had already discarded the Nieuport for the steadier, stronger Spad, and thus our Government was able to buy from the French a certain number of these out-of-date Nieuport machines for American pilots or go without. Consequently, our American pilots in France were compelled to venture out in Nieuports against far more experienced pilots in more modern machines. None of us in France ould understand what prevented our great country from furnishing machines equal to the best in the world. Many a gallant life was lost to American aviation during those early months of 1918, the responsibility for which must lie heavily upon some guilty conscience."

Judge Hughes reported that there was no question that grossly misleading statements were published with official authority, and he recommended that they deserved the prompt attention of the military authorities.

That a certain number of training planes were produced and that the Liberty motor reached large quantity production, as well as that many recommended that they deserved the prompt attention of the military authorities.

That a certain number of training planes were produced and that the Liberty motor reached large quantity production, as well as that many other things were accomplished, there appears to be no doubt; but as to the main things—the building of planes that could be used in fighting and sweeping the Germans from the sky—it is now established that the score was zero. When the Liberty motor was finally perfected, its value for use in certain types of planes was demonstrated; this was evidenced in the flight across the Atlantic by the NC-4 (designed and built by the Navy and equipped with Liberty motors), but this flight was accomplished by the Navy and not by the War Department.

In October, 1919, several months after the Navy had put the NC-4 across the Atlantic, the Army undertook a transcontinental race, and this performance, undertaken with conditions of peace, resulted in the death of 10 aviators. In this race 73 airplanes of different types were used, 39 being unconverted De Haviland 4's and 34 converted De Haviland 4's and 34 converted De Haviland 4's and miscellaneous planes. Nine of these aviators were killed in the unconverted De Haviland 4's, the type of plane which the War Department had sent to France. Gen. Mitchell, testifying in regard to the transcontinental race, stated that converting the De Haviland 4's would save at least 20 per cent in fatalities (House hearings, p. 3017). Meanwhile newspaper accounts of aviation fatalities have become so commonplace that nobody takes notice except the stricken widows and children or a broken-hearted mother.

ENORMOUS EXPENDITUEES.

ENORMOUS EXPENDITURES.

In brief, instead of the 20,000 airplanes of American manufacture which were to decide the war before the arrival of an effective army in Europe, the only planes of American manufacture on the front when the war ended were the 196 De Havlland 4's, America tailing the list, except for the 153 planes of Belgium. Was this due to any lack of money? The report of the House Committee on Expenditures in the War Department (Rept. No. 637, 66th Cong., 2d sess., p. 2) shows that the total amount expended or obligated for Signal Corps and aviation purposes during the 19 months of war with Germany to June 30, 1919, was $1.051,511,988 and that the expenditures or commitments for aviation alone amounted to over $1,000,000,000.

for her entire military appropriation—universal training and all-from 1907 to 1911, inclusive, was $200,000,000; that in 1912 it was $230,000,000; and in 1913, while preparing for war, she spent $360,000,000; and that in the year the war began she had authorized an expenditure of $210,000,000. Measured by this standard, it will be seen that Americans paid for aviation, without producing a fighting plane, about three times the amount that Germany spent on its entire army during the year when she was making ready to enter into a world condict.

During the last Congress one of the grounds urged for increased appropriations for aviation was that the United States did not have enough fighting planes to compete with Mexico for supremacy of the air on the border, and it was recently published, with apparent official sanction, that all the airplanes now on hand are to be scrapped. However, it is fair to call attention to the fact that even a first-class airplane will rapidly deteriorate, and in view of the hazards the War Department is right in taking no chances with the lives of aviators. The reasons given for the burning of the airplanes in France were that they were worthless and that the parts burned could not be salvaged (House hearings, pp. 221–224, 2407–2416, 3474–3479, 3978–3980).

Judge Hughes reported that the estimated profits which would be made by several of the large aircraft contractors, if their schedules were carried out, would be as follows: The Ford Motor Co., $5,375,000; the Lincoln Motor Co. (partly owned by the Dayton Metal Products Co.), $11,250,000; and the Packard Motor Car Co., $15,000,000. Large sums of Government money were advanced to various contractors on which to operate. Judge Hughes stated in the findings that in the case of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. the paid-in capital was $1,000,000 invested in the plant, and that advances by the Government to the extent of $2,500,000 were authorized. The sum of $10,800,000 was advanced to the Lincoln Motor Co.

PROFITS OF CONTRACTORS.

The profits which the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co, would have received under its original contracts were estimated by Judge Hughes to be more than $6.350,000, not including profits on its experimental contract and its contract for spare parts of De Haviland 4's, but it was explained that agreements contained in letters for the reduction of the hogie price would make the profits on the De Havilands not less than $3.500,000. Contracts were made on both the fixed-price and the cost-plus basis, and the report alleges that while it is probable that large profits were made on the fixed-price contracts definite information as to their extent would not be available without a survey in detail of manufacturing conditions and costs in a considerable number of plants, an undertaking impracticable in the inquiry. William C. Potter, Assistant Director of the Bureau of Aircraft Production, testified that if planes were defective or if there was bad workmanship the Government stood the loss and that the contractors would still get their percentages. (Senate hearings, v. 2, p. 1106.) As the subject is technical and there are many details, in fairness to the contractors and all concerned reference should be made to the records and to the full text of the Hughes report. (Concressional Record, pusiness relations on the subject of stitistics in the Hughes findings were business relations.

centages. (Schale hearings, v. 2, p. 1105.) As the subject is technical and there are many details, in fairness to the contractors and all concerned reference should be made to the records and to the full text of the Hughes report. (Congressional Record, bound volume 57, pp. 906-908.)

Subjects of criticism in the Hughes findings were business relations of the equipment division, of which Cok Edward A. Deeds became the active head on August 2, 1917, with former business associates and corporations with which he was connected at the time he entered the Government's service. It was alleged in the findings that a tract of 2,245 acres of land was leased to the Government by the Miami conservancy district, of which Col. Deeds was the head, and that upward of 33,000,000 was expended by the Government in its development, although part of the land was found to be marshy and unsuitable for the Government's purposes. The McCook Field, on which $949.085.35 had been expended by the Government to August 14, 1918, according to the Hughes report, was owned by Col. Deeds and a business associate to whom Deeds conveyed his interest, after which the land was conveyed to the Dayton Metal Products Co., which then leased the tract to the Government. (Ibid., pp. 890-893, and S. Rept., pp. 11-13.)

The Dayton Metal Products Co., of which it was stated that Deeds originally owned one-fourth of the stock, became variously interested in Government contracts which were under the administration of Col. Deeds, and it was further reported that Deeds was one of the incorporators of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co., which was owned by the Dayton Metal Products Co. The specifications of the Liberty motor called for the installation of the Deleo ignition system in the first 20,000 engines; this system, as Judge Hughes stated, had not been used before in an airplane engine. The system was controlled by the Dayton Engineering Laboratories Co., which in turn was owned by the United Motors Corporation to his wife. Transferred his heldings in the Unit paid save to a small extent," but it was not found that at the time of his official service Col. Deeds was a stockholder in the concern. (Ibid., pp. 887-890.)

It was further reported in the findings that, in addition to the profits which the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co. was to receive and the profits on various other contracts with the concerns with which they were connected, four of the recent business associates of Deeds in charge of the management of these companies—which "had the assurance of very large profits upon a relatively small investment of their own money"—were being allowed saluries amounting in the aggregate to $253,600, and that this was being charged against the Government as a part of the cost of manufacture. Confidential telegrams passing between Deeds and business associates whom he had recently left to enter the Government's service were set out as a part of the Hughes report.

Another investigation, not connected with the aircraft, recently developed documentary evidence that at the time Col. Deeds was commissioned in the Army and about the time the first contract was given to the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co., a large sum was being contributed by these interests to be used in Ohio for political purposes.

It was testified by Secretary Baker in the House hearings that he was unaware until this inquiry began that Col. Deeds had been convicted in the courts of Ohio of a criminal offense, the indictment charging a conspiracy in restraint of trade, including charges of corruption and bribery, the sentence of the court being that he pay the costs of the presecution and that he be confined in the jail of Miami County, Obio, for the period of one year. The verdict was filed on February 20, 1913. An appeal was taken, and on the bill of exceptions the case was sent back to the lower court for retrial, but thus far the case has never been retried (Patterson v. United States, 222 Fed., 599). Counts in the indictment, the verdict of the jury, and the sentence of the court are set forth in the records of the House hearings on aviation, pages 50-51.

THE ENGEL AIRCRAFT CO.

Among other contracts which caused comment was that of the Engel Aircraft Co., which was organized in August, 1917, by Harry E. Baker, a brother of the Secretary of War. As reported by Judge Hughes, Mr. Baker testified that this concern was organized with a capital stock of $1,500,000 (preferred $500,000 and common $1,000,000). This company took over the plant of the Engel Airplane & Motor Co. and issued its preferred stock therefor at a cost of about $225,000. The remainder of the preferred stock was sold for cash, and the $1,000,000 of common stock was issued to Harry E. Baker and his associates for their services in promotion. The company received a contract for 1,200 sets of spare parts at a price of about $1,000,000. When it came to the attention of the Secretary of War that the company of which his brother was the head had received a noncompetitive contract from the Government, the contract was canceled and arrangements were made for his withdrawal from the company upon the payment of his salary and $15,000 for his promotion services. The contract was then reinstated, and an additional order was given to this concern for 500 sets of spare parts for De Haviland 4's at an estimated cost of $2,275,000. (Congressional Record, vol. 57, p. 901, and Senate hearings, vol. 2, pp. 974–984.)

RECOMMENDATIONS BY HUGHES.

In the closing paragraphs of the report by Judge Hughes were the following findings and recommendations, which were submitted to the President, through the Attorney General, on October 25, 1918:

"2. The evidence discloses conduct which, although of a reprehensible character, can not be regarded as affording a sufficient basis for charges under existing statutes; but there are certain acts shown, not only highly improper in themselves but of especial significance, which should lead to disciplinary measures. The evidence with respect to Col. Edward A. Deeds should be presented to the Secretary of War to the end that Col. Deeds may be tried by court-martial under articles 95 and 96 of the Articles of War for his conduct (1) in acting as confidential adviser of his former business associate, H. E. Talbott, of the Dayton-Wright Airplane Co., and in conveying information to Mr. Talbott in an improper manner with respect to the transaction of business between that company and the division of the Siznal Corps, of which Col. Deeds was the head; and (2) in giving to the representatives of the committee on public information a false and misleading statement with respect to the progress of aircraft production for the purpose of publication, with the authority of the Secretary of War.

"3. The absence of proper appreciation of the obvious impropriety of transactions by Government officers and agents with firms or corporations in which they are interested compels the conclusion that public policy demands that the statutory provisions bearing upon this conduct should be strictly enforced. It is therefore recommended that the officers found to have had transactions on behalf of the Government with corporations in the pecuniary profits of which they had an interest should be prosecuted under section 41 of the Criminal Code."

On October 31, 1918, Hon. T. W. Gregory, Attorney General, in transmitting this report to the President, stated that at the conclusion of the taking of testimony both he and Judge Hughes, without conferen carefully guarded and qualified statements, and his report needs to be read at length. (House hearings, aviation, pp. 3862–3868.)

EVERYBODY PARDONED.

On December 3, 1918, the announcement was authorized by the President that, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, he had pardoned without trial Lieut. Col. J. G. Vincent, vice president of the Packard Motor Car Co., and Lieut. Col. George W. Mixter, who had owned a small amount of stock in the Curtiss Airplane & Motor Corporation, and who, according to Judge Hughes's recommendation, was to have been prosecuted under section 41 of the Criminal Code (the New York Times, Dec. 4, 1918). Later similar action was taken as to the others whom Judge Hughes had named for indictment. This left the case of Col. Deeds to be disposed of by a military court.

The matter was referred to Brig, Gen. S. T. Ansell, the Acting Judge Advocate General, and a board of review, consisting of Miller, Tucker, and Keedy, judge advocates. On November 11, 1918, Gen. Ansell filed a report, directed to the Chief of Staff, stating that the report of Judge Hughes "so clearly indicates conduct calling for his trial by general court-martial * * 2 * " that "the only adequate disposition of the case as to Col. Deeds is the preferring of charges against him as above recommended." It was further reported that if Col. Deeds was under oath when he testified before the Senato committee, and if the statement made by him there, which appeared to be false, was a matter material to the investigation, he was also guilty of perjury and should be court-martialed for that offense (House hearings, Aviation, pp. 2652, 2664, 2665, 2667, On November 15, 1918, the Secretary of War directed a communication to Gen. Ansell returning his recommendations and requesting him to reexamine the case and to send for Col. Deeds, his counsel, and any other person who could aid in the inquiry (ibid., pp. 2653). On December 26, 1918, in a lengthy document, Gen. Ansell reported back to the Secretary of War transmitted to the of confidence, and at which Gen. Squier, one of the speakers, is alleged to have stated that if Col. Deeds had not done "irregular" things the United States would not have had an air fighting force worthy of the name (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 57, p. 1150; House hearings, Aviation, p. 59).

ENEMY ALIENS IN FACTORIES,

Judge Hughes reported that 650 enemy aliens were employed in the factories of three concerns making aircraft for the Government. He cited the case of one man who had served for a year in the German Army and had been discharged because of wounds, who was a toolmaker in one of the plants. Another German citizen was placed in charge of the milling department and later became assistant general foreman of the machine shop. Another German notitizen was placed in charge of the milling department in one of the yelding department. The head of the drafting department in one of the plants making Liberty motors was a citizen of Germany and was reported for repeatedly making pro-German remarks. A conference of the management was held and, according to the minutes of this conference, reports were read "from various members of the drafting department who were in touch with the situation and who felt that the department was practically a pro-German institution." His removal was refused, and later a close personal friend of this man was found with photographs and drawings of the plant and was interned.

Instances were cited in the testimony where enemy aliens making American aircraft would cheer when news was received of German success in battle. In the Ford plant a man who had reviled and threatened the President was prosecuted and pleaded guilty to the charge. He was fined $300 and sent back to work. Numerous witnesses testified that they had seen airplane parts tampered with in such a way as to cause accidents. A case was cited where an aviator went to one of the plants to fly a machine and was told that it was not necessary to look it over, as it already had been examined by 20 men. Notwithstanding these ass mances, an inspection was made and it was found that the wings were wrong, the front struts were on behind, and the control was wrong, which fact alone would have resulted in the death of the aviator.

Numerous witnesses testified that changes in blue prints came in at such a rate that production was impossible. The files in one plant showed that over 2,000 changes had been ordered within a period of three months; in some cases as high at 22,000 castings would be ordered and work would proceed upon them when a change would come discarding them in favor of something else. (Senate hearings, Vol. I, p. 486.) It was testified that two of the concerns having contracts to make airplanes in this country for the Government were financed and controlled by Japanese bankers, and it was remarked by Judge Hughes that in some way these Japanese concerns got hold of a contract for nearly every type of plane that was being built by the American Government and were familiar with every detail of American aircraft plans.

UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

The Senate investigation was an inquiry into the cause of delay in aircraft production. The Hughes investigation was principally directed to the charges of personal dishonesty and official corruption. The investigation by the House committee was concerned with war expenditures. Regardless of the amount of testimony taken, none of these investigations purports to be exhaustive. During the Hughes investigation an order was published in the Bureau of Aircraft Production appointing an officer in that department as liaison officer between the bureau and the Department of Justice, making it impossible to volunteer information except through the regular military channels without liability to court-martial. A questionnaire sent to all persons who were in, or had been in, the military and civilian personnel would have afforded an opportunity for the development of further information.

While testimony relating to sabotage and esplonage entered into the records of all of these hearings as collateral matter, not one of these investigations was directed primarily to such subjects, and there were many matters of serious import which were never investigated. Among these was the disappearance of the Liberty motor tests between the testing field and Washington. On one occasion, during the night, the desks of officers in the equipment division were broken into, yet there was no investigation, even by the Air Service. On another occasion a Negro employee was found leaving the Air Service Building in Washington with official papers in his possession. His house was searched and a truckload of maps, plans, orders, blue prints, and confidential papers from the Air Service and Ordnance Department was found in his home, He was tried in the courts in Washington, convicted, and given a prison sentence, but it was never divulged for whom or for what purpose he had collected these documents. Many of those who were employed in the Bureau of Aircraft Production will recall the frequent confusions which resulted from orders for suites of off

MORALE IN THE BUREAU OF AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

MORALE IN THE BUREAU OF AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

One of the important efforts in war is to destroy the morale of the enemy, and when the morale is gone the battle is lost. The demoralization in the Bureau of Aircraft Production finally reached that stage when there seemed to be in the atmosphere an unspoken order "to see no evil, hear no evil, and speak no evil," and investigations which would be started in the bureau would summarily end. Reports showing that important phases of work had fallen down would be pigeonholed and optimistic reports would be transmitted to higher authorities and to our allies. One of the

and optimistic reports would be transmitted to higher authorities and to our allies.

One of the lessons of the war is that the spirit of the draft exemptions should have been more strictly followed and only the able-bodied with special technical qualifications placed in positions which could have been occupied by civilians beyond the draft age. Young men without business experience were placed in bureau chairs with the rank and power of martinets, and millions of dollars were squandered without responsible supervision. The young man is an optimist, a qualification for the firing line; he does not, however, see bridges ahead which must be crossed and which are apparent to the man of experience.

In Government management there is no complaint department where a man in the service or a private citizen can report an infolerable situation to some responsible official, removed from bureau influences, and demand that vital matters be brought to the attention of some one who has authority to apply a remedy. The one hundred and twenty-first article of the Articles of War, giving an enlisted man or an officer in certain cases the inviolable right of appeal direct to the commanding general, has been officially held not to apply to the Bureau of Aircraft Production. (House hearings, aviation, p. 2557.) The only remedy was through the regular military channels, where any man up the line has it in his power to block relief. Men who expressed anxiety lest our program "to win the war in the air and drive German airmen from the sky" was falling down were liable to have their mentality questioned and to have uncomplimentary notations made in their military records. A DEMORALIZING EPISODE.

During the summer of 1918 the draft age was raised and plans were on foot to create another army to be sent overseas. It was necessary to find men who could officer this army. On August 13, 1918, The Adjutant General of the Army sent the call to the Bureau of Aircraft Production inviting men in the grades of captain and lieutenants, many of whom had been commissioned from the training camps or had received military training, to make application for transfer to the Infantry.

This call for volunteers for the firing line was promulgated in Bulletin No. 30 of the bureau, dated August 15, 1918, and from the entire organization there were seven volunteers. Four of the seven were transferred to the Infantry and three of-these were assigned to duty with segregated troops afflicted with a venereal disease, one of them being assigned to a company of Negro venereals. Many of those who failed to respond were later promoted and some of them were recommended for the distinguished service medal. The comparison is made for the lesson which it teaches. While a soldier should gladly perform any service to which he is ordered, such treatment, in the circumstances, might have affected the morale of an entire organization. It should be understood that the call for volunteers had no reference to the Division of Military Aeronautics, which was considered a combatant arm of the service; it was directed to the personnel of the Bureau of Aircraft Production, which was charged with the duty of furnishing the equipment.

INJURY TO THE WHOLE PERSONNEL.

Bureau of Aircraft Production, which was charged with the duty of furnishing the equipment.

INJURY TO THE WHOLE PERSONNEL.

About this time Eugene Meyer, fr., Director of the War Finance Corporation, testified before Judge Hughes that he was requested by the Secretary of War to investigate and report on the aircraft situation, and that he reported to the Secretary that he did not think he had a man in the whole organization who could be called a man. (Abstract of aircraft investigation by Hon. Charles E. Hughes and the Attorney General, p. 292.)

There were many good, honest, faithful, efficient, and conscientions men in the Bureau of Aircraft Production, but this sweeping statement, made under oath by a man in a position of high responsibility, shows how tense was the feeling on the part of persons who were in a position to know the situation. The facts regarding the aircraft in this war will be a matter of interest to the historians of the world to the remotest generation, and this branch of our service passes into history under a cloud affecting the reputations of all men who were connected with it. The War Department, with its own conduct under criticism, and in view of the findings of a man fresh from the bench of the highest court of the Nation, should have demanded a trial through regular and orderly processes and demanded vindication of the innocent.

In Government affairs there are perfunctory post-mortems and a hurried burial rather than concern in the establishment of wholesome precedents. Honest mistakes of magnitude were inevitable and ought to be overlooked, but in this colossal failure, which invited military disaster to America and to the world, shall public officials be allowed to wash their hands and tell the people to forget it? The argument that it is of no use to worry about water that has passed over the wheel would be a fit propaganda for the profection of those who, in any war, take advantage of the confusion to piliage the country.

It is a notorious fact that investigations in Washing

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it was my intention to get up this morning a resolution touching open executive sessions, when we could have debated it until 2 o'clock. The circumstances, however, were such that we could not get it up this morning. May I now ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is in charge of the naval appropriation bill, to allow us to take up that resolution now and consider it? I do not think it will take much time for debate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] is interested in the resolution to which the Senator refers, and I should not like to make that arrangement without consulting with him. We are very anxious to get ahead with the naval bill, and I can not give way.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question in that connection? Several Senators are interested in being heard when the matter comes up. Would not the Senator allow us to fix a time to-morrow, say at 3 o'clock, to then take up the resolution and consider it?

Mr. HALE. I am very certain that we can get through with the naval bill either this week or the first of next week, and I think the Senator can wait until the naval bill is out of the way.

Mr. HARRISON. The trouble about waiting until next week is this: I have not pressed the resolution, for the reason that there are certain Senators on the other side who want to be here, and it would have inconvenienced them to some extent, and I gave way for that reason. Of course, I am very anxious to have the resolution considered at the earliest possible moment for many reasons. As the Senator knows, as the newspapers carry it, there is now a contest on about one of the nominations pending before one of the committees. I understand that they are meeting this afternoon to consider that nomination. I do not know when they are going to report it, but rumors are thick and flying everywhere touching the matter. The object of the resolution I presented was to take care of just such cases as that, so that the nomination might be conjust such cases as that, so that the nomination might be considered in the open. Of course, if we wait a few more weeks all these nominations will be in, and there is no telling what kind of nominees may be fastened on the people. I want to see these nominations considered in the open, and I had hoped we would get early and speedy action on the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator in charge of the bill will consent to an adjournment this evening instead of a recess, we can take up the resolution to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. We could do that, or, if it would be better, if they will agree to let us take it up at 3 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, we could do that. May I ask the Senator from Washington whether that would be agreeable to him?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I very much regret that I would not be able to agree to that proposition. I very much hope that in a few days, at the outside, we can dispose of this bill. It is extremely important, if we are going to enact a naval appropriation bill, that we should do it at once. It has to go to conference, and it is impossible to tell how long it will be delayed there, and a great deal of time is consumed in proceedings of that kind. It is not very long until the beginning of the fiscal year. The trouble about agreeing with the Senator which it would give me very great pleasure to do otherwise-is that it makes it more difficult to object to taking up other measures. It opens the door and makes it rather inconsistent for us then to object to the requests of other Senators, many of whom are interested in measures that they want to bring up.

It occurred to me that the best way for all concerned was to see if we could not, after a reasonable consideration of this bill and the presentation of any objections, get a vote on the bill and the amendments, and that will leave ample time for the Senator's measure and the other measures that are pending.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, I suppose we can not get any agreement on the suggestion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at this time.

DUTY ON AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is another matter I desire to discuss briefly. I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate more than a few minutes.

On yesterday there was passed, with much blowing of horns and blasts of trumpets, the so-called emergency tariff bill, pretended to help the farmers of the country in their present deplorable condition. That bill passed by the unanimous vote of the Republican Senators, except that of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses]. The bill, as we were told by its proponents, was to help the farmers. Of course, we attempted to show, and believe that we did, that it was gross hypocrisy. I offered an amendment yesterday which was very important. It did not receive the consideration it should have received, because of the agreement to vote at a certain time, and there was not much discussion, though I discussed it as fully as I could in the time that was allowed me. There was no defense made by the opponents of it. They offered no reason, indeed they could not, for their voting against it. With one exception, the amendment received the vote of every Democratic Senator We voted for it because we thought there was force and justice in the amendment, and that it would carry real and substantial benefit to the agricultural classes.

As the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. Townsend in the chair], who now presides, knows, as well as all Senators present know, one of the great hardships of the farming classes has been that the things they needed in order to produce their crops they have been in years past compelled to buy, in many instances had to pay a very high tax in the form of a protective tariff for them. Of course, that made these articles cost a very great deal more. For this reason, when the Democratic Party came into control of the legislative branch of the Government some eight years ago, we passed what was known as the farmers' free list bill, and it became the law when the Underwood-Simmons law was passed. In that farmers' free list we chose those implements and those articles and things which were necessary for the farmer to raise his crops and placed them duty free, so that they might enter our ports without bearing a tax, an additional burden on the farmers. That law has been of great benefit to the farmers. It has no doubt saved them millions of dollars.

So it was in order to retain that in the law and to see that the farmers continued to obtain free of tax the articles and implements which they needed in order to make their crops, and which they buy from foreign countries and import into America, so that they might obtain them at a reasonable figure, that I offered the amendment.

The object of the amendment was to protect the agricultural interests against the antidumping provision of the emergency tariff law, which, in all probability, when signed by the President will place a tariff so high that no one can estimate on sewing machines, barbed-wire fencing, fertilizers of all kinds, agricultural implements of every character, and those things brought into the United States that the farmer really needs, and which he can not get along without.

So I offered that amendment to protect the farmer from the provisions of the antidumping clause of the emergency tariff bill. I want to read it so there will be no doubt, when the question comes up in the future, as to who on yesterday were the real friends of the farmers; and I want the vote on this amendment incorporated in my remarks to reveal and to show in unmistakable language just who stood by them and who voted against them on this proposition. That amendment read:

Provided, That the provisions of Title II of the pending bill-

That was the antidumping provision, which will place these implements upon a tariff basis shall not apply to barbed-wire fencing, plows, disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, cotton gins, wagons, carts, sewing machines, fertilizers of every kind and elements from which fertilizers are manufactured, jute, binding twine, cotton bagging, and agricultural implements of every character which are now on the free list, and when imported into the United States from any foreign country.

So you can understand, from a most casual reading of that amendment, what was intended by it, and the substantial benefit that would naturally flow from it for farmers who have to buy the various articles which are enumerated in that provision when imported from foreign countries.

Mr. President, I ask that there be included, following my remarks, the record of the votes of those Senators who on yesterday voted for that amendment and those Senators who voted against the amendment.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows: [From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senate proceedings, May 11, 1921, p. 1307.]

Mr. HARRISON, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Vice President, The Secretary will read the amendment.
The Assistant Secretary. On page 26, line 13, insert the following

The Vice President. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Harrison. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Edge (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before. I withhold my vote.

Mr. Lodge (when his name was called). Announcing again the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. Page], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. Myers. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] has been compelled to leave the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 53, as follows:

NOT VOTING-11.

So Mr. Harrison's amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator a statement showing the amount of importations of those particular articles?

Mr. HARRISON. I was unable to obtain that information, because there was such haste displayed by Senators on the other side of the aisle in forcing the bill through.

Mr. BORAH. As the crime has now been committed, if the Senator can find time to get a statement of the importations, would like to have it, because it will come up again.

Mr. HARRISON. If I can obtain that, I will place it in the RECORD for the Senator.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 23, line 2, to insert in the item for navy yard, New York, "dredging, to continue, $100,000; in all, $140,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 14, to insert:

The expenditure of the appropriation of $1,150,000 for the construction of a large dry dock, navy yard, Charleston, S. C., continued in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, approved July 1, 1918, is hereby suspended until July 1, 1924.

Mr. SMITH. I ask that the amendment may go over for the present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 18, to insert:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: For the development of a submarine base, to complete, $800,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge, with respect to the item just rend, whether the investigations did not disclose some very serious objections to the continuation of the work at that place? There were reefs and other physical conditions, as I recall, which seemed to make it unwise to further continue work at this point.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Admiral Parks, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, did state that there were some physical difficulties to contend with in getting a proper foundation for a sea wall there, but those have been overcome; and a very slight amount over the original authorization, the testimony shows, will be sufficient to complete the work. Nine hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars has already been expended; and unless the work is continued to completion that will be a

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether there was any evidence at the hearings that the difficulties to which I referred and which the Senator has in his mind were overcome?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; there was conclusive testimony that they were overcome and that the work can be completed for the amount authorized.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether, in view of all the conditions and the necessity for submarine bases, which concede, there is any reason for building one here?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that was the consideration which moved the committee, notwithstanding the physical difficulties referred to, to decide to recommend the continuation of this work; that is, that this point was decided by the committee, upon hearing the advice of the military officers, be of very great strategic importance, in view of its position with reference to the West Indies, the Panama Canal, the southern coast of the United States, and the Gulf coast. situation was viewed by the strategists and the experts who advised the committee, and the committee was convinced by them that it is of the utmost importance to have a submarine base at this point, in view of what the Senator himself has urged-the importance of the development of submarines in modern naval warfare.

Mr. HALE. I think the evidence at the hearings showed that if we gave up the project as it is now we would have a net loss of over $1,250,000.

Mr. KING. That might be a gain.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I would like to direct the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the Navy Yard Commission in 1916 recommended the establishment of a submarine base on the Gulf. That was, of course, long prior to the necessities growing out of the war. In 1916 that recommendation was made by the Navy Yard Commission; this location at Key West was determined upon; and, as the Senator from Maine has said, the evidence shows that by expending this amount of money the entire project can be completed, and if they do not spend this amount of money the Government will lose quite a large amount in having the work that has already been done go to pieces.

Mr. BORAH. Will this amount of money complete the

Mr. FLETCHER. It will complete the modified project which they propose

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has no idea that this amount of money will complete it as it will be asked to be completed?

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that it will. I have a letter here from Admiral Coontz, in which it is stated that-

It is recommended:

(a) That the breakwater pier be completed.

(b) That current contracts be completed.

(Neither of these will involve any cost to the Government, outside the $800,000; and they will serve to protect the investment already made.)

(c) In addition, the marine railway should be installed.

The work they propose to go on with and complete comes within this appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that this appropriation of $800,-000 will complete a certain portion; that is to say, there will be another step taken, and up to that step taken there will be what they call a complete work.

Of course, I have only second-hand information, but I am informed that both these expenditures, the amount we have already expended and this $800,000; are only a small portion of what will ultimately have to be put in there to make it really available.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think they have found that some portion of what was originally contemplated can be dispensed with; that they are going to complete only what is absolutely necessary, and that this will cover it. Some part of the original scheme has been eliminated, in other words, and if the present contract is carried out the work will be completed so as to make the base a complete establishment, such as they desire, without doing some of the other things they might have felt called upon to do in case they needed something larger. This appropriation will carry out the work as planned.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that this item may go over until I can see if I can get the information which has been given to me orally in such shape that I can present it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would rather not have it go over, but of course that is a matter with the Senator having the bill in charge.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the request?
Mr. BORAH. That the amendment go over temporarily.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the letter from Admiral Coontz be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF NAVAL OPERATIONS, Washington, February 9, 1921.

Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Fletcher: Referring to your letter of February 7.
1921, regarding the question of the submarine base at Key West, Fla., and particularly to page 61 of the hearing before the subcommittee of House Committee on Appropriations, of which the Hon. Pathick H. Kelley is chairman, said subcommittee having in charge the naval appropriation bill for 1922, I desire to furnish you the following information relative thereto:

1. The Navy Yard Commission in its report, dated December 30, 1916, stated its opinion that it was at that time "advisable to locate and develop permanent submarine training bases to the extent of * * one on the Gulf of Mexico."

2. During the recent war, with the necessity of operating submarines and other small craft from Key West for the protection of the entrances to the Gulf of Mexico, the necessity for a submarine operating base at Key West became evident. In April, 1918, the plan for this development at Key West was completed. The plan was approved by the commandant, Key West, and by the commander of the submarine force and then received the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

3. An item providing for this base appears in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, which made available for this purpose

$1,000,000 and which authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for this purpose not to exceed $1,500,000 in addition to the specific appropriation made.

4. Under this authority various contracts have been entered into and the present state of progress of the preparation of the submarine base at Key West is as follows:

(a) Living quarters for culisted men, bachelor officers, mess arrangements, storehouse facilities, and recreation facilities have been provided for a division of 10 submarines.

(b) Machine-shop facilities and power supplies are available to a limited extent in the naval station proper.

(c) Proper berthing facilities are lacking. To provide berthing facilities, the piling of the wharves and the breakwater pier are practically complete. The planking of the piers is not done.

(d) The dredging of the basin is in progress but incomplete.

(e) The protection of the breakwater by a marl covering has not been undertaken.

5. Available funds will be exhausted prior to the 1st of July. To complete the entire project as designed and to provide a marine railway, which is a necessary part of any complete submarine base, will require approximately $1,000,000 in addition to what has already been spent. If no further work is done, what work has been done will be made of no value by the washing away of the breakwater, which can not be expected to endure for any considerable time without the protective covering. Storehouses at the submarine base are of a temporary character, but are of practically the same construction as houses in the locality and can, therefore, be expected to endure for a number of years.

6. The submarine base at Key West is required by the plans for of years.

6. The submarine base at Key West is required by the plans for national defense and is likely to be used not only to protect the waters of the Gulf of Mexico but also in the event of the West Indies becoming an active zone of warfare, or for tactical purposes in the event of a war in the Pacific wherein the facilities of the Atlantic coast are a war in the Pacine wherein the facilities of the Relatic Coals at utilized.

7. If current contracts are canceled, the Government is liable for considerable damage, so that little or no additional expenditure is required to complete the development of Key West for the limited purpose of a sulmarine base.

8. It is recommended:

(a) That the breakwater pier be completed.

(b) That current contracts be completed.

(Neither of these will involve any cost to the Government outside the $800,000, and they will serve to protect the investment already made.)

In addition, the marine railway should be installed. Very respectfully, Admiral, United States Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho, the amendment will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a perusal of the bill, as well as information which I have obtained, leads me to the conclusion that we have entirely too many yards and naval bases and points for the construction of vessels, and so on. We are pursuing the same wasteful and indefensible policy with respect to the Navy that has been pursued in the past with respect to the Army.

Mr. BORAH. And rivers and harbors.
Mr. KING. Yes; and with respect to rivers and harbors, It has been charged that owing to political pressure, logrolling, and other methods, perhaps, forts and military posts were established in various parts of the United States though they were wholly unnecessary. This course entailed millions and tens of millions of dollars of expense.

I hope that the present Secretary of War will abandon all unnecessary military posts and camps, which have been maintained by the War Department at such great cost. Admiral Sims has testified, as I recall, that we have too many navy yards, too many places at which work is done for the Navy. We are proposing by this bill to increase the number of naval

What the Senator from Washington said respecting my attitude is correct, namely, that I am in favor of developing the submarine. I think it absurd to project any naval program that does not take into account the formidable character of the submarine, not only for offensive warfare but for defensive war-There has been a vast amount of talk about the possibility of Japan sending her fleet to the western shores of the United States and England sending her naval fleet to the eastern shores of the United States. Admiral Sims has testified, and everyone who has given the matter any thought knows that an invasion of the United States by a fleet, no matter how powerful, is a fantastic dream. The construction of subpowerful, is a fantastic dream. The construction of sub-marines, the development of airplanes, and the employment of mines make the invasion of a country practically impossible. As a great naval expert has said, "The submarine has brought the little nation into its own." Great Britain, with her mighty fleet, more powerful than that which Germany possessed, did not dare to approach the Belgian or the German coasts. A few submarines put her fleet to flight. A few airplanes compelled them to hide in harbors. It is important that we improve our submarine plans of naval defense and develop the submarine as an indispensable part of a proper naval program. If we would spend more for submarines and less for battleships, in my opinion it would be a wiser policy.

When we come to appropriations for submarines, I shall have something further to say on the subject. that now, notwithstanding the tremendous expenditures which we have made for naval purposes, we do not have an adequate number of suitable submarines. If we are to continue this saturnalia of war expenditures, if we are to continue this naval rivalry with other nations, then we must make further appropriations for submarines. We will need more coastal submarines as well as those which have a greater sea radius.

But we are building, I repeat, too many bases. spending too much money to maintain navy yards. We are diffusing instead of concentrating. We have navy yards along the coast, a half dozen or more. As I recollect the testimony of Admiral Sims, two would be sufficient. Some time ago there was an investigation ordered with respect to the necessity of maintaining a major naval base in the Caribbean Sea. I submit that it is unwise for us to expend any considerable amount for naval bases on the southern or southeastern coast of the United States until we know what our policy is going to be with respect to a major naval base in the Caribbean Sea. We have not the report yet. I do not know when we will get it, but in the meantime we are spending millions of dollars for naval bases, submarine bases, and other constructive works,

All of this reveals the fact that we are in a condition of flux. We are opportunists. We are drifting in our naval policy as we appear to be drifting in our policy relating to foreign affairs. This is a period of vacillation and drifting. We are drifting with the tide, with the international tide and upon domestic currents many of which are cross currents and will lead to collisions and serious troubles. I hope that the administration will develop a safe and wise foreign policy and that the Federal officials who have charge of national domestic affairs will adopt a proper policy with reference thereto. I mean no disrespect when I say that in my opinion our naval program is a serious mistake. If it were not so tragic I would say it was a joke. We are called upon to support a policy which will be discredited and which will be provocative of international resentments. We should revise our program, change our policy, seek world cooperation for the reduction of armament, and in the interest of world peace. We should talk international amity, not war. We should meet the nations of the south in friendly conference, and join in the formulation of a world program which would promote national prosperity and international peace and amity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill,

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in the items for navy yard, Puget Sound, Wash., on page 24, line 8, after the numerals "$95,000" to insert "pler 4, 700-foot extension, $500,000; rifle range for small arms, including purchase of land, $90,000"; and, in line 10, to change the total from "$1,405,000" to "$1,995,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 6, to insert:

Naval hospital, San Diego, Calif.: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to continue and to enlarge the construction of the naval hospital being erected at San Diego, Calif., on land donated to the United States and accepted by the Secretary of the Navy under the authority conveyed in the naval act of July 11, 1919, at a total cost not to exceed $1,975,000, and $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated to continue its construction.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if this is deemed to be a necessity? What reason is assigned by the House for failing to legislate for it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not had an opportunity to confer with the House members in regard to the reason for their action in not putting this item in the bill. It may have been because it was not called to their attention. whether it was or not, but the showing made before the Senate committee as to the conditions at San Diego, where a very great number of Navy and Marine personnel are assembled, makes the provision a practical necessity. The land has been donated to the Government. In addition to that, the citizens of San Diego have furnished buildings which the Government has used without charge for taking care of sick sailors, but the city is compelled to withdraw that permit in order to carry out the plans of civic development there, and so it becomes necessary that the Government shall provide its own hospital facilities.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if during the war the Navy was not compelled to construct a large number of hospitals because of the large personnel in the Navy? It would seem to me that in view of the diminution in that number, the Navy personnel being reduced from more than 500,000 to 127,000 now, there ought to be some hospitals available.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are; but nearly all the buildings that were put up during the war were of a very flimsy character, and it costs more to maintain them, with very inadequate accommodations, after the expenditure of that cost than it would to provide permanent and proper hospital buildings.

Mr. KING. My information was that a portion of them were of the character described by the Senator-flimsy-but my information is that some of the hospitals are serviceable. Some buildings were purchased, as I recall, which had been used for hotels and others for hospital purposes. If the Government still owns them they should be used for naval hospitals.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to read a paragraph from the letter of the Surgeon General with regard to the general situation. He states that-

In comparison with the east coast, where there are 15 naval hospitals, with much greater bed capacity, it will be seen that adequate provision has not yet been made on the west coast for the care of the sick of the now divided fleet and increased naval importance of that section. Mare Island hospital, with 1,090 beds, has had 1,078 patients. San Diego hospital, occupying exposition and temporary wooden buildings on the exposition grounds, has been caring for from 300 to 500 patients, with the excess in tents.

This situation is due in part, I will say briefly, to the recent movement of a large portion of the fleet to the Pacific coast, which eught to be increased, and I hope and expect it will be, in view of the general situation and development of the fleet. The hospital facilities on the west coast are in a similar position to the shore stations, and other necessary auxiliary stations of the fleet. They have not been kept up as they should have been on the west coast, because attention has been concentrated on the Atlantic coast, particularly during the war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, to insert after line 14: Submarine base, New London, Conn.: Toward the completion of a submarine base at New London, Conn., $50,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to have the amendment just read passed over, and also the amendment in lines 23, 24, and 25, page 25, providing for a submarine and destroyer base at Guam, and the amendments on pages 26 and 27, having to do with a naval air station at Sand Point, Wash., a naval submarine base at San Pedro, Calif., and a naval supply base at Alameda, Calif. I desire to present the question that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill and not admissible upon the pending bill. I can present it now if it is desired.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would be very glad if the Senator would do so.

Mr. BORAH. It will not take very long. I desire to direct particular attention to the amendment beginning with line 10 on

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the Chair to understand? Does the Senator make a point of order?

Mr. BORAH. I am going to make a point of order, but I desire to discuss it a moment before I do that. The amendment to which I refer reads as follows:

Naval supply base, Alameda, Calif.: Toward dredging, excavating, and grading, $1,500,000.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept from the city of Alameda, Calif., free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government in excess of $1, a certain tract of land on San Francisco Bay, containing 5,340 acres, more or less, for use as a site for a naval base, being the land described in a certain deed made the 5th day of February, 1920, by and between the city of Alameda and the United States of America. Also to accept free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government, in excess of $1, certain other land adjoining said tract, being the land typing between the southwesterly boundary line of said tract and the pierhead line in front thereof.

That is that particular amendment. Then there is another provision on page 27, or, rather, three provisions of a similar nature. I make the point of order that all this is general legislation, and I wish to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling found in Precedents and Decisions, page 67, as follows:

Mr. Gallinger proposed an amendment as follows:
After line 15, on page 26, insert:
"Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: New dry dock at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, of sufficient size to accommodate the largest battleship and to be at least 1,000 feet in length, designs and specifications to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, to cost $2,500,000, $200,000."
Mr. THORNTON. I make the point of order on this amendment that it is general legislation.
The Vice President (Mr. Marshall). The point of order is sustained.

I make the point of order in the interest of time, which I understand the Senator in charge of the bill is anxious to con-

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the usual and ordinary practice of the Senate, in fact, the invariable practice of the Senate, is to consider provisions of this kind as a part of the maintenance and development of the Naval Establishment. It does not change existing law and is not general legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to submit an observation-

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Very well.

Mr. BORAH. It must necessarily be general legislation, because what is proposed to be done can not be done without this legislation. It applies to the entire project—to the building of a new naval base and the acquisition of land.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it would appear that if the position of my friend from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] were the correct one there would be no limitation upon the committee or the Senate and they could embark upon any scheme or project, regardless of its cost, if there was any sort of indirect connection between it and some accepted naval policy. If legislation is enacted providing for the Government to expend $10,000,000 for the development of a naval base at Bremerton, Wash., the State from which the Senator comes, we denominate it general legislation. Obviously it would be general legislation in another bill to provide for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to build some other naval base at some other point, though such project would lead to the abandonment of the Bremerton base.

This in effect is a new enterprise; it is not the completion of a project heretofore authorized. It is a new development, as much so as would be the authorization of the building of a battleship. Certainly no one would contend that it would not be along the line of general legislation or within the spirit of general legislation to authorize the construction of submarines when theretofore there was no law authorizing their construction. The authorization of one depot or one supply base may not be the basis for other legislation for another supply base. It would be general legislation; it would be changing existing law upon the particular appropriation bill. We might just as well say, Mr. President, there shall be no rule at all if under an appropriation bill, which is special in the sense that it re-lates to a certain subject, we may deal with any subject regardless of the fact of anterior legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the contention of the Senator from Utah is correct, no appropriation bill could ever contain a new item of any kind or character unless there was a previous law authorizing it. If we were to place in this bill a general provision governing the building of submarines or governing the creation of new bases, and so forth, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the language of the rule provides that no new item to an appropriation bill shall be received except under certain conditions. What are they? First, the item must be estimated for; second, it must be reported by a standing committee of the Senate. Any new item not containing general legislation, either repealing general legislation or enacting new general legislation, but simply providing for a new item of appropriation on a general appropriation bill, is in order.

If the amendment had been offered by a Senator on the floor, or if it had not been estimated for or had not been reported by a standing committee, such as the Committee on Naval Affairs, it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORAH. We are not making the point of order that the amendment has not been estimated for, and the Senator from Virginia is too good a parliamentarian to confuse the two propositions. We are making the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. In what respect?

Mr. BORAH. Even if the item has been estimated for, that does not obviate the other objection, that it is general legislation.

Mr. SWANSON. It is simply a new item of appropriation for a naval base.

But, Mr. President, that is not all it is. Mr. BORAH.

Mr. SWANSON. How is it general legislation?

Mr. BORAH. It authorizes the purchase and acquisition of land.

Mr. SWANSON. It is an item of appropriation for a specific purpose; it is not general legislation for the acquisition of land generally for any purpose. It is a new item of appropriation similar to many new items of appropriation which have been held in order. The rule provides that no new item of appropriation shall be in order unless it is estimated for. If such an item has been estimated for, as this has been estimated for, that makes it in order. It is also reported by a standing committee of the Senate, which further makes it in

I should like to be informed where there is any general legislation in the item, though it is a new item. Such a provision has been decided repeatedly to be in order.

Mr. BORAH. It has been decided the other way.

Mr. SWANSON. It never has been. The Senator may find half a dozen instances where new items have been presented which were estimated for or been reported by a standing committee of the Senate which have been declared to be in order. That must inevitably be so, or else an appropriation bill could not do anything but provide for carrying out something which had been previously authorized. Otherwise we could not even provide for a new clerk.

The item is new legislation; of course, everything is new legislation; but it is not general legislation. It establishes no general policy. It simply makes an appropriation for a new item which is designed to create a new naval base. Such a rule as that contended for by the Senator from Idaho would preclude the Naval Committee from doing anything unless it had been authorized a year ahead.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that there are some precedents in favor of this kind of legislation. If they can be shown, perhaps, I could be convinced; but the citation to which I have called attention is directly contrary to the contention of the Senator; and the decision in that case was made by the Vice President who left the chair only a few weeks ago. The Presiding Officer will observe the language in which the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire at that time was couched:

That meets precisely the definition which was given by the Virginia. I have not been able to find any Senator from precedent to the contrary. The Senator from Wisconsin, who was unable to be here this afternoon, had investigated the matter and called my attention to it. He is a parliamentarian and I am not. I am merely reciting the precedents as I find them; and the one I have cited meets every test which the Senator from Virginia has applied to the question.

Mr. SWANSON. I remember the occasion when the item in connection with the drydock at the Portsmouth Navy Yard was offered. That item had never been estimated for; it never had been reported by a standing committee of the Senate; and consequently it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. BORAH. I beg the Senator's pardon; there is no such suggestion as that in the record.

Mr. SWANSON. The matter the Senator has read does not so state; but I guarantee that if the Senator will look at the proceedings at the time the amendment was offered he will find the facts to be as I have stated. It could not be added as a new item to the appropriation bill. Why? Because it had not been estimated for and had not been reported by a standing committee of the Senate. The rule is plain. I will read it to the Senator. Items similar to the one now proposed have been added a hundred times to naval appropriation bills, and I do not recall ever having seen one fail.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; we have had "pork-barrel" measures here from time immemorial.

Mr. SWANSON. And the Senator, when western matters were involved, has engaged in such legislation as much as have other Senators

Mr. BORAH. No; I have not, as the record will show; but I am willing to agree with the Senator from Virginia to stop it.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well, I am for stopping all "pork-barrel" measures, and always have been.

Mr. KING. Let us start with this one.

Mr. SWANSON. The defense of the country is not a "pork-barrel" matter.
Mr. BORAH. No; but the item under consideration is not for the defense of the country; it is a real estate deal.

Mr. SWANSON. That may be so; that is a subject of discussion.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a question of "might be"; but it is. Mr. SWANSON. The judgment of the Senate can be passed on it, the Senator may give his reasons in opposition, but he is no more high-minded than are other Senators.

Mr. BORAH. I do not like to have the Senator refer to a real estate deal as a matter involving the defense of the

Mr. SWANSON. The rule provides:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an esti-mate of the head of some one of the departments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Chair will permit me, in view of the fact that the Senator from Idaho has cited a precedent upon this question, which I have not had an opportunity to examine—and I am very much surprised at the point of order being raised to this item, because it is similar to perhaps half of the appropriations that are carried in the ordinary Army and naval bills-I desire to say that in a hasty examination I find the following precedent, which seems to me to be directly to the contrary of the point made by the Senator from Idaho. I read from page 76 of Gilfrey's Precedents:

[Fifty-third Congress, third session, Journal, p. 103.]

1. NOT GENERAL LEGISLATION.

FEBRUARY 9, 1895.

The question being on the following amendment to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, viz, on page 9, after line 8, insert the following:

"Construction of telegraph cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands: The President is hereby authorized to contract for the entire work of laying a telegraphic cable between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands and to direct the prosecution of such work whenever such a contract shall be made, and as a part of the cost of such cable the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated, said cable to be owned and operated by the United States Government."

After debate,

Mr. Blackburn, on behalf of Mr. Mills, raised a question of order, viz: First, that the amendment added a new item of appropriation not needed to carry out any existing law or treaty stipulation—

It seems to me that is exactly the question raised by the

It seems to me that is exactly the question raised by the Senator from Idaho-and not in accord with any act or resolution passed by the Senate at this session, and not moved by direction of a standing or select committee

That additional point was raised-

Nor proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of a department; second, that the amendment proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill and was not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill, and hence was not in order under the first and third clauses of Rule XVI.

The Vice President (Mr. Stevenson) submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order? and it was determined in the affirmative; yeas 36, nays 25. (See Congressional Record, pp. 1978–1986.)

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I call attention to the ruling upon which I based the point of order. Perhaps it has been called to the Chair's attention; but, for fear it has not, I will call the Chair's attention to it, on page 67 of the Precedents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator give the date of

Mr. BORAH. June 2, 1914, at page 67 of "Decisions on Points of Order, Volume II":

Mr. Gallinger proposed an amendment as follows:
After line 15, on page 26, insert:
"Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: New dry dock at the Portsmouth Navy Yard, of sufficient size to accommodate the largest battleship, and to be at least 1,000 feet in length, designs and specifications to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, to cost ($2,500,000)
"Mr. Theorymon, I make the point of order on this amendment that it

Mr. THORNTON. I make the point of order on this amendment that it is general legislation.

The Vice President (Mr. Marshall). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to call attention to the difference between the situation there and the situation here, of course I do not know what reasons may have actuated the Chair in making that ruling, but it may have been based upon various grounds-among others, that the item had not been estimated for, that it was not reported by a committee, or that it increased the appropriation. The situation here is entirely different in both of those respects, inasmuch as it has been estimated for, recommended by the department, and reported by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I looked up the Congressional RECORD, and the volume of precedents states all that is stated No question was raised as to the item not having been estimated for or reported by a standing committee. The volume of precedents states the matter just as it occurred. Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this is a specific item—a specific appropriation. It is not general legislation. It is not a general appropriation. It is a specific item for a specific purpose, coming under Rule XVI, which says:

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Now, that provides what? That a new item of appropriation like this, which is a new item for a specific purpose and a specific appropriation, is in order provided it is estimated forand this is estimated for—and provided it is reported by a standing committee of the Senate—and this is reported by a standing committee of the Senate.

As to the case to which the Senator has referred, I do not remember that specific occasion, but I remember that Senator Thornton at one time had charge of the naval bill here, and for years Senator Gallinger was trying to get a dry dock at Portsmouth. It was never estimated for, and was never reported by a standing committee of the Senate. Every year he would offer an amendment to include that in the naval appropriation bill, and a point of order was made against it, and I think it was uniformly ruled against.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I do not know what happened outside. I only know what happened as reported by the RECORD.

I presume that the RECORD states the fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is not well taken. The amendment is moved by direction of a standing committee of the Senate, which makes it in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that 'the amendments which I spoke of a few moments ago—the clerks at the desk have them-including the amendments on pages 26 and 27, may go over, as they will require some general discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments on page 25, lines 15 to 17 and lines 23 to 25, and on page 26, lines 4 to 24, both inclusive, will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Washington what disposition was made of the items on page 23 relative to the navy yard, Charleston, S. C.?

Mr. BORAH. They were passed over.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; they were passed over;
Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether or not the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] has been advised as to that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The items were passed over. I do not know whether he was advised or not. He will have an opportunity to make any presentation he desires.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to include the amendments on page 27 as being passed over?

Mr. BORAH. I ask to have the amendments on pages 26 and 27 passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, they will be considered as passed over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does that include all the amendments on page 27?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; they all present the same question.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 26, line 1, in the appropriation for training station, San Diego, Calif., to strike out the word "complete" and to insert the word "continue," so as to read:

Training station, San Diego, Calif.: To continue the development of a permanent training station, San Diego, Calif., $1,000.000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for public works from "$5,632,000" to $12,971,000."

Of course, that should go over in connection Mr. BORAH. with the rest of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 30, line 22, to strike out "$72,421,647" and insert $87,798,447," so as to read:

Pay of the Navy: Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, $37,023,859; officers on the retired list, $3,113,771; commutation of quarters for officers, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sallmakers, machinists, pharmacists, pay clerks, and mates, naval constructors, and assistant naval constructors, $4,254,192, and also members of Nurse Corps (female), $1,000°; for bire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $25,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $620,250; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge, $4,390,800; interest on deposit by men, $10,000; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, enlisted men, men in trade schools, and pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, $87,798,447.

Mr. BORAH. Those items on pages 30 and 31, as I understand, are the items which provide for an increase in the expense of the personnel of the Navy. I will ask the chairman if I am correct

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is under the head of "Pay of the Navy," and does depend almost entirely upon the number of men in the Navy.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I desire to submit some remarks upon those items, and I should like to have those go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether, under that item of $87,000,000, any provision is made for the marines?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that is in a separate part of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 31, line 24, after the words in parentheses, to strike out "at 50 cents per diem"; in line 25, after the word "midshipmen," to strike out "at $1.08 per diem"; and on page 32, line 1, after the word "credited," to strike out "at the rate of 60 cents per ration," so as to read:

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes in case of death or desertion upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Supply Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief salimakers) and midshipmen, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval hospital fund. tions stopped hospital fund.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator. I recall that in the committee the question of the commutation of rations was under discussion, and it was developed that the amount required to feed the Navy per man was a great deal more than the amount required to feed the Army per man. The question arose as to whether it should be 75 cents or 60 cents a ration. Does this relate to the same item or the same matter?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not the same item, but it is similar to it in principle in that it involves rations for men. This is commutation of rations, and what the Senator referred to was the actual ration that is consumed by the sailors and by the soldiers of the Army. What was it that the Senator desired to

Mr. KING. If it was determined that 75 cents or 60 cents should be the ration, what is the reason for striking this out without making some other provision?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is provided for in another part of the bill-in the legislative provision, in the back part of the bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 20, to increase the appropriation for "Provisions, Navy," from "$20,609,672.50" to "$29,392,767."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator whether or not the amount to be appropriated for the provisions of the Navy does not depend upon the strength of the personnel; and, if the personnel shall not be increased but, upon the contrary, shall be diminished, why should we increase the provisions of the Navy from $20,000,000 plus to $29,000,000 plus?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there are two reasons making this increase necessary in the bill as reported by the Senate committee. One of them is the one mentioned by the Senator from Utah—that is, that the Senate committee made its figures for the supply of the Navy upon the basis of 120,000 men, whereas the bill as it came from the House provided for 20,000 men less. There is, however, another reason, and that is the difference of opinion about the cost of feeding the same number of men. The House based its appropriations upon the calculation of a cost of 50 cents for a man's ration. The showing before both the House and the Senate committees was that at the present time the actual cost of a sailor's ration in the fleet, which has just returned after a four months' cruise, was over 70 cents. The cost last year for the whole Navy was 68 cents.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment; let me complete the statement. The Paymaster General of the Navy was requested, after a very close cross-examination by Senators, many of whom inquired with the utmost pertinacity into this proposition, to furnish to the committee the actual cost of the provisions bought by the Navy; and he supplied the committee with the actual prices paid by the Navy wholesale in New York City, where they buy most of their supplies, for the ingredients which go to constitute a ration; and the cost of the ration, based upon those figures, was 63 cents. Of course, the actual ration would cost more than that, because they can not buy all the supplies of the Navy to the same advantage they can secure in buying whole-sale in New York City.

The Senator referred to the cost of the ration in the Army. That was estimated for the month of last March at 42 cents, and a serious question was raised as to why the Senate committee should base its appropriation upon an estimate of cost of 60 cents for a ration in the Navy. The reason for that is this, that the undisputed evidence before the committee is that the Navy ration, which is fixed by law, contains 50 per cent more by weight of the material of which it is constituted, and also a greater variety of material, than the Army ration; and being one-third larger than the Army ration, if we apply the figure of 42 cents as the cost of the Army ration, the Navy ration would cost 63 cents instead of 60 cents, which was allowed by the Senate committee. So, taking that comparison, the figure allowed by the Senate committee was lower than the comparison would produce as a result.

Mr. KING. I was about to suggest to the Senator that, as I recall a portion of the testimony which was given before the -I did not hear the testimony to which the Senator refers, which came in later-the evidence seemed to indicate that the price fixed for the ration of which testimony was given was based upon war prices, based upon the prices of materials which had cost a figure very greatly in excess of what the same articles could be purchased for now, and certainly cost a great deal more than what the same articles can be purchased for in the coming year. This bill is to care for the next year. Doubtless the committee have taken that fact into consideration, but it would seem to me that in making the estimates for the coming fiscal year they ought not to use the datum line existing during the war as the basis of their calculations now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator, and the committee did. The basis last year was 68 cents, and the Senate committee reduced it to 60 cents. It was estimated that that would be approximately in line with the reduced cost of supplies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, on page 34, line 10, to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$5,200,000"; and in the same line, to strike out "$9,000,000" and insert "$9,500,000"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting departments of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the factor of the part of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the factor of the part of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the factor of the part of the p

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I dislike very much to ask the Senator to permit this item to go over, but I have some information in my office which I desire to submit—at least I desire to examine it-and if it is what I think it is,'I shall want to combat this increase. If it meets with the approval of my good friends, I ask that it may go over. It is the item of $3,500,000, which has been increased to $5,200,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator is not prepared to discuss it now, I will consent that it go over to accommodate the will be passed over temporarily.

The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 10, to insert: The next amendment was, on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

That the clothing and small-stores fund is hereby increased out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so as to equal the value of the stock on hand in the clothing and small-stores account on March 31, 1921, as shown by the records of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; and hereafter the clothing and small-stores fund shall be charged with the value of all issues of clothing and small stores made to enlisted men and apprentice seamen required as outfits on first enlistment, not to exceed $100 each, and for civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharge for bad conduct, for undesirability, or inaptitude, and the uniform gratuity paid to officers of the Naval Reserve Force.

The appropriate of the seamen description of the seamen description.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 7, to strike out "$17,500,000" and insert "$25,000,000," so as to read:

Fuel and transportation: Coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval fuel depots and fuel plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels; and ice for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $25,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator not to increase that amount, or at least to furnish an adequate explanation. There is an increase here of $7,500,000 for fuel and transportation. I think fuel will be cheaper during the coming fiscal year than during the past fiscal year, and if we will get rid of some of the obsolete ships and cease to operate them and put the men now employed thereon upon smaller vessels, such as the torpedo boats, the expenses of the Navy will be greatly reduced. I can not understand why there should be such a tremendous need for fuel.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the expenditures for fuel in 1919 were $59,157,256.63. For 1920 they were $24,014,032.06. For 1921, the current fiscal year, the regular appropriation for fuel was $30,000,000, and there is a deficiency already of $6,600,000, making the expenditures for fuel for the current year, so far as known, $36,600,000, as against $25,000,000 allowed by the committee. The only reason I have seen advanced by the House committee for cutting down the appropriations to the amount contained in the House bill was that the figures seem to be extravagant, and they could not understand how there should be so much fuel used. But the cost is based upon actual experience and upon a calculation of the prices at which the Navy buys coal, or what the coal which they know will be required will cost.

I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that there has been and will be greater fleet movements, by reason of the movement of the fleet to the Pacific, than there have been in recent years, and that instead of the amount of fuel consumed being reduced it will probably be equally as great. But the Senate committee made allowance for a probable reduction in cost. It was only after a very minute questioning of the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts that this increase in the House figure was adopted by the Senate committee, and I have not any doubt at all that if it is reduced it will simply result in a deficiency. There may be a deficiency anyhow. The best information we could obtain was that the purchase and consumption of fuel by the Navy is guarded with as much economy and efficiency as is possible. I have not discovered any extravagance or any mismanagement.

Mr. BORAH. Just how does the Navy purchase its fuel-by public bids?

Mr. POINDEXTER. A public call for bids and bids. Mr. BORAH. Do they have really competitive bids?
Mr. POINDEXTER. They have really competitive bids.
Mr. KING. I am not satisfied with this item. I think the wisdom of the House was greater than the wisdom of the Senate committee. They made rather an exhaustive inquiry, and they felt that $17,500,000 was adequate for fuel and transportation for the coming year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. KING. I am glad to yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Among other representations made by the department upon this item I call the Senator's attention to the following statement:

The amount required for fuel for the Navy depends upon the number of vessels kept in active commission and the steaming necessary to keep them at a proper degree of military efficiency. The number of vessels which can be kept in commission depends upon the number of enlisted men in the service and the appropriations which are available for the maintenance and upkeep of the vessels of the active fleet.

The estimates as to the money required, heretofore prepared, have been on the basis of the number of enlisted men hereinafter stated, as follows:

100,000 men 110,000 men 120,000 men $29, 275, 000 $2, 225, 000 $4, 250, 000

States to the Navy on a bare boat basis, and unless this proviso is included an additional appropriation of $1,365,000 will be necessary for transportation of fuel.

Expenditures, 1919 _____ Expenditures, 1920 _____ Appropriated, 1921 ____ Indicated deficiency, 1921 ____ $59, 157, 256. 63 24, 014, 032. 06 30, 000, 000. 00 6, 600, 000. 00

It is not necessary to go into detail about that, because, confessedly, the House appropriation was based upon an estimated amount of cruising, figured from a statement made by the Chief of Operations, and, as he has explained, his statement was entirely misunderstood as to the number of hours a day a ship would cruise. Mr. KING. Mr. President, we all know that the prices of oil, as well as coal, for the years 1919, 1920, and 1921, were very high, very much higher than they will be, in my opinion, in 1922. Indeed, the price of oil during the past six months has been materially reduced. I know that the price of bituminous coal will be materially reduced during the coming year. I was talking with a coal man yesterday, who said he would be glad to mine and sell his coal for $2 per ton at the mouth of the mine. If we can get the transportation problem settled-and I think it will be improved during the coming year-there will be a material reduction in freight rates. There will be a readjustment in the coming year, and that readjustment will be reflected in reduced prices. Many of the figures in this bill are based upon past prices, upon war prices, not upon prewar prices, not upon prices which will prevail in the coming year. I make the general criticism against this bill that it is too closely related to war prices. It reflects the war spirit, not the peace spirit. It is based too much upon conditions existing during the period of the war, and not sufficiently upon conditions following the war. An item of $25,000,000 for fuel seems to me to be entirely too much.

The Senator refers to fleet cruising during the past year. grant that there has been considerable. We moved a number of obsolete vessels from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. Some were sent into the Pacific Ocean for maneuvers. Much of that expense, in my opinion, was unnecessary; I hope it will not be duplicated. With proper economies there can be a material reduction in the operation of the Navy.

Mr. President, a few years ago when we appropriated from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually for the Navy it was regarded as a large appropriation. With those sums we accomplished a great deal. With less than that, in the days of Mr. Whitney, we developed the Navy and made great progress

But now we must speak in hundreds of millions. Here we have a bill which carries over $400,000,000 for maintenance of the Navy for one year. This does not include the construction The overhead is too much. There is inefficiency and extravagance, Mr. President, when expenditures are made of these enormous amounts. I propose to vote against this item, I think that $17,500,000, the amount allowed by the House, is ample for the Navy for fuel expenses for the current year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.
Mr. CURTIS. Before that request is put, I wish to state that we desire to have a short executive session. If there is going to be a yea-and-nay vote it might be well to take a recess.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let us see first whether a yea-and-nay vote will be ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. We might have some difficulty in getting a quorum to-night.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope that motion will be defeated.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 35, line 7, striking out "$17,500,000" and inserting "$25,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment carries an increase of about seven or eight million dollars. I am perfectly aware, of course, that the mere fact that we appropriate so much or the fact that we do not appropriate so much or any amount at all will not cut any figure. The Navy Department pays no more attention to appropriations of Congress than if Congress were not in existence. It expends money utterly regardless of appropriations, and sends here for its millions of dollars in the way of deficit, and Congress takes care of it. Nevertheless and notwithstanding that fact, this Congress has some duties to perform in regard to it, and if we appropriate $25,000,000 it will simply accentuate the extravagance which the Navy Department will feel it has a right to indulge in.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 12, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we come unto Thee with a prayer and not a claim. Confirm in us Thy gracious promise, namely, "I will guide thee with Mine eye." As a sparrow does not fall to the ground without the Father's notice, meet us at the way was seen point, and wherein we are weak make us strong. May we see God in providence moving over the troubled waters of the earth, bringing order out of chaos and peace out of tumult. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A DELEGATE.

The SPEAKER. Any Members desiring to take the oath of office will present themselves.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 4075, to limit the immigration of aliens.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report to be printed under the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Washington, for the information of the House, when it is his purpose to ask for action on the conference

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I believe by arrangement with the majority leader the bill will be called up to-morrow morning, immediately following the bill at present under consideration.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 2435 be taken from the Speaker's table and sent to conference.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been messaged over.

Mr. GARNER. The bill has not come over from the Senate. I do not see how you are going to take up a bill that is not in

Mr. WALSH. It was passed only last night.

ADJOURNMENT OVER SATURDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn until Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FUTURE TRADING IN GRAIN.

On motion of Mr. Tincher, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair. Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The gentleman from North Dakota of-The CHAIRMAN. fers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Page 1, line 11, after the ord "rye," insert the word "flax."

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have just offered is, of course, a very plain one. It simply includes flax in the definition of the word "grain." know why the committee reported the bill without including flax as one of the grains coming within the operation of this law. The purposes of this bill, as I understand it, or the principal purposes, are perhaps two. One is to make it impossible for gamblers or speculators to manipulate the price of grain to the detriment of the producer

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ASWELL. Does the gentleman know that flax is not listed at all on any board of trade of the country?

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to assure the gentleman that I know that just the contrary is true.

Mr. ASWELL. It was testified before the committee that it is not listed at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. I can state from my own personal experience that it is listed; that only a few months ago I personally bought options, or a future, on flax on the Minneapolis Board of Trade; and unless there has been a change very recently, the gentleman is mistaken. I bought a future for March, and it cost me 14 cents per bushel to convert that future into May. So I am absolutely positive that the gentleman is entirely mistaken. It may be true that upon some of the boards there are no future dealings in flax, but that is not the case as to all of the boards of trade.

Doubtless the second purpose and, I think, the most desirable purpose of all that will be accomplished by the bill is to control fluctuations. If you will look at the market reports you will find that the fluctuations in flax have been greater from day to day and week to week during the past seven or eight months than the fluctuations in wheat. Of course, flax has declined more than wheat and other grains in proportion. For instance, about a year ago flax was selling on the local market at about $5 a bushel. I personally bought seed a year ago at $6 a bushel. The flax that was being thrashed last fall brought in the local market of our State $3 to $3.50. To-day flax brings on the same market about $1.30. There have been times within the last few months when there have been fluctuations from day to day amounting to 30 cents on flax.

I am mentioning these things to show the real necessity of inserting flax, if the purpose of the bill, which is a proper purpose, is to prevent these fluctuations, which are to the detriment of the producer. [Applause,]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, as has been suggested here by questions, at the time of hearings on the bill it was represented to the committee that flax was not traded in on these exchanges. I agree with the gentleman that there is one exchange where they trade in futures on flax. I want every man to have the benefit of this measure, and I have no disposition to oppose the gentleman's amendment, and I hope the committee will agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "grain" and insert "agricultural products." Page 1, line 11, after the word "mean," insert the word "cotton."

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on

Mr. HUDSPETH, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want to state that I am in favor of the bill. not go to the extent that I would like to have it go, and that is, put every gambling exchange on this earth out of business and give the honest producer a chance; but it is a step in the right direction. I am sorry that the gentleman who is the author of the bill, who has given it considerable thought, did not include the word "cotton" in this bill when it was before the Committee on Agriculture. I want to say to my friend from Kansas that I believe that it would have gained him support instead of losing support on this side. If you will adopt my amendment embracing cotton exchanges you should get the support of every Democrat on this side.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The question was thoroughly discussed in the committee and four of the members from the cottongrowing sections of the country on the committee claim that the cotton futures act is practically the same as this law. is that the rest of us members do not know any more about cotton than you do about tobacco, and you gentlemen are divided among yourselves.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That may be true, but I want to say that there are Representatives from the cotton States on the Agricultural Committee, and they should know that the man who produces cotton wants the kid-gloved, nimble-fingered manipulator in New York put out of business. I want to state this, that I believe it was 1909 that a law was written by my colleague from Texas, an able lawyer, who was then county attorney of Dallas County, putting the bucket shops out of business in my

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Sumners] drew the bill that stood the test of the court, the former law having been held unconstitutional, and the bucket shop was driven from business. and I, as a State senator, fought for that bill through the Texas Legislature, and drove these "knights of the green cloth" from the fair soil of Texas. I want to say to the men representing the cotton States here that when that law was passed driving these gambling hells from the Lone Star State that immediately cotton advanced several cents a pound. And yet some of the Representatives from the South are afraid that if we embrace cotton in this bill it will work to the detriment of the farmer.

Let me say to my friend from Louisiana, who opposes putting the cotton exchanges in the scrap heap, that in 1917, when cotton was quoted on the market at 18 and 19 cents a pound, the farmers of Texas-if you want to know how the real farmers stand as to the gambling exchanges, gambling hells-2.500 delegates passed a resolution asking for the abolition of the gambling exchanges, and also met in convention at Austin to study the cost of the production of cotton in Texas. It was discovered at that time that the actual cost of producing cotton was 27 cents a pound. They held for that price, and cotton went up to and beyond 27 cents a pound, although the propaganda was carried on by the cotton exchanges of New York and New Orleans against the convention then assembling in Austin. And yet you tell me that the farmers of Texas are not in favor of the abolition of these gambling joints. I want to say to you that the only difference between a bucket shop and the cotton exchange is this: The bucket shop was a small institution in the back end of a saloon, run usually by men of a low order of mentality, and a lower order of morality, with no financial responsibility back of it. There they bid on the price, and the article sold they did not have, and never expected to have. The cotton exchange has a financial responsibility; the men behind the exchanges are men of some financial standing. difference between a bucket shop and an exchange is about the same difference that did exist between a common beer joint with a plate-glass mirror and mahogany-bar saloon. But, gentlemen, do you tell me that when a man buys something not in existence, and sells it dozens of times over, on which he never expects to make a delivery, do you tell me that that will redound to the benefit of the producer of cotton, and that these "Herman-trick" manipulations are not pure, unadulterated

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PURNELL.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.
Mr. PURNELL. I think in fairness to the members of the committee, especially those coming from the Northern States, it ought to be said to the gentleman, out of deference to you gentlemen from the South, that we did not undertake to deal with this subject in the bill, feeling that you were more responsible and more competent to draft a separate bill relating to cotton. Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he believes that the general provisions of the bill would be applicable to cotton?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Let me say to the gentleman I would rather this committee would not pay the southern Members too much "deference." It can be made applicable by amendment.

Mr. PURNELL. Would it not necessitate a revamping of the whole bill?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Not entirely, but it would necessitate several other amendments, and if my amendment is adopted I intend to offer the others.

Mr. PURNELL. Is there in the cotton exchanges "puts and calls privileges" and "ups and downs," as there are in the grain exchanges and as provided for in the present bill?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; there are "puts" and "calls" in the cotton exchange. You "put" your money up on a myth— the fellow behind the green cloth "calls" your hand—you get skinned out of everything from your cotton sox up. The cotton farmer has a price fixed on his cotton when he has not a seed in the ground, and the Bureau of Markets of the Agricultural Department is informed by these silk-hat gentry as to the number of bales that will be produced that year when there is not a furrow opened; the spinner enters into an unholy alliance with the cotton exchanges-agrees not to buy any cotton from the producer until the cotton exchanges beat down the price. The price is fixed by the exchanges in March, and the poor old producer sells in October and November for at least one-third The exchange gentry and the spinner declare their annual 100 per cent dividends, and the poor old cotton farmer who produces the wealth of this country catches what Sherman called war, and yet we Representatives from the cotton States have not got the courage to stand up here and fight these minions of evil and champion a bill for his relief.

Mr. PURNELL. My only thought is, even though your amendment is in order, it will necessitate an entire rewriting of this bill and perhaps cause us to lose some of the important fea-

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not want to hamper this bill in the least, because I am for it, for the Lord knows I will vote for anything that will stop gambling on agricultural products. And I disagree with my colleague from Texas [Mr. Blanton] that this bill legalizes gambling. I do not read that in this bill; neither does he. It certainly puts "puts" and "calls" out of business. I want to do this and more with respect to the cotton exchanges. I do not believe that God Almighty ever formed the economics of this world so that you had to stabilize them by gambling. I never did believe it, and we did not in Texas when we drove the bucket shops across the Rio Grande, and cotton went up immediately, and everybody knows it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PURNELL. What is there in cotton that is synonymous with "puts" and "calls" as recognized in grain?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understand from my colleague from Texas [Mr. Jones] that you go and buy an option on a board of trade to purchase wheat, we will say. You put up your option If wheat goes up, you get your margin; if it goes down, the exchange man gets your money; you never expected to re-ceive a bushel of wheat, and the so-called board of trade never expected to deliver you a bushel, and did not have it to deliver, Then the same thing would apply to the cotton exchange, where you buy 10,000 bales of cotton that is not in existence, which you never expect to be delivered, and I want to say to my friend, as was cited by my friend, Mr. Aswell, from Louisiana yesterday, that while we have to-day upon the statute books a so-called law against futures, that if I sell you spot cotton or middling cotton, when it comes to delivery I can deliver you any 1 of 10 grades. Now, you tell me that the cotton raiser is the beneficiary of such a fool law as this? No; it is the cotton exchange. Suppose I sell my friend from Texas, Mr. Parrish, who understands the cattle business-I breed white-face cattleand say he buys a thousand yearlings from me, six months delivery in Fort Worth, say we had a cattle exchange doing business there, and he pays me $40 a head for those cattle, and I can step into Mexico, buy and deliver him a thousand yearlings under that contract, and put in old, dun, flea-bitten, speckled, loose-jointed oxen from Mexico that would fit any 10 grades in the cattle line.

You tell me, gentlemen, that my friend Parrish would accept that contract? Well, he would have to if we had such an outrageous law governing cattle futures as we have the contracts for cotton futures. No; there would be a vacancy in the sixteenth congressional district and somebody would be marching slowly behind me to some country burying ground on the hillside. But, my friend, you can do that under the law that is now on the statute books as to the sale of cotton futures. I sell you middling cotton and I can deliver you any 1 of 10 grades, or I do not have to deliver it at all, because we all know you can not enforce specific performance in reference to personal property. You can not enforce, I will say to my friend from Louisiana, specific performance of personal property under the law you have on the statute books to-day. Gentlemen, when a man can buy and sell ten times the production of this country, and we produce 11,000,000 bales—4,000,000 in my State—and these gamblers on the cotton exchanges sell it over and over again, 20,000,000, 30,000,000, 50,000,000, or 100,000,000, you tell me that redounds to stabilize and enhance the price to the producer? You tell me that when you sell ten times the cotton production of this country that that benefits the man who grows cotton? The cotton farmer in Texas does not think so, and not a single representative of the real farmers of that great State who has been before your committee, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, but asked for the abolishment of the gambling hells known as cotton exchanges.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Would not the cotton industry gain a greater benefit if a bill were introduced by somebody taking care of the industry in its entirety by itself? The gentleman would not agree to have the packers come in here and amend this bill, or some man on the floor amend it—

Mr. HUDSPETH. I can not yield for a speech. I would agree to old "Nick" himself coming in here and amending this bill if he will amend it so that cotton gamblers will be put out of business or put in the penitentiary. I would agree to anything on this earth that would abolish cotton exchanges, so we could go back to the God-given law of supply and demand. That is what the farmer wants to-day. I introduced a bill putting them out of business, and I am inserting a copy of my bill as a part of my remarks. Mr. Caraway, of Arkansas, introduced a bill putting them out of business, and where are those bills now? I fear sleeping the sleep that knows no awakening. Senator Comer in the Senate introduced an amendment to put them out of business, and I voted for it when it came up, but it did not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended to enable me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MASON. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. If this bill is to put out the small gambling concerns that deal as they say in "puts" and "calls," what is there, if this bill passes, that will prevent those gentlemen from continuing the same business and applying it to cotton that they now apply to grain?

Mr. HUDSPETH. There is nothing, as to cotton without my amendment. There is no restriction as to cotton, and they will continue to plunder the producer by fixing the price of the product they do not produce, that they do not own, handle, or expect to own. And I want to say to you gentlemen here that when cotton is highest is when there is not a seed in the ground, and how do they know what the price is going to be? How do they know what the crop will be, and yet that is when the prices are the highest.

These silk-gloved, gold-collared, and stiff-hat gentry, great benefactors of the horny-handed farmer (?)—"they toil not, neither do they spin," but Solomon in all his glory never was arrayed like them. And yet some of my colleagues say, "Let the farmer come here and tell us what to do, you are being destroyed but we are going to wait, not hamper this bill, although we have a chance to amend it and protect the cotton farmer." I will tell you what he ought to do when he gets a chance—select some other Representative.

Ah, some of you say, "I am afraid it will hurt the price of cotton to even regulate the cotton exchanges, much less put them out of business." Have you ever heard a real honest-to-God farmer express that fear? I have not. No, it is the farmers of New York and New Orleans that have that fear. Take those 6,000,000 farmers of gay Gotham, and those 400,000 farmers of New Orleans, and they shiver like a wet canine in a Texas "norther" when you talk about regulating the cotton exchange; but Uncle Reuben out there on his little farm in the black lands and the sandy lands of great old Texas does not want his business built up and stabilized by a class of men who make their millions through the sweat of other men's brows. Why, my friends, I saw a statement here a while back that a seat the New York Cotton Exchange sold for $92,000, which was nothing more or less than a right to gamble on the honest toil of the man who works between the cotton rows in my State and yours. At whose expense did he take that seat? Uncle Reuben and his entire tribe paid for it.

I also saw where a stock dividend of 100 per cent was declared by the cotton mills in Lewiston, Me.; also another statement that 20 cotton mills in Spartanburg, S. C., with a capital stock of a little less than nine million, declared on January 1 of this year stock dividends of six millions and cash dividends amounting to two million and ninety-three thousand. Remember, my friends, what I said a little while ago about that unholy combination of the cotton exchange and the spinner-and there is no doubt about it. The trifling sum of $90,000 for the mere right to gamble on the fruits of honest toil and 100 per cent dividends by cotton mills, when the farmers of my State are selling their cotton at 50 per cent below the cost of production, whole farms without a boll touched, on account of no money to pay for labor, his children deprived of school advantages, hungry and ragged, and these leeches and bloodsuckers indulging in bacchanalian revel feasting like vultures upon the labor of the man who toils in the stifling heat of summer and the chilly blasts of winter. Mr. Chairman, while there is not hardly a seed of it in my country, I do not wonder sometimes at the too seed of it in my country, I do not wonder sometimes at the too rapid spread of socialism and bolshevism in this country. A ninety thousand privilege for one season, mind you, to gamble will not have a detrimental effect upon the spread of this germ, I am quite determined. And yet you say, "I am afraid I will hurt my constituents." "I might move in the wrong direction." What did they send us here for? As "rubber stamps" or are we men with heads on our shoulders and some brains in those heads? Oh, you say, we will be damned if we do and we will be damned if we do not. Probably so, but I would rather be cursed and make some mistakes trying to do something for the benefit of my people than to sit down and never make an effort when they are being destroyed in their property and the only industry they know.

Some of my friends say, "Well, we have not heard from the farmer." Yes; you have heard from him in the only way he can make himself heard, by letter and petition; you heard from Mr. Barrett, his representative and the president of the Farmers' Union in this country. The farmer reads and keeps abreast. He may not have the cash to ride in palace cars and stop at the Raleigh and the Willard, but he knows of these bills that I introduced, that Mr. Herlin introduced, and that Senator Comer tried to pass through this House, that did pass the Senate; if they were detrimental to his business you would have heard from him. You have heard from the other side by leaps and bounds, by squads, platoons, companies, regiments, and brigades.

Why, gentlemen, the day after my bill abolishing cotton exchanges was published, although I had been here only a year, you would have thought I was the most popular man in Congress, that I was the leader of the majority and the minority as well, and that I was dispensing patronage for President Harding on the side. They streamed in and out of my office. "I just want to tell you you are making a mistake in this bill," they would say; "it will simply ruin the cotton farmer and destroy his business." "Where are you farmers from?" I would ask. "Why, at present we are farming in 'Noo-Ark.'"

Take the hearings before the Agricultural Committee on this and other kindred bills of 1,070 pages and you will not find a single witness who represented the real farmers protesting against the passage of bills abolishing gambling in cotton futures and grain futures. Ah, some of my friends say they are useful in disseminating knowledge as to market conditions to the farmers. What have we got the Bureau of Markets and the Agricultural Department for? The information from the latter source is accurate and does not cost the farmer anything. One of my friends said, "Cotton exchanges have created a market in the last year for cotton, and although it has been low, cotton would sell at all times at some price and wool would not." Therefore he says, or means to say, that the exchange is a necessary evil. Well, if Mr. Crissinger, Comptroller of the Currency, was correct in his speech at the banquet the other night, my friend—and, by the way, he is a Congressman from my State—is incorrect. Mr. Crissinger says that for the past 12 months wool, although on a declining market, has sold at all times 20 per cent higher than the prewar prices, and that cotton has sold and is now selling at one-third lower than prewar prices, and that wool has been as salable at all times as cotton. If Crissinger is right, my colleague is wrong, and the cotton exchanges have not benefited the producers of cotton but have been a detriment, for we all know there are no wool exchanges. How a man can stand up and say he is in favor of abolishing bucket shops and is in favor of a continuance of the cotton exchange, I can not understand. I can not agree with his logic or follow his reason. One gentleman from Texas testified before the Agricultural Committee last January in favor of the cotton exchange, but that he was against the bucket shop. Oh, yes; said he came at the request of a convention of cotton farmers. When recalled and asked to name some of the cotton growers at said convention, he named one cotton planter and four real estate men, all raising cotton and residing in the great city of Houston, Tex.

Washington to protest against these "radical" bills of Huns-PETH and CARAWAY, which seek to hamper and destroy the philanthropist, the benefactor, the guardian angel of the farmer and cotton raiser, and that would disturb their cozy nests on Wall Street and in New Orleans. Read this agriculturist's testimony on page 275 of the printed hearings and Tincher's crossexamination. It is worth your time. Any other citizen up here from the State that produces one-third of the cotton of the United States protesting against these bills? Not another soul, as I recall, but Congressman Sumners and myself, that hold a commission to represent a half million souls, a large portion being farmers, appeared and spoke for them.

Are the farmers of Texas with the cotton exchanges or with the producer? Let me read right here a resolution of a farmers' convention at Austin in the fall of 1917-2,500 farmer delegates-and then, my colleagues, draw your own inference:

gates—and then, my colleagues, draw your own inference:

Resolved, That we ask the reserve banks, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the State banking commissioners to cease recognizing the prices quoted by the exchanges as the value of cotton, and recognize that of the producers' organization or exchange as the minimum value, and so announce to the banks and the public in order that the values quoted on the exchanges will become in harmony with that of the producers, which would be the case immediately.

That a copy of these resolutions and preamble be sent to each of the Federal reserve banks, one to the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington, and one to each State banking commissioner of the cotton States, and it be given to the public press.

Also let me insert the bill I introduced last session and will try to pass at this session:

A bill—introduced by Mr. Hudspetth—to prevent gambling in cotton futures and make it unlawful for any person, corporation, or association of persons to sell any contract for future delivery of any cotton within the United States, unless such seller is actually the legitimate owner of the cotton so contracted for future delivery at the time sail sale or contract of sale is made.

owner of the cotton so contracted for future delivery at the time said sale or contract of sale is made.

Be it enacted, etc., That gambling or speculation as is exploited and carried on in what is commonly known as cotton exchanges in the United States is hereby prohibited, and it is hereby made unlawful for any person, corporation, or association of persons to sell any contract for future delivery of any cotton within the United States which may enter into interstate commerce, or that may be imported into the United States unless such seller is actually the legitimate owner of the cotton so contracted for future delivery at the time such sale or contract of sale is made or reasonably expects to be.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby made unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation controlling, operating, receiving, or transmitting messages in interstate business or any telegraph company or any telephone company within the United States doing an interstate business to receive or transmit any message over its said line or lines for the future purchase, sale, or delivery of any cotton made unlawful by the first section of this act.

SEC. 3. That the president or manager of all cotton exchanges within the United States is hereby required to report at the close of each week to the Secretary of Commerce all transactions passing through or in said exchange in which he is president or manager on future contracts for the sale of cotton, and any president or manager falling to make said report under oath shall be fined in any sum not less than $200 nor more than $1,000 and may be imprisoned not to exceed one year, and the failure to make said report for any one week will constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 4. That any person or agent, officer, or receiver of any corporation or association of persons violating the provisions of this act shall, for each such offense, be fined in any sum not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and in addition thereto may be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

Again, in answer to the representatives of the cotton exchanges, that they keep up the price of cotton, let me show you how they did. In March, when there was not a seed in the ground, they fixed the price of cotton at 40 cents. Mind you, this price-registering machine did not know how many acres would be planted or whether 5,000,000 bales would be raised. It encouraged the farmers to plant a big crop, paying an enormous price for labor and material to grow the crop, and the very cotton in March that these exchange pirates were selling for 40 cents a pound was on the market last fall and up to now at 8 and 10 cents, and you rarely find a buyer. Now, you stand up here on your responsibility as a Congressman and representative of a great moral people and tell me that this should continue; that it is an aid to the farmer financially, morally, or any other way on this earth?

My friends, I used to go to the "Mollie Bailey Circus" when I was a boy and see a nimble-fingered fellow with a painted wheel telling the public that he was a poor fellow, unfortunate, always loses, but had an uncontrollable love for his fellow man and taking a chance; he was just impelled to go ahead and offer you an opportunity to take everything he had. Well, I did not have quite as much sense then as I have now. I went up against him a few rounds and went back to "cow punching" at $20 a month the next day.

It is beautiful, indeed, to hear these Raleigh and Willard Hotel farmers come up here "at my own expense," lease a suite of rooms at either hotel for $25 per day, stay here two weeks, and sometimes roost in that gallery for a season, blood oozing at every pore for the dear old farmer back home; going before This evidently was a rousing overflow meeting of the "horny-handed sons of rest," who sent this gentleman 2,000 miles to your committee and shedding briny tears, trying to convince you that the very mention of a bill to regulate the immaculate cotton exchange causes a rigor down Uncle Reuben's back worse than a Louisiana swamp "buck aguer." I wonder how many of my colleagues have fallen for this kind of sophistry no; I mean rot? No, gentlemen; these kind of farmers are the men, as my friend, Charlie Metcalf, a farmer with horns in his hands and corns between his toes as big as a black walnut, would say, "Are the men who farm the farmers." you understand that I would go to the extent of prohibiting the sale of all future contracts in cotton? No; not if the seller had the commodity, or had a good, genuine expectation of possessing same; that would be a legal sale, if he had it and could deliver; but that would not suit the exchange. When you cut out the gambling features, you cut off the chief source from which his revenue comes.

Now, my friends, I am no Puritan. I am not half as good as I ought to be, but gambling never benefited any human being on God's footstool except the man who "skinned" you out of your money. Now, men, if you do not know how your farmer stands on these measures, take a poll through his farm organizations or write him, and he will deal candidly with you and tell you, and I guarantee that 98 per cent of them will tell you that he does not want his business to survive through the manipulation of the gambling joint. But, sirs, in my judgment, instead of a help the exchange is a most damnable hindrance.

Now, gentlemen, let us stand up like men and vote them out. Let us say that God Almighty never intended that any industry on this earth should receive its lifeblood through the gambling hell. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill, and the question, I think, was settled when the cotton futures act was up in this House, when an attempt was made to put an additional product in the cotton futures bill and Speaker Clark decided that it was The effect of that can very well be understood, not germane. not in this bill but in the bill originally introduced. To cover this subject I added the word "cotton." And we started at And we started at that time to consider that proposition, and there was such a conflict on the subject among the people from the cotton-growing districts that it never was settled. So it was not put in this bill, and it was not considered at all by the committee in reporting the bill out. And I think the ruling of Speaker Clark on July 16, in the Sixty-second Congress, is squarely in point.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the inclusion of flax is germane, why not the inclusion of cotton?

Mr. TINCHER. I did not make a point of order against that amendment, because there was no conflict before the committee in regard to it. The only question was whether flax was traded in in the future market. I am frank to say to you that I think it would be subject to a point of order. I think the gentleman will agree that under the rulings it would be out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of order comes too late, and that he has permitted this paragraph to be amended by an amendment that was out of order on the bill, and that nongermane amendment having been permitted to go in this paragraph makes in order the other nongermane amendment.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand the gentleman says that if one amendment made to a bill is out of order every man is precluded from making a point of order against another amendment. If there is any such rule, I am not familiar with it,
Mr. BLANTON. It is a rule that has been upheld by distinguished gentlemen, and was invoked here by the distinguished leader, none other than Mr. James R. Mann, who has made the gentleman's party what it is.

Mr. CARTER. I think what the gentleman from Texas has reference to is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did offer a perfecting amendment to an amendment that had been made to a bill that was out of order, and that was held in order because it was a perfecting amendment to the amendment. although the original amendment was out of order. But this amendment here has not anything to do with perfecting the flax amendment, and therefore is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]. The Chair desires to say that under Rule XVI, clause 7, it says:

And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

Article 3 of Rule XXI says:

No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill, nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

It is clear that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], seeking to insert the words "agricultural products" and the insertion of the word "cotton" would be in violation of the rules just quoted. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objec-on? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee. I wanted to say just a word with reference to a charge that was made yesterday afternoon that I do not think should pass unnoticed altogether, and that is that this bill legalizes gambling. I believe that the gentleman who made that charge, if he will read the bill carefully and study the testimony, will reach the conclusion that he was mistaken in making that charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JONES of Texas. For a question.

Mr. BLANTON. If this bill is passed and the market is designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, could the gentleman. if he saw fit, go upon such market and buy a million bushels of wheat which he never expected to be delivered?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I could not. Certain conditions must be complied with, and if these rules and regulations are made as contemplated by this bill, that could not be done.

Mr. BLANTON. But after they are made and the market is designated, then the gentleman could buy a million bushels of futures. That is gambling,

Mr. JONES of Texas. I most certainly could do it now, and if the gentleman votes against this bill, he will vote for a condition that will permit me to buy a million bushels in that way. If the gentleman votes against this bill, he will vote to legitimatize unlimited gambling and speculation of every kind and character. [Applause.] There is no question about that. The bill may not go as far as he thinks it ought to go, nor, in some respects, as some of us thought it ought to go, but after consideration it was the best that could be gotten, and I think this is at least a step in the right direction. It abolishes puts and calls absolutely. The man who votes against this bill will vote to continue puts and calls. You have a choice of voting for no restriction whatever or for the restrictions provided by this bill. Everything put in this bill is a restriction. In other words, if you vote against the restrictions, you vote to throw the matter wide open.

Mr. PURNELL. And a vote againt this bill would be a vote favoring manipulation?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I was calling attention to that. order to have a grain exchange to operate after this bill is passed, it must handle cash grain sufficiently to fairly reflect the market. Under the present conditions a bucket shop could operate. No bucket shop could operate under this bill, because a bucket shop does not handle cash grain. A man who votes against this bill will vote that bucket shops may continue.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will not a vote against this bill be what the manipulators and gamblers want in their effort to defeat

Mr. JONES of Texas. Absolutely. Under this bill any exchange that is permitted to operate will be obliged to make a record of all its transactions. One of the troubles in the consideration of this bill was found to be that a man could go on a board of trade and sell millions of bushels and you could get no record of it, and therefore could not find where the legitimate transaction ended and where the gambling transaction commenced. Under this bill the record must be made. Neglect to make it would be a penitentiary offense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not just now. I will in a moment. Under the terms of this bill every transaction must be written and left open to the observation and care and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture. Now at the end of this year we shall have information about these fellows, so that if this bill is not strong enough we can write a bill with all kinds of teeth in it. You need information in order to write that kind of a bill. You do not want to destroy legitimate trade just because we are against gambling, and I agree with my colleague from Texas [Mr. Hudspern] that the gambler does not do the producer any good. But while killing the gambler you can not afford to kill the market of the producer.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield for a question; a short ques-

Why is the gentleman, as a member of the committee, indulging in this terrorism here this morning and referring to the way Members will vote; this way or the other? Does not the gentleman know that this bill, if enacted, will increase the value of a membership on the Chicago Board of Trade and permit gambling?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not, Mr. Chairman. Mr. KING. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not yield further, Mr. Chairman. I ask that this be not taken out of my time.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. I want to say to the gentleman who suggested that that evidently the leaders on the Board of Trade of Chicago do not think so; otherwise they would not be in oppo-

Mr. JONES of Texas. No. They would not be in opposition to it. Now I decline to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the present rules of the exchanges a cooperative farm organization can not be a member of those exchanges. Under this bill, however, they are required to take in these farm organizations and make rules permitting them to go in. Does a man want to oppose this bill and say no farm organizations or organization of farmers shall have the same right to go on a board of trade that other people have?

Now, there is another provision of the bill which in effect provides that an exchange that continues to operate must provide against the manipulation of prices by the dealers and operators upon such a board. Everyone who has studied the question knows that there is the heart of the trouble. With the present exchanges no record is made. If a man wants to buy wheat or grain, he can go in a combination with a lot of others who do not expect to deliver and thus beat down the price and then turn around and buy at a lower price. In other words, he can corner the market. But if this bill passes, that can not be done. Gentlemen, do you want to vote that that unlimited manipulation shall continue? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was born on a farm. I worked on a farm for many years. I have the honor of representing one of the greatest agricultural districts in the United States. I desire to have read in my time a short letter and telegram expressing to some extent the wishes of the farmers of the thirteenth congressional district of Illinois in regard to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 11, 1921,

Hon. John C. McKenzik, Washington, D. C.:

As a farmer and stock raiser of Whiteside County, Ill., I hereby voice my disapproval of the Tincher grain bill in its present form and respectfully request that you use your best endeavors to defeat said bill, honestly believing it will act detrimental to all grain growers should it pass:

CHAS: B. RIORDON.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OGLE COUNTY FARM BUREAU, Oregon, IR., May 7, 1931.

Hon. John C. McKenzie, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dean Mr. McKenzie: I am taking the liberty of writing you concerning the Capper-Tincher bill, which I am informed is now pending before the House of Representatives.

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Ogle County Farm Bureau action was taken by said committee, and for your information, said action was against the passage of said bill.

As president of said bureau, I do not hesitate to inform you that the majority of the farmers of our country are against said bill, and if they all fully understood the effect of the same if it became a law that practically every farmer would be opposed to the same. For your further information would state that the Ogle County Farm Bureau has not sent any representative either to the hearings held in Washington or at Springfield where the Lantz bill is under consideration.

Hoping that you will give this matter your earnest consideration, I beg to remain. Sincerely, yours, Robert Rowe, President Ogle County Farm Bureau.

Mr. BROOKS of Hinois and Mr. TINCHER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. TINCHER. I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kausas is recognized. Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I guess every member of this committee knows that since yesterday morning the small gamblers and the real manipulators in the grain trade have started the propaganda customary among the opponents of a measure like this, especially in connection with the two great Chicago institutions concerning which this Congress has been trying to legislate for a quarter of a century. They have started that propaganda every time a bill of this character comes up. I want to say to the committee that the farm bureau—the letter just read at the desk was from some little branch of it-represented by Mr. Howard and some of the ablest and best-known farmers in the organization, have, as a national organization, had this subject under consideration since last December, and have had representatives in Washington from time to time to appear before the committee, and they at their national meeting indorsed the measure that is condemned in this letter emanating from a local branch of that organization. I want to make this suggestion, that not one individual who has participated in sending the flood of telegrams that has reached this House in the last 24 hours has ever had the pleasure of reading or knowing what is in the bill they are denouncing.

It is the same old propaganda, Mr. Chairman. I knew yesterday, when a distinguished gentleman said in the morning that this bill was all right, that he was talking to beat it when he announced that it was legalizing gambling. I knew then that this sort of propaganda would immediately follow. It started vesterday. They say this bill legalizes gambling. Last night members of boards of trade that feel that they will be affected, that their gambling proceedings will be interfered with, started in to wire us that the enactment of the bill would destroy the industry of the man that produces grain.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TINCHER. Yes.
Mr. ASWELL. Has the gentleman observed that practically all of these telegrams are couched in almost identically the same language?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. There is a pocketful of them here. There is no distinction between them. We all have them. And we have telegrams that I am told are forgeries, because men who appeared here personally themselves and analyzed this bill and talked to us and indorsed the bill are among the apparent signers of these telegrams protesting against the enactment of the bill. A gentleman near me tells me he has a telegram, a stereotyped telegram, asserting that the bill will destroy the trade, signed by Mr. Griffin, who approved of the bill when he appeared before the committee, but said that there was an element in the trade that would object to this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. They are the people who ride in high-power cars, who never toil, who trade on the farmer's product and are enriched thereby, and, of course, they are going to protest against this proposition.

There is another feature of the bill that has not been mentioned much, and that is the feature that prohibits the circulation of false market reports and places upon the grain exchanges the responsibility of censoring those market reports and making

There is an element among the commission men and dealers in grain who do most earnestly oppose that feature of the bill. I think myself it is one of the best features of the bill, and that is one occasion for this great tirade against the bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I wish to say to the gentleman that the only protests I have received refer to certain amendments that were suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture. There is no objection to the rest of the bill, so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to refer to that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. I should like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. The Secretary of Agriculture suggested changes, that in order to make absolutely sure that he could prevent manipulation he thought the exchanges in applying for designation as marketing centers should, if he required it, place a limitation upon the quantity that any one dealer might trade in. So, after consulting with men who I thought were fair representatives of the trade, knowing that the Secretary of Agriculture was familiar with the subject, and knowing the extent to which he had studied it, I agreed to that change in the bill. I think it is a good change. I think it will work good in the market. The Secretary of Agriculture understands that they are not to be restricted to any limitation that will drive out the actual dealings in the products. But the grain markets of this country have been manipulated. They were manipulated by foreigners who came to this country to buy grain, and the first thing they did was to go onto these great exchanges and reduce the price of grain by selling futures in such quantities that they were able to manipulate these deals without losing a dollar and to buy grain at the figures that they had fictitiously reduced in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

has again expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Then, as I understand it, the purpose of the amendment to which I have referred was to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to fix a limitation upon the amount of any single deal. Of course, during one season of the year that limitation ought to be lower than at another season of the year.

Mr. TINCHER. That is right, and it is confined to speculative deals. It does not relate to the quantity of wheat that a man can buy in actual contemplation of receiving it, but it relates purely to speculative deals, and I thought it was a good suggestion for the purpose of eliminating any possibility of manipulating the market in the way that it has been manipulated in the last few years by the foreign crowd.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

has again expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Of course, if the Secretary of Agriculture is given this power to fix the amount of grain that can be covered in one transaction, it will be akin to the power that we gave him the other day to fix the price that an association may charge

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think we gave him the right to fix the price that an association could charge for grain, and I am sure this bill does not give him the right to fix the amount of grain that anyone can purchase. This gives him the right to require an exchange to limit the amount of grain that can be dealt with on a purely speculative basis by any one man. That will prevent manipulation such as we have had in the recent

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I notice on page 5 you provide that these organizations and boards of trade shall admit cooperative associations. Is it the intention of the gentleman to admit such cooperative associations regardless of whether or not they shall be enjoined from committing the acts referred to in the bill that we passed the other day? In that bill we provided that these associations should be enjoined from charging Must they be admitted, even if they have been certain prices. enjoined?

Mr. TINCHER. No; the object is to prevent the exchanges of this country which handle grain and control the farmers' products from barring the farmers of the country from taking part in the transaction, and I do not think any right-thinking man can oppose that provision. These associations claim they have been barred from the exchanges because of the way in which they divide their own profits, which is silly in the extreme, and if the exchanges had not started on that proposition I do not think they would favor it now. Some of the exchanges in the United States have abandoned that theory and have said to these farmers' organizations, "Come on, we welcome you." Some of the best exchanges in the country have Some of the best exchanges in the country have done that.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman has made a careful study of this bill, and in his opinion it will really benefit the farmer?

Mr. TINCHER. I think so. Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the substitute for the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], a member of the committee.

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I move to strike out the last two The inference one would draw from the suggestions offered on this floor would be that those who favor this bill are farmers and those who are opposed to it are gamblers. Of course, the word "gambler" is a delightful word to use, because it appeals to the mob, but let me inform you that the great majority of the members of these exchanges are high-class gentlemen. Criticism has been offered against men engaged in this business sending wires to Members of the House asking that they try to prevent the passage of this bill. It has been suggested that it is criminal for a man whose business is about to be destroyed to ask somebody to come to his assistance; as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I can say that when the farm organizations of this country are interested in any measure they have no hesitation whatsoever in wiring writing letters, and I presume because they are farm organizations they should be blessed, and that business organizations and enterprises in the cities should be condemned for doing the same thing.

To-day I am in receipt of a great number of wires opposing passage of this bill. I want to read one in particular, from J. J. Fones, acting president of the Chicago Board of Trade, by John R. Mauff, secretary. It is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 11, 1921.

Hon. John W. Rainey:

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At a special meeting of the board of directors of the board of trade of the city of Chicago, held this day, the following resolution was unanimously adopted that—
Whereas the bill H. R. 5676, introduced by Hon. J. N. Tincher, has been recommended out by the House Committee on Agriculture and is now before the House of Representatives, and
Whereas this is the same bill in number but not in form that was up for hearing before the House Committee on Agriculture during the week April 25 to April 30, and
Whereas the present bill in its amended form embodies degrees of control far more objectionable and greatly exceeding anything suggested at any time during said hearings, and at which the grain trade was privileged to be represented, and
Whereas the said bill as amended does provide for governmental interference in business that is bureaucratic, intolerable, impracticable, unnecessary, and destructive to the present form of marketing the surplus cereal crops through the established grain exchanges and their collateral interests and affiliations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we do most emphatically protest against the passage

Resolved, That we do most emphatically protest against the passage of this bill, H. R. 5676, known as the Tincher bill, in its present amended form.

J. J. Fones, Acting President. By John R. Mauff, Secretary.

It has been said that members of the Chicago Board of Trade who attended the hearings were for this bill; the telegram suggests the bill is not the same in form passed upon at the hearings before the committee and they are opposed to it in its amended form. This suggests to me that there is not that harmonious feeling and agreement and unanimity of feeling among the members of the exchange. They have the undoubted right and, as we were led to believe, privilege to protest against any measure that is objectionable to their industry. Men whose business is about to be destroyed, which they have been building up for years, have the undoubted right to protest. Men who are recognized as friends of agriculture in this great country have every right to protest and ask Members of Congress to defeat that which, in their own minds, will destroy their industry, and I do not apologize for members on the boards of exchanges throughout the country or the Chicago Board of Trade when they try to prevent that which they think is objectionable and will ruin and destroy their business. And the passage of this bill will do the farmer more harm than good.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. With great pleasure.

As a member of the agricultural committee, Mr. TINCHER. does not the gentleman know that the bill, H. R. 5676, referred to in the telegram is the same bill and has not been changed by the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t; that it is the exact bill on which the hearings were had?

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. I am unable to answer that. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have another minute in which to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. TINCHER. Now, in the telegram the gentleman read it was signed by some one as acting president of the Chicago Board of Trade. Mr. Griffin was the president of the Chicago Board of Trade and testified before our committee, and I wondered if he was deceased or disabled and some one was acting

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. In all likelihood Mr. Griffin may be out of town, and some one is acting president.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Griffin, of the Chicago Board of Trade, knows more about the bill and what is in it and what the committee contemplated doing than anyone else who did not attend the hearings

Mr. RAINEY of Illinois. In all likelihood if he attended the hearings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is no use in anybody getting unduly excited over the fact that I oppose some of the provisions of this bill. They are either doing certain things or not doing them. Yesterday when I asserted that this bill if passed would legalize gambling on exchanges I was only quoting the effect of what the distinguished members of the committee who are well versed in the provisions of the bill stated. Let me quote some excerpts from what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] said. On page 1312 of the Record, he says:

I introduced a bill last December, the first day of the convening of the short session of Congress, and we had hearings upon it and others that were introduced along the same line, covering 1,070 pages of testimony, taken from the best informed men in the world, concerning these markets and concerning production. The grain exchanges came here at that time from all the market centers and fought the bill, and said that they did not want any legislation; that legislation would be ruinous to the market.

That bill limited the number of bushels that could be bought or sold in hedging.

Mr. TINCHER. Is the gentleman quoting me on that?

Mr. BLANTON. No; the reporter knows when I am quoting and when I am making my own statements. The gentleman also

I introduced a bill again on the first day of this session of Congress, and we began hearing witnesses favorable to legislation along this line. Much to our surprise—and I say this, I think, for every member of the Committee on Agriculture—the grain exchanges took an entirely different view of the matter than what they had taken in December.

So that we see that on this present bill the grain exchanges have turned turtle in their position. Let us see what the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Purnell] who is well cognizant of the subject and has been an able member of the committee, a man who knows what the evidence was in the hearings, let us see what he says about it. Mr. PURNELL on page 1318 of the Record in speaking of this very section 4 said yesterday in regard to the men who will make contracts on the markets to be designated by the Secretary of Agriculture:

It is of no use to call them anything other than gamblers. It is gambling. They have no wheat, no corn, no barley, no rye, no sorghum seed to sell. They have nothing to deliver. They never expect to deliver anything. They never expect to have anything delivered to them. They are speculators. They are gamblers. But for the purposes of this bill we refer to them as speculators. Speculating and gambling are synonymous terms, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. SNELL. Those speculators that you are describing are allowed under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. PURNELL. They are.

That is from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], an [Applause.] There is no able and distinguished member of the committee. He says there is no use of beating about the bush. use of trying to camouflage the farmers on the farm that this bill is going to legalize gambling. He says they may call it speculating for expediency, but calling it speculation does not change it; he says it is gambling. They should be called gamblers, and they are gamblers, because when the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Voigt] was on the floor I asked him the question, "Is it not a fact that under the provisions of this bill, after the market has been designated, could not you and I go on the market and buy a million bushels of wheat without expecting to either deliver or receive a single bushel, merely expecting to put up or receive the margin on a loss or profit?" and he said that was the case. Is that gambling?

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield for the gentleman to answer that question, whether it is gambling or not.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. BLANTON. I can not yield except for the answer requested. With me it is gambling and with my farmer friends in my district it is gambling with commodities they raise out of the ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Mr. HUDSPETH. Will not this bill avail anything in doing away with speculative gambling in grain futures? Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer my friend. Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to know if that is the gentleman's position, that it will do no good whatever?

Mr. BLANTON. The only good on earth it will do is to put the gambling under the inspection of the Secretary of Agriculture and make the gamblers stop gambling every day after the market closes. That is one little good.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then, why not vote for it if it will do some good at all?

Mr. BLANTON. It permits them to gamble all they want to each day until the market closes. If you have a bill here authorizing murder to be permitted providing it was done under the supervision of some officer, why, we should, forsooth, all vote for it, because there is to be some officer to supervise it. The crime is to be committed under the supervision of a Government official, therefore all right, because legalized. I would not vote for that kind of a bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Suppose there is no law against murder and this law put a stop to murder to a certain extent, the gentleman would not support the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my friend that he believes it will do some good, and I am not condemning him for supporting it. He is conscientious, I know. If I felt like he does, I would vote for it, but I do not feel like he does. If we could put a provision in this bill to limit gambling on exchanges to legiti-mate hedging, which the distinguished farmer from Kansas attempted to do in his first bill in the last session of Congress, but which the exchanges then fought, if you will carry out his good, honest, first purpose and intention, brought fresh from the Kansas farmers, why, I will follow him, but instead of that you have substituted therefor this present bill that the exchanges put their O. K. upon, and whenever gambling ex-changes put their indorsement on a farmers' bill I say you had better look out and go slow; there is something suspicious; there is a bug under the chip.

Mr. TINCHER. The farmers are not excited over the section.
Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Kansas ought not to get mad because somebody points out defects in his bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BLANTON. I do.
Mr. HAUGEN. Does not the gentleman think it is safe to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary with reference to limitations as to speculation? The gentleman says he is in favor of hedging-

Mr. BLANTON. I favor hedging only to the extent of legitimate insurance. I will now further answer the question of my colleague from Texas, who is a lawyer, and the other gentleman is not. You are attempting to do something in this bill that is directly in the teeth and face of the Constitution of the United States and the oath each one of us has taken. The Constitution prevents us from destroying business institutions through taxation or doing indirectly what we can not do directly and taxing out of existence something that you can not put out of existence by law. We can stop this unlimited gambling in grain products by law, and we ought to stop it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to strike out the section. I do not understand the logic of my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton]. Now, he says that the only transaction which he thinks should be permitted on these exchanges is legitimate hedge transactions, and then in the next breath he states that he wants to secure a law so as to forbid any man from trading upon an exchange who has only speculation in view

Mr. BLANTON. Gambling, I said.

Mr. BLACK. But the gentleman's construction of gambling and speculation was synonymous, as I understood it. In my judgment there is a difference between gambling and speculation. The element of speculation attends more or less nearly every branch of trade. Now, let us see what is the real useful function of a grain exchange. Suppose we take for illustration a miller who wants to buy 10,000 bushels of actual wheat. Now, in order that he may be willing to enter into a definite contract to buy that 10,000 bushels of wheat he must have some way of financing it. Usually he does not have enough money in his own business to finance the transaction. He goes to the bank, and the bank says to him, "Before we will advance you this money you must hedge it on the grain exchange." does he do next? He goes upon the grain exchange and sells 10,000 bushels of grain, thereby assuring against loss on the 10,000 bushels which he has bought. Suppose we should adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas and allow only those to trade upon the exchange who either produce wheat Then when the miller goes upon the exchange to sell his 10,000 bushels of wheat you would probably have nobody there who would be willing to buy it. In other words, the exchanges can only be made useful to the grain trade by keeping them so that trading will be liquid-always somebody ready to buy when some one else is ready to sell. If we confine the trading upon the exchange to those only who produce or mill the wheat we can have no liquid trading, for the minds of the miller and the producer would not always meet, and it would mean the immediate abolishment of the exchanges so far as hedging contracts were concerned. It might be possible in this manner to connect them into spot exchanges, but that question is not before us.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I yield to my friend. Mr. HARDY of Texas. This bill worries me no little. this bill were to stop on page 3, line 4, at the word "or," and all the rest were stricken out of the bill-

Mr. BLACK, I think it would kill the exchanges automatically and they would have to go out of business immediately.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But it would have this effect: If it stopped there, no man could sell short, could he?

Mr. BLACK. No; or buy long, as one gentleman suggests, Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is just the point I wanted That is just the point I wanted to get at. This allows anyone who is the actual owner or who is the actual producer or prospective producer to sell his prospect or possession and allows anybody with no limitation to buy. Mr. BLACK. Yes; that is the meaning of subdivision (a) of section 4 of the bill. Now, suppose that wheat is selling at $1.50 a bushel and a farmer has a thousand acres in wheat. That price suits him and he wants to sell his future crop for that price. Suppose you limit the ability to buy to only the

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But that section does not limit; anybody can buy from the man who has it to sell under the law.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, that is very true; but the miller will not enter into a contract to buy unless you will also permit him to sell, and he could not sell under subdivision (a) unless he was the owner of the actual property. My theory is that you can not possibly have a liquid market if you undertake either to restrict the number who can sell or the number who can buy, so long as they enter into real, enforceable contracts. Of course, I agree that these "options, privileges, puts, and calls" should be eliminated and all contracts be made of record under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. This bill will, I think, correct some of the illegitimate transactions on the exchanges, without impairing the facility for legitimate hedge transactions. Therefore I will support it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee. I wish to say that while I favor and intend to vote for this bill just as it is, it does not go quite as far as I think it ought to. But I am talking now with reference to the statement that it legalizes gambling.

Let me challenge the attention of every lawyer here that it is absolutely impossible for the Congress of the United States to make legal anything which a State has made illegal within its limits. Therefore we could not legalize gambling in grain if it was illegal in a State. There is not a single act which may be performed under the bill now under consideration which could not have been performed lawfully to-day or yesterday, and if the bill becomes a law it will not change the legal status or the validity of any of those acts. The purpose of the bill is to operate by the power of taxation, and only those things are illegal under this bill which are violative of the taxing provision and regulations thereunder. It is framed for the purpose of permitting regulations which in the absence of compliance require stamp taxes, and the failure to put the stamp taxes on the contract may make it a criminal act. That is the fact about the case. And when any person tells you there is a legalization of the gambling they have failed to take into consideration what the present situation is.

Now, there are a good many provisions in this bill that I would like to see changed, but the chief recommendation to me is this: That it is a start by Congress to regulate that which the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and grain speculators have always said was so subtle that legal intelligence could not handle it, and if we can start in and make a record by which they are bound—and they say they are not bound at the present time—we are in a position by which in the future we can regulate. It is my expectation that the bill that has been passed by the House permitting cooperative bargaining in connection with the plan of the committee of 17, if there is an intelligent administration of the same, will take away many, very many, of the troubles which affect the grain trade at the present time. This matter of speculation is only an incident to that trade. There are a great many that are much worse. Gamblers, or speculators, if you please, under this bill will be permitted to go on and speculate. It is said that there is going to be a limitation under this bill. Unless the Secretary is too severe, he can not limit it. You take a board of trade, or manipulators, and they will have 16 members sitting in it. You limit one. You have got 16 times to multiply in order to get the effect which they desire. And you say you are going to give under this bill the cooperative man a chance in those boards of trade. It is to be seen whether or not that is really an advantage. But this is a position which I think is worthy of our admiration and our vote, namely, we have taken control of that thing which has said heretofore that it is above the law. Every time we get a chance to put a tooth in here, let us put it in. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to personally stand condemned or have the bill condemned by the doubtful compliment paid me by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blan-TON]. I had not thought it was necessary up to this time to impress upon the membership of the House the fact that there is no attempt in this bill to legalize gambling. I tried in my feeble way yesterday in presenting some of the important features of this bill to set out the things we have sought to accomplish in a preliminary way.

We must remember in handling this subject that we are dealing with a marketing system of grain that has been in existence in this country for many, many years. It is thoroughly rooted; it furnishes a ready sale for the farmer's product at a time when he needs it, and to in any manner attempt to disturb that system without immediately setting up in its place something that is constructive and better means the possibility of the overthrow of our entire system.

Now, what have we done in this bill? We have not attempted to legalize gambling. We do not legalize it. And certainly by the various provisions which we have set out in this bill we have attempted to curb some of the greater gambling speculations. What is the greatest gambling proposition indulged in on the boards of trade? It is manipulation, the concerted buying of large quantities by individuals or by corporations that has for its purpose the bringing down the prices of the farmers' products or unduly raising them, as the case may be. That is manipulation. We set out in the beginning to put an end to it. I said yesterday that when I got into the study of this measure I found that we could not abruptly shut off speculation, and I did frankly say on the floor that, as far as I am concerned, there is little or no difference between speculation and gambling. I do not know, and no one can look into the minds of people and tell, whether they intend actual delivery of grain or not. Neither can the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Not just now. Neither can you draft a bill that will define speculation. But I did say yesterday, and I want to repeat it to-day, that you can not take speculative trading out of our present system without tearing down the whole system. Why? Because the farmer, and particularly the small farmer—and he is in my district and he is your district—who needs a ready sale for his products must, when he has 5,000 or 10,000 bushels of grain to sell, sell that grain at a good price. He can not do it if you wait until some man comes upon the market who actually wants his 5,000 or 10,000 bushels. Then, what happens? Here is what happens: The elevator man says to the farmer who must sell his corn, the man who must have money with which to pay notes and taxes and help, "I will take your 10,000 bushels of grain and I will pay you 60 cents per or whatever the market price is.

Now, the elevator man has not the money to carry that transaction until he can dispose of the grain. He must of necessity protect himself, and so immediately, when he buys 10,000 bushels, he sells on some board of trade an equal amount at the same price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PURNELL. So if the price of the 5,000 or 10,000 bushels goes up or down, it makes no difference to that elevator man who has furnished the market to the farmer. If the farmer brings in the 5,000 or 10,000 bushels, the elevator man immediately closes his hedge on the board of trade. Let us see who has been hurt or helped by that transaction. My friend from Texas calls that gambling. I call it, in more polite language, speculation. But I said yesterday, and I repeat to-day, it may or it may not be gambling.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman-Mr. PURNELL. I can not yield.

Who is helped by that transaction? I find that my farmer is helped by it, and for these two reasons: First, because he is furnished a ready market for his product at a time when he needs to sell it, and, second, because he has got the very highest price that he could get. Why has he received the highest price that he could get? I will tell you why. It is because the elevator man, who paid him 60 cents per bushel, which was the top-notch price on that day, was able to pay the 60 cents a bushel because he protected himself against a loss by selling a hedge.

Now, suppose you take the hedge away. Suppose you take this element of speculation or gambling out of it—and I do not approve of gambling. Suppose you take that element out of the transaction. Can the elevator man still pay 60 cents per You take away from him the right to hedge and sell 10,000 bushels on the Chicago market to protect himself, and you will find a wider spread in the market. The elevator man will say, "I can not give you the 60 cents. I may not be able to sell this wheat for six weeks or two months. I will give you 50 cents. I can not afford to carry the risk. I do not know what I will get for it two weeks from now."

So I say, although it may have some evils in it, although it may have some features of gambling in it, at the same time we can not wipe it out without making the whole system fall, and in that event the producers of the country, who profit by the transaction, will suffer in the long run. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. I have not discussed this bill at all as yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to confess, to begin with, what all of us might as well confess, and that is that this is a very difficult subject. I certainly agree with the gentleman who last spoke [Mr. PURNELL], that every speculation is a gamble, and that all business is a gamble to a larger or smaller extent.

But I want to say with reference to this bill that we first ought to know what we want to do. Do we want to prohibit selling short? Is that the vice of future trading? Is that the evil of this gambling in grain on the board of trade? Do we believe that selling short is a means used to depress prices, and do we want to prohibit selling short to depress prices? we want to prevent it, we can do so without prohibiting hedging under section 4, subsection (a), of this bill. A farmer can sell the actual grain to any buyer. No man need be prohibited from buying or from selling what he has bought. If you will take this bill and turn over to section 4, imposing a tax, and then look at subsection (a), you will see that the provisions of that section will not tax a sale when the seller is a farmer or a prospective grower and sells only what he has or is growing. If he is a farmer having a commodity, or the grower, or the prospective owner or grower, or renter of land on which it is to be grown, he may sell what he has or expects to have. The grain elevator buying from the farmer may turn around without any prohibition and sell what he has bought, but when you follow that with subsection (b), which provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may designate certain markets and in those markets men may sell short, then have you not done away with all the limitations in the bill? [Applause.]

The question with me is this: Do we want to stop selling short, which is not only gambling but which can be used as an instrument to depress the price of the commodity owned by the farmer, giving the farmer the right to sell, and giving anybody the right to buy upon the exchange, so that the actual possessor of the commodity may find a buyer? You get that if you stop on line 3 of page 3 with the word "or."

Frankly, I confess it is a puzzle. I confess to some misgiving, but I do believe that this bill starts in the right direction. Even though it does not go as far as I suggest, it will give us facts in the future upon which to base maturer and possibly wiser legislation. If the country must needs depend for its market upon the speculative or gambling right of any individual to sell short by millions of bushels, then the rest of the section is necessary, because it will let individuals in these market places established by the Secretary of Agriculture deal unlimitedly. I know it declares the Secretary may limit the sales of any individual, but if I am allowed to sell only half a million bushels I can sell half a million in my own name and sell another half milion in the name of another individual. You can not quantitatively limit my right to sell or to buy. If you give me the right to buy or sell in limited quantity, I will use dummies to make it unlimited.

I am frank to say that we ought to hesitate before we break a system which has been firmly established, which has been here for years, and which Congress has not yet found a way to handle, and which many honest men think it would be harmful to abolish. But if I should vote in accordance with my present understanding of the situation I would vote to strike out all after the word "or" on page 3, and try it. [Applause.] Let us see if an absolute prohibition against selling short will destroy this country or not. Let anybody sell all that they have or have bona fide contracts to buy. Let anybody buy anything that is actually offered for sale, but do not let a man sell short 10,000,000—that is, 10,000,000 more than he has or has honestly contracted to buy-and that is what he can do, I am afraid, under this bill; that is, provided he sells it in some market place designated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman says that we might try it out and see if it ruins the country or not. If it does ruin the country, then where are you?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Then I am in a bad fix. [Laughter.] But I do not believe it will injure the country to prohibit a man from selling short.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Would it injure the country to break up the exchanges?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Would it break them up? If everybody has the right to buy all that I or you or any man has, is that going to break up the exchanges? That is the question. I am willing to vote for this bill as it is, but if I had my way I would perfect it in the way I have suggested. I can not believe that the welfare of the grain grower is unavoidably linked with a vice that seizes hundreds and thousands of men every year and plunges them to destruction by its gambling allurements; that enriches every year hundreds or thousands of other men who have earned nothing; and that may spread its baleful influence by depressing artificially the price of every bushel of wheat grown by the farmer. I hardly think this bill will accomplish much, but it may lead to something.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, back in 1890, or about that year, when I was a boy, a man was running for Congress; his name was Jerry Simpson. He promised that he would introduce a bill in Congress that would stop gambling in agricultural products. Thirty years after that time a gentleman from the same district that Jerry Simpson came from in the State of Kansas, by the name of Mr. TINCHER, made the same promise to his constituency, and that promise, gentlemen, is being fulfilled by him here to-day, and it is my desire and hope that the bill of the committee will pass. I assure you that it has my hearty support.

It is very unfortunate in my estimation that those who represent the cotton farmer have not been able to agree as to the extent of the proposed regulation, and have not been able to appear before the Committee on Agriculture with something definite along the lines of further regulating what I consider one of the most harmful things that the farmer has to contend with.

I have not had the benefit of hearing the debates on this subject in the former sessions of Congress, or being a party to the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, but I have had the benefit of the advice of the boys down at the forks of the creek. So far as they are concerned, I believe that a very large majority of them advocate the regulating and even the absolute prohibition of gambling in futures, as contemplated by the bill, which, as I understand it, does not destroy what is known on the board as the "hedge." I realize that the buyer is compelled to protect his purchases by the use of the hedge; but, as I understand it, the bill does not hamper that feature of the exchange.

This is a time when the Congress has had the best opportunity to fully realize the effect of grain and cotton gambling. For quite a period prior to last August the exchanges were closed. Prices of farm products did not fluctuate to any great extent during that time. It seemed that the law of supply and demand regulated the prices entirely. As soon as the exchanges were opened the market again became very active and violent fluctuations were an everyday occurrence. No one can deny that this activity was brought about by the fact that that form of speculation had been revived. The argument to the effect that the producer is not hurt, in view of the fact that he is just as likely to get more than his crops are worth as he is to get less than they are worth, is all wrong. The farmer, and especially the southwestern farmer, does not care to gamble with his crop nor to have anyone else do so. It is too serious a matter with him. I might say that his crop is too sacred to him, if you will permit that expression, for him to take chances. Upon his crops rests the question whether or not he will be able in the fall to send his son, who is just out of the local school, to the agricultural and mechanical college, or, perchance, his daughter to the normal school; or, possibly, the indulging of himself and his family in one of the luxuries of life, a Ford car, which he and his family have so well merited by a summer of hard work; or an extra dress or an extra piece of finery or a piano for his wife.

The farmer does not want the best of it; neither does he want the worst of it. He does not want more than his crop is worth as regulated by the law of supply and demand. He is not asking something for nothing. All he wants is a fair and square deal and a price for his products not regulated by a bunch of gamblers, but by the law of supply and demand; and it shall always be my endeavor while a Member of this House to see to it, as far as I am able, that he gets it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in addition to the taxes now imposed by law there is hereby levied a tax of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved in such transactions, upon each and every privilege or option for a contract either of purchase or sale of grain, intending hereby to tax the transactions known to the trade as "privileges," "bids," "offers," "puts and calls," "indemnities," or "ups and downs."

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for this

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STAFFORD). The gentleman from Ohio offers a substitute, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Carle: Page 2, line 12, strike out section 3, and insert, in lieu thereof, the following:

"Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful, by means of telephone or telegraph lines, wires, or other means of communication extending from one State to another or to foreign countries, to make or offer to make or assist in making any contract respecting the purchase or sale either upon credit or margin of any grain, not intending the actual bona fide receipt or delivery of any such grain, but intending a settlement of such contract based upon the difference of the public market quotation of prices made on any board of trade or exchange upon which such grain is dealt in, and without intending a bona fide purchase or sale of the same."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Mr. TINCHER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. CABLE. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to reserve his point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order. I do not want to have to make it now. I believe in fair discussion of this bill. I think everybody ought to have an opportunity to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am just leading up to that, if the Chair will indulge me.

Mr. CABLE. I do not want the gentleman to talk in my time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KINCHELOE. That it is not germane to the section in any way at all.

Mr. CABLE. I should like to be heard on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, if this bill will be of any benefit to the people in reducing the price of food, it ought to be supported

Mr. KINCHELOE. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a right to explain his amendment in connection with a statement on the point of Mr. CABLE. If it will benefit the farmer, it ought to be supported. But the only reason why this bill was reported out by the committee is because the committee claims it will absolutely wipe out of existence the practice of puts and calls, ups and downs, and indemnities. In other words, the bill is for one purpose, and that is to abolish grain gambling. Now, with reference to this section, the bill in effect proposes that anybody who intends to gamble or who does gamble in grain shall come to the Secretary of Agriculture and say, "I am a gambler, and I desire to pay 20 cents on every bushel involved in such transactions." Everybody here knows that no one will come in and admit that he is a gambler. Therefore this bill, purporting to be for revenue, is of no effect for this purpose, because if a man fails to pay the 20 cents a bushel there is no criminal prosecution under the act. If the committee will turn to section 8, which attempts to provide a punishment for the violation of this law, they will read that only violations of sections 4 and 5 are made crimes. If a person violates section 4 or section 5, he may be prosecuted, but by section 3 he is specifically exempted. In other words, a man can gamble by puts and calls, ups and downs, and if he does not pay 20 cents a bushel nothing can be done with him.

The committee seeks by this bill to do indirectly that which can be done directly by my amendment, namely, prevent gambling in grain.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STAFFORD). The bill under consideration has for its purpose the regulation of boards of trade dealing in grain under a governmental license by means of the taxing power. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, instead of licensing boards of trade to carry on their dealings, would absolutely forbid all transactions of the character referred to in the bill that are authorized under certain conditions and limitations. Under the general rule of the House relating to germaneness, as found in Rule XVI, without referring to clause 3, Rule XXI, which still further limits the privilege of amendment on revenue bills, which this is, this amendment would be excluded because it is extraneous to that which is under consideration by the committee. It involves an entirely different subject for consideration than that in the bill under consideration. The bill provides for licensing under the taxation power of Congress; the amendment is to prohibit entirely under the commerce clause. It is clearly a different proposal, and therefore without resorting to the strict rule found in Rule XXI that on revenue bills an amendment must be germane, not only to the subject matter but to the item under consideration, the Chair believes that it is not germane under the ban of the general rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, strike out the word "such" and, after the word "transaction," strike out the comma, and, in line 16, strike out the words "intending hereby to tax the transactions known to the trade as 'privileges,' 'bids,' 'offers,' 'puts and calls,' 'indemnities,' or 'ups and downs.'"

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this bill. Representing a constituency in the city of New York devoted principally to manufacturing and most of whom are consumers, I feel bound to welcome any move in the direction of abolishing gambling in foodstuffs. My only doubt in regard to the measure at all is that it does not go far enough. I wish that the committee had gone to the extent of prohibiting gambling of all kinds, not only in foodstuffs but in all the necessaries of life. [Applause.]

The people of the great cities ought to be brought closer to the farm. That is the defect in our present economic situation. They are kept apart by gamblers and manipulators, and this bill ought to be welcomed by every man who has the interest of his country at heart. Its purpose, its avowed purpose, is to stop gambling in foodstuffs, and I do not care whether it goes far enough or not, or whether it may ultimately be found to fail or not, but it seems to be a sincere effort in the right direction. To my mind it is sufficient for the present if it puts on record the Members of this House as being in favor of the abolition of gambling in foodstuffs. My amendment is directed to the clarification of the section. You will notice in line 14 that you have the term "such"—such transactions—and the term "such" naturally implies an antecedent. Now, there is no antecedent in the bill prior to the words "such transactions" and the term "such transactions" and the such transactions "such transactions" and the such transactions is the such transactions of the such transactions is the such transactions of the such transactions is the such transactions of the such transactions of the such transactions of the such transactions of the section. tions," and one is utterly at a loss to understand what transactions are meant until you get down to line 16, where the bill drafter has endeavored to correct the error, or style at least, by saying "intending hereby to tax the transactions known to the trade," and so forth. With all due deference I consider that to be rather awkward and it makes the paragraph ambiguous, and I hope that my amendment will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the consideration of my amendment be reserved until later in consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair declines to entertain that request, as it is in violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out "of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved in such transactions." Also strike out the comma following the word "transactions" and insert in lieu thereof "of 20 cents a bushel on each bushel involved therein."

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of offering the amendment is the same purpose as that of the gentleman from New York. He, however, has pointed out one defect in the wording as it now exists, in that there is no antecedent to the phrase "such transactions." I believe the wording is subject to other objections. For instance, as you read the section in the reported bill, "there is hereby levied a tax of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved in such transactions.", Then you have a comma, and then you start out "upon every privilege or option for a contract either of purchase or sale of grain." I submit that the language is at least ambiguous, that you do not know whether the tax is intended to be upon the bushel or upon the transaction, whether it is intended that you should tax a certain number of bushels in the first instance and again tax the transaction. Perhaps the section would be plainer if the comma had been emitted, because it is evidently the intent that the tax should be on the transaction itself, on the illegitimate or illegal transaction, and that the amount of tax shall be determined by the number of bushels involved in the transaction.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman know that under existing law there are certain taxes levied on these transactions?

Mr. BURTNESS. But that is not the point. That tax is upon the contract to sell the grain. Here in this case under section 3 the tax is upon the transaction as a put or call.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will yield, it is clear to the gentleman's mind that the words antecedent "to such transactions" refer solely to a transaction in grain upon which there is already an existing tax, and that is what we are trying to remedy. I think it is absolutely clear.

Mr. BURTNESS. In that case you should eliminate the comma following the word "transactions," as you are now proceeding to tax something new, semething that has never been taxed before, to wit, puts and calls, and in order to tax a put and call you have to make it plain you are doing so. Now, I do not know of any case, but if there is a transaction where there is a tax on at the present time, that is to be considered.

Mr. TINCHER. There is a tax on puts and calls now, and the representatives of the exchanges say it yields a considerable revenue to the Government and a considerable profit to the institutions, so if the gentleman is basing his remarks on the fact that there is not any tax the section relates to that very proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURTNESS. I ask that my time be extended five min-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Will the gentleman read his amendment again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported. Mr. BURTNESS. If a former tax e If a former tax existed, it will still exist. I do not know whether the taxes referred to are taxes upon income or revenue, or whatever they are, but surely there must be some change made in the section if it is going to be made plain.

Mr. PURNELL, Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment as an amendment to the substitute. Is it in order?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the substitute will be in order if it is an amendment.

Mr. PURNELL. If I may have the indulgence of the Chair,
I desire to offer this amendment. I think the language sought to be included is perfectly proper, and in addition to that I want to set forth one other defect in section 3 that was pointed out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper]. this amendment. Page 2, line 14, after the word "involved," strike out "in such transactions" and insert "whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to," so that the section as amended would read:

That in addition to the taxes now imposed by law there is hereby levied a tax of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved therein—

I do not believe I inserted the word "therein"whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the legislative situation does not permit at this time the offering of his amendment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Griffin] offered an amendment. The gentleman from North Dakota offered a substitute. The gentleman's amendment is not an amendment to the substitute. If the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota be defeated, then the gentleman's amendment will be in order.

Mr. BURTNESS. May I make a suggestion? I ask unanimous consent that the wording suggested by the gentleman from Indiana commencing with the words "whether intended for delivery," and so forth, may be added to the substitute which I have offered following the word "therein." I think that will I think that will cover the situation absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to modify his substitute in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. PURNELL. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman include in that the additional words which were read or only nominally referred to"?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. Whether the actual commodity is to be delivered or only nominally referred to.

Mr. BURTNESS. Exactly. Mr. PURNELL. That will accomplish the purpose and clear up the whole situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection? The substitute amendment will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out "of 26 cents a bushel on every bushel involved in such transactions"; also strike out the comma following the word "transactions," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "amounting to 20 cents per bushel on each bushel involved therein, whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to." so that the paragraph will read:

"That in addition to the taxes now imposed by law there is hereby levied a fax amounting to 20 cents per bushel on each bushel involved therein, whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to upon each and every privilege or option"—

And so forth.

Mr. BURTNESS. The clause commencing "whether" should, of course, be set off with a comma.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the amendment be modified? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota as modified.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to accept the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not yet been reported, but was only read for information. The Clerk will now report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 13 and 14, strike out "of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved in such transactions"; also strike out the comma following the word "transactions," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "amounting to 20 cents per bushel on each bushel involved therein, whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there has been some reference made to the taxes which are already made upon the sales of produce on the exchanges. There is a tax imposed now by law amounting to 2 cents on each $100 of the transaction, or, in other words, two one-hundredths of 1 per cent. But, of course, that applies only to actual sales, and it is evidenced, as I remember the law, by a stamp tax placed on the bill of sale. Whether the amendment would harmonize with that provision or not, I can not say, because that provision of the law as it now stands does not tax anything but actual transactions. believe the tax in the bill was intended to be in addition to those provided by law.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one word with reference to the committee jurisdiction of this bill. This bill would properly come before the Ways and Means Committee, but the Ways and Means Committee is altogether too busy at this time to take charge of it. Had it been referred to that committee, it would simply have delayed its passage.

The Ways and Means Committee waived its right to consider this bill in order that speedy action might be taken upon it, but this waiver should not be treated as an admission that under the rules the bill should not be referred to it.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, since I first began to study this bill I have had very great misgivings as to whether it will accomplish the purpose it is intended to accomplish. In fact, at times I have felt it might do more harm than good, and I know I share the feeling of a great many of my colleagues, who have at times been fearful that it might react in some way to the detriment of the producer, and this is certainly the result none of us would desire. What we hope to do by this bill is to prevent the gambling in grains, which so frequently beats down the price of the product of the farm so that the producer does not get adequate returns for his labor and investment.

I am not on the Agriculture Committee, I have not heard the testimony of the great array of able witnesses who appeared before the committee in favor of this bill, nor am I familiar with their line of reasoning in arriving at the conclusion that this bill, worded as it is, will accomplish the desired purpose. I have given the matter some thought, because no one can represent an agricultural community, as I do, without coming in contact with men who rightfully and very earnestly protest against the heartless board-of-trade gambling, which frequently brings about their great financial losses.

I will say, however, that during my experience in Congress I do not recall seeing more unanimity of opinion supporting any bill than there is in the instance before us. This particular piece of legislation has been indorsed by practically every organization interested in the production of grain. The National Grange, the Farmers' Union, the American Farm Bureau, as well as various well-informed citizens representing the consuming public, and also the Secretary of Agriculture, all demand the passage of this bill. I believe every member of the Agriculture Committee favors this bill, and I know of no Member of Congress who opposes it. Hoping it will do no harm and that some beneficial results may flow from it to the much-discouraged producers of grain, I shall heartily support it.

And in this connection, Mr. Chairman, I think it proper at this time to touch upon other subjects in which the farmers and producers of agricultural products are very much interested. I am in close touch with the agricultural interests of my district, not only by receiving letters, petitions, and memorials from them, but I frequently take occasion to talk over with some of them the problems that confront them,

During the war most of the producers of agricultural products made money. They did not roll in luxury like some classes of people, because the prices of most of the things they produced in some sections of the country were regulated as a war necessity. When the war was over the demand for the enormous production, which the war had stimulated, soon began to di-On account of the impoverished condition of the people of the Old World and the great difference in exchange rates between their countries and ours they were prevented to a great extent from purchasing our food products. Production began to increase in the Old World and they have managed to get along without so much of the products of the American farm. are countries, however, that are producing at low cost live stock, grain, and other agricultural products in great quantities which are seeking our higher priced markets for the sale of the same.

Last year we imported 37,000,000 bushels of wheat at $2.02 per bushel. At the same time we exported 191,000,000 bushels at $2.68 a bushel. I do not have the time to explain how this condition was brought about, but these are facts verified by the official Government records. Every pound of flour ground from this wheat took the place of American produced flour and American produced wheat. It did not lower the price of bread, because the miller figured the price of his flour upon the price of the wheat that was being exported. Farm organizations have been complaining bitterly because of the importation of farm products at a time when they were in such desperate straits themselves. This Congress has listened to their complaints and has recently passed an emergency tariff bill designed to protect them temporarily until a general tariff law can be enacted.

In the meantime the farmer is being propaganded to the effect that the emergency tariff is "bunkum," because they say we export farm products. The farmer does not know oftimes whether to believe that this law is beneficial to him or not. This kind of false propaganda destroys confidence in the future of American agriculture and hurts the business generally.

We recently passed a bill, and I heartily supported it, giving new life to the War Finance Corporation. This was also demanded by the farming interests on the theory that it would loosen up the money markets of the world and afford them a better market for their products.

I also supported, during last Congress, measures designed to liberalize the farm loan law and to give the farm loan banks more Government funds so that those who had made investments, or desired to make investments, could borrow money at a cheap rate on long terms.

I also supported a measure during the last Congress, which, to my way of thinking, was one of the most radical and unusual pieces of legislation that has been passed in many years, and I assure you that nothing less than the most unfortunate financial plight of the farmers of the country could have induced me to have departed from my general rules and principles so far as to have supported this law. The bill I have in mind is the Volstead Farm Act. It specifically authorized producers of farm products, stock raisers, and fruit growers to combine for the purpose of collectively selling, pooling their interest, and so forth, without the same being in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Ordinarily, it is a very dangerous practice to give certain classes exemption from laws that are wholesome, but I think most men familiar with the subject will agree that the producer of these products is usually at the mercy of the stockexchange gambler, the commission man, and the middleman, as well as the retailer, and unless he had certain privileges given him he can not adequately protect himself. I am glad to see that the producers under this law are getting together and demanding fair prices for the things they produce and are trying to emanicipate themselves from the horde of greedy parasites that fatten upon their products before they reach the consumer.

The other day, before an important committee of this House, a sheep grower testified he shipped a carload of lambs from the Middle West to New York City and that not long after he had shipped them he received a statement from his commission men in New York City demanding 70 cents to complete the payment of the freight and commission charges. In other words, he produced the lambs, shipped them, and was 70 cents worse off than nothing. If you will figure the price the average retail meat dealer asks for pork or beef or mutton, you can readily see that the present market price of live stock is entirely too low. If you ask the packer about it, he quotes you a very low price at which he sold it to the retailer. I, of course, understand that freight rates are very high, but the freight on a pound of pork is certainly not very much. A half pound of meat down here in this city at a restaurant will cost you from 90 cents to $1.50. The producer did not get more than 9 cents for it. In one county in my district a farmer constituent sold a calf to a butcher with the understanding that he would buy back one quarter of the calf. The price of the calf was agreed upon but nothing was said about the price of the quarter. When he took the quarter, he owed the butcher $1.65. Thus we see food products sold at a price by the producer that discourages production, while the consumer is required to pay so much that dissatisfaction and discontent prevails over the country on account of the high cost of living.

Anyone familiar with the facts will have to agree that this condition is not one that will readily yield to legislative effort. You can not legislate prices successfully in peace times. We can give the producer helpful legislation, and I know the sentiment of this Congress is in favor of doing so. Representatives of the various classes of producers have been before Congress repeatedly, but admit their inability to suggest legislation that will cure the difficulty and most of them will admit frankly that a large part of the present deplorable condition is due to economic causes arising from the war that time alone can cure. The representatives of the agricultural interests are here now asking us to pass a bill creating a commission to investigate and report conditions to Congress with specific recommendations as to what Congress can do to help them. I shall gladly support such a measure. Agriculture is the foundation of all of our national wealth and greatness and we must do everything humanly possible to see that it prospers.

Another thing we can do, gentlemen, and I believe we will soon do it, and that is to. in some manner, bring about a reduc-tion of freight rates. They are entirely too high and it is very injurious, not only to the farmer but to the producer of every kind of manufactured wealth. I have insisted all along that the railroad rate fixers were cutting off their own noses when they boosted freight rates to their present alarming height. I do not think they obtain as much revenue in the aggregate from the present excessive high rates as they would receive if the rates were lower. The producers of southern vegetables and fruits at this hour are refusing to ship to the North in many instances for the reason that frequently they do not obtain enough for their produce to pay the freight charges.

I have in my district one of the greatest watermelon and cantaloupe producing sections of the United States, and of the world, for that matter. It is, indeed, a very extensive business and much money is invested in it. The season for transporting these products to the other products to the other products. porting these products to the city market is about here. They know and I know that the probabilities are that for most of their crops sold in distant markets they will not receive sufficient returns to pay the freight. We can not hope for this kind of production to go on if this condition prevails. The railroad therefore loses its customers and the consuming public loses the product and the cost of living increases.

I notice in the morning paper that some railroad magnate has testified before the Senate investigating committee that freight rates are not too high and that a reduction of them would not increase their revenues as a whole; but I, for one, do not believe him. I realize that the operating expenses of the railroads at present are more than their income and that with this condition prevailing railroads can not be run efficiently, the public can not have good service, and that no additional railroads will be built. The operating expenses must be cut and their freight business must be increased, and I am prepared to support any reasonable measure that will fairly and honestly bring about this result.

The farmers in my district are organizing and are informing themselves on things important to their industry, and it is a good sign of the times. I know, however, that they are being furnished a great amount of misinformation and probably are being demagogued and propaganded from a great many sources. I have had several petitions from members of farm organizations, coming from the different sections of my district, which I am satisfied were prepared many hundreds of miles from the district, proposing certain things that many of the signers, had they stopped to think about it at all, in no sense believe in. Some of my farmers have petitioned me to put a tariff on farm products, others have told me they did not need any tariff and that protection to farm products was pure bunk. Some of them have insisted upon a tariff on farm products, but that no tariff be levied upon the things they have to buy; in other words, they favored surrendering the markets of our manufactured products to the cheaper products of the Old World, leaving our toilers who work in the factories, mines, and the mills without a job, and thus cease to become consumers of our farm products.

Now, my friends, our citizenship should be taught that America possesses the greatest natural wealth in practically all things of any nation of the world. We can produce practically everything we need. The protection of it means the production and consumption of it at home. This great production and consumption and the sale of our surplus abroad means our prosperity and happiness. We must not permit one class to try perity and happiness. We must not permit one class to try to exterminate the other. We must all live together and patronize each other. Our markets for everything are the best and greatest markets in the world. We have the highest standard of citizenship, the best fed, best clothed, and best educated people as a nation in the world. We must jealously guard these blessings for ourselves and our posterity.

Northern men in Congress must vote to protect the products of the South and the South should stand for needed legislation.

in the North. The northeastern manufacturer, notwithstanding the recent attitude of New England Members of Congress, dares not crush the producer of the West and Middle West without destroying the market for his product.

It is no unusual thing for a Member of Congress to get up here on the floor of the House and contend for protection and remedial legislation for his particular class of constituents and then deny all other districts the same privilege. It is a shortsighted policy, and the fellow who pursues it, in my judgment, will not last long in public favor.

The bill we are passing to-day, gentlemen, comes to us from the Agriculture Committee, with the following recommendation:

This measure will absolutely wipe out of existence the practice of "puts" and "calls," "ups" and "downs," and "indemnities." And while it will not abolish speculation, or what is known to the trade as the "legitimate hedge," it will absolutely destroy manipulation, and it will make for uniformity among all markets.

I sincerely hope it may bring about these desired results, because we see frequently the pernicious effect of the activities of the speculative gambler on the grain market. Usually he does not receive or deliver a bushel of grain, nor has he any interest whatever in the success or failure of the man who produces it. His transaction is a cold-blooded one, and he remorselessly beats the price up or down, depending upon conditions, in order to reap a harvest of unearned wealth.

Some have suggested that the grain stock market affords the market for the farmer and fixes him a price he could not otherwise have and that this act may destroy the market-fixing qualities of the stock exchange system. I am not sufficiently an expert on the question to say whether it will or will not. most vitally interested in the question and those demanding the passage of this bill think that it will not have that result. am told that the producers of coal in the United States are today trying to establish an exchange where the price of coal will be regulated, to the end that they may have a market-fixing medium. If they get this exchange established and the coal gambler does to the coal operator what the grain gamblers have frequently done to the farmer I believe they will regret encouraging the existence of such an institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have that reported once more. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I wonder if we could not have the paragraph read as it would read if amended? The CHAIRMAN. If no objection is raised, the amendment will be read, and then the paragraph as it would read if amended.

The amendment, and the paragraph as it would read if amended, were again read.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

That meets, I think, substantially the point I had in mind vesterday when I interrupted the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL]. The gentleman from New York and others have said that there is no antecedent to the words "such transactions." It seems to me that the antecedent is found in the first five lines on page 2, containing the words-words "board of trade" shall be held to include and mean any exchange or association, whether incorporated or unincorporated, of persons who shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling grain or receiving the same for sale on consignment.

That very clearly is a statement of certain transactions, and the words "such transactions," in section 3, refer clearly to the buying or selling of grain and receiving it on consignment. Therefore, in my judgment, the bill as introduced would have put this additional tax upon and so penalized legitimate transactions, and not puts and calls alone.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will yield.
Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Can the gentleman give any instance where the tax would be levied under this section? I have read the section very carefully and I have listened very carefully to the amendment, and I can not for the life of me see what either the original section meant or what the section as amended means.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman inquiring whether there is any other tax under our revenue laws?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I am inquiring what the section means, what it will tax.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, I understand that everybody engaged in a transaction of that kind—"puts and calls"— which is purely gambling, is to be compelled to write their contracts and that a penalty will be imposed on "puts-andcalls" transactions. And, if the gentleman will permit, this tax is to be imposed to drive that sort of business out of existence. I understood the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to say a little while ago during the debate that that provision was unconstitutional, because Congress could not do indirectly what it could not do directly.

Mr. BLANTON. I said it could do it directly. There are some gentlemen who seem to think it could not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the constitutional point which the gentleman raises?

Mr. BLANTON. The constitutional point is this: That if it is true we can not do it directly by a law putting them out of business then we can not tax them out of business by a tax provision.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A complete answer to that is found in the history of legislation by Congress. Congress could not pass a law directly to destroy State bank issues of paper money, and so it did by indirection what it could not do directly and passed a law that destroyed such issues by imposing on them a tax of 10 per cent. The gentleman from Texas seems to have forgotten that. It put a tax of 10 per cent on the issues of State banks and so killed them entirely, so that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] seems to have forgotten that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do this solely for the purpose of getting information on the subject, if the gentleman from Kansas will be kind enough to answer. I do not know what this original section means; I do not know what this section as amended means. The last three lines say, "intending hereby to tax the transactions known to the trade as 'privi-leges,' 'bids,' 'offers,' 'puts and calls,' 'indemnities,' or 'ups and downs.'" Now that, of course, can add nothing to what has gone before, because that simply says what you are intending to do. What has gone before must be the substance of the provision of a tax law. This is a tax law. I can not for the life of me see what it taxes.

Mr. TINCHER. I am sorry the gentleman can not see it. Perhaps it is due largely to the fact that the gentleman has not paid much attention to the hearings on this bill. To-night, everything being normal, there will be several hundred thousand bushels of calls disposed of on the Chicago exchange, and several hundred thousand bushels of puts. Those are contracts. At present that transaction is evidenced by a memorandum. There is a small tax on it, amounting on the 5,000 bushels of calls to a few cents.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What is it for? Mr. TINCHER. That is for the right to take 5,000 bushels of grain to-morrow morning on a future contract offered. The tax on that under this bill would be 20 cents a bushel.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. TINCHER. The entire committee has spent several weeks hearing testimony on it; and, seriously, if the gentleman wants to know what "puts" and "calls" are, they are fully covered in the hearings.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I know. What does this section mean? You say you are going to charge 20 cents a bushel on "calls." What do you mean by that?

Mr. TINCHER. By paying $5 to-night a man can get a little slip entitling him to 5,000 bushels to-morrow morning at a certain price. That is a call. Does the gentleman understand what that means?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I understand that.

Mr. TINCHER. If this bill passes and that section is in it, if they indulge in that in Chicago they will pay a tax of 20 cents a bushel on that 5,000 call, which would tend slightly to make the business unprofitable, and there would be a tendency to desist.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Who pays it?

Mr. TINCHER. The seller.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The seller pays the tax.
Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I do not mean to be understood as being familiar with these details, but I understand the difference be-tween "puts" and "calls" is this: I think the "puts" are down below the market on that particular day, and the "calls" are above it-that is, if you want to bet that the market, on the following day before its close, will go down to a certain figure, you make that bet, and it is a "put." There is an opposite party to it, of course, and if the market does not go down to that figure you must make good for the difference or the margin on the number of bushels involved in that particular "put." The "call" is just the opposite. A man bets that the market will go up on the following day. If it does not go to that figure, the party that makes the bet must make good, and vice versa.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I still insist that the language of this section is meaningless, although the amendment makes it less ambiguous, and I venture the assertion that when this bill comes to final enactment that section will never be in there in that form.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the amendment is exhausted. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that no gentleman will embarrass me during the few moments that I shall occupy the time of the committee by asking me what is meant by "privileges," "bids," "offers," "puts," "calls," "indemnities," or "ups and downs," for I do not know. [Laughter.] I have heard about them ever since I can remember. When I was a boy and journeyed from an Iowa farm to Chicago and remained there just long enough to discover that it was not a good place for me [laughter], I used to go down to the board of trade occasionally and watch with lively interest the doings in the bear pit. I heard more or less talk about "puts and calls," and so forth. I did not learn much about them then, and I know little more about them now.

I think I do, however, understand the purpose and the intent of the committee. The committee has endeavored, as I understand it, to retain a wide opportunity for dealing and trading, both in cash grain and in futures, and preserving that opportunity is a very important one, I think, for the grain trade and for the grain grower. On the other hand, the committee proposes to outlaw by prohibitive taxation certain purely speculative, purely gambling, transactions; transactions that do not, as a matter of fact, broaden or extend or widen legitimate trading in grain, but transactions which, in the opinion of many people, have a tendency to produce a condition of fluctuation in the market, harmful alike, as they see it, to both the consumer and the producer.

While I know comparatively little about grain exchanges and their operations, I am not one of those who believe that most of those operations, even those that are speculative, were harmful except to the lambs who are occasionally shorn, and whose shearing, while regrettable, is not a matter over which we need to be especially disturbed, because the lambs can keep away from the clutches of the shearer if they desire to do so.

The desire of the committee has been, as I understand it, to differentiate between those transactions that are legitimate, even those that may be purely speculative, but necessary and helpful to the dealer and not harmful to the grower, and to put the ban on pure, unadulterated, and harmful gambling. Whether the committee has accomplished this purpose in an ideal way I do not pretend to say, but I bel'eve they have approached their task with an understanding of what was needed, and I am inclined to the opinion they have reached a sound conclusion. I want to compliment the committee on having approached this matter from a perfectly sane viewpoint, as it appears to me. There are folks who are misguided enough to believe that we should very greatly curtail opportunities to trade and speculate in commodities. I have never indulged in that kind of pastime myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I believe it would be most unfortunate for the producer of grain or of any nonperishable commodity of large production and consumption if we were to curtail unduly the opportunity to trade in those products, not only to trade in them, but to speculate as to the price of the commodity will be at some time in the future.

The opportunity to do that is, as we all realize, essential to the carrying on of certain classes of business. If the man who bought the farmer's grain had no opportunity to hedge, to insure himself against losses, it would be necessary for him to secure the grain at a price leaving an unquestioned margin between the amount paid and the amount likely to be received; without an opportunity to protect himself against loss, he and all engaged in the business would join in bidding down the price, bearing the market constantly and continually. The opportunity to hedge, as I believe it is called, to fortify oneself by buying futures, by protecting oneself against the fluctuations of the market, enables the buyer to pay a higher price than he otherwise would be justified in paying for the product. Those of us who are old enough can remember the time when wheat prices were largely fixed in local markets. In those days wheat was hauled very long distances by wagon and often sold for ridiculously low prices. Frequently the farmer had no means of knowing when he started on his long wagon journey what he would receive for the wheat when he reached the market. As a boy I saw wheat pass through the little town in Iowa where I lived, bound for a market 100 miles from the farm where it was grown. When I was 15 years old I was one of a little band of farmers' boys who took four-horse wagonloads of wheat from northwestern Iowa 120 miles to Sioux City, and the road was lined with people hauling grain long distances. We got 56 cents a bushel for it after hauling it 120 miles

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Did you know the market price before you started?

Mr. MONDELL. In those days there was no way of knowing what the market price was, either before we started or when we got there, except that we knew what the man at Sioux City offered us for our wheat. Very frequently the price varied 10, 15, or 20 cents a bushel in towns but a comparatively short distance apart. One thing that the development of trading in these commodities has done has been to fix a market and narrow the margin, in the main, although not always between the prices the producer received and the ultimate consumer paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again

expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not like to impose upon the committee, Mr. Chairman

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 or 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request is in the alternative. Which does the gentleman ask?
Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer to amend that by making it 10 minutes, so that the gentleman may finish his speech.

Mr. MONDELL. I think I may be able to conclude in five minutes. I thank my friend from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to entertain the overture of the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended five minutes?

There was no objection. Mr. MONDELL. There are times even in these days of very active trading-and we are passing through such a period nowwhen there is quite a gap between the price which the grower obtains and the price which the exporter or miller receives. That condition sometimes persists after a heavy drop in primary markets, but in the main that gap is very greatly lessened by lively and continuous trading. Realizing that, the committee have not attempted to interfere with what is generally considered legitimate trading, including even classes of trading that may be said to be largely speculative.

Some have suggested that this trading has a tendency to cause and create fluctuations in the value of the product. The fact and create fluctuations in the value of the product. is that wide fluctuations in price are lessened rather than accentuated by trading in futures. I think it is a very fortunate thing for us that the farmers of the country—while they have been under the impression that there were certain classes of operations that should be prohibited-have in the main realized that an active trading market for their products, both cash and future trading, was essential to the maintenance of a fair and reasonably uniform price.

I confess that I am not an expert in these matters. I confess that I could not answer all questions that might be asked as to what the effect of the committee's bill would be. I have faith, however, that through the hearings the members of the committee have added to the very considerable knowledge they already had and have become thoroughly informed, and that as a result they have brought in a bill that can be defended. While I believe the bill meets the reasonable expectations of those who desire that purely gambling operations in grain should be restrained, it does not unduly curtail or interfere with those operations in the grain trade that in the long run are more essential in the interest of the farmer and grower than in the interest of other parties to grain transactions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired on this amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, during a colloquy a little while ago between the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] and my colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the question was raised as to the attitude of the Chicago Board of Trade and of its officers. The impression was given that this organization has changed its mind with reference to this bill. I think perhaps, in reading the Record, some one may arrive at the conclusion that the president of that board of trade, Mr. Griffin, and its members had indorsed H. R. 5676. As a matter of fact, H. R. 5676 was not before the committee when Mr. Griffin appeared before the committee. The only bill which was before the committee, which had been introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher], was the bill H. R. 2363, and the hearings before the committee attended by Mr. Griffin were held on April 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29 and May 2, 1921. H. R. 5676 was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] on May 3. After the committee had concluded all the hearings on the first bill, the later bill was introduced as the result of the opinion held by the committee after the hearings.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAMS. May I suggest that the changes in the bill were made because of the suggestions of Mr. Griffin and were very largely on his ideas.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would not doubt my friend's good faith and I have perfect confidence in him, but I doubt if Mr. Griffin is content with the changes that were made by the committee. Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the gentleman read his testimony?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have read his testimony, and I find that this is what he says-I read from page 149 of the hear-

I also concur in the statement of Mr. Wells that the Tincher bill has many elements of a constructive character. In principle, I wish to say to you, I indorse the Tincher bill. In precise detail, I believe it needs amendment, largely, to meet practical questions.

The committee made so many amendments that they found it necessary to have an entirely new bill introduced by the chairman. I do not want the opinion to prevail that the gentlemen who constitute the Chicago Board of Trade—and they are gentlemen of high standing in our community, representing some of our best citizenship and are not gamblersmay have been a great deal of confusion arising in the minds of some men by all this talk about gambling. There is more or less speculation in all forms of business in the complex ramifications of trade in our day, but let us not be carried away by such argument. I have wondered sometimes just what this bill is. I wonder whether it is a revenue measure. It certainly will not produce any revenue, because the argument is that the tax of 20 cents a bushel is going to stop the operations that they are designed to reach. I do not know whether it is a bill to stop gambling, but if it is we are encroaching on the police powers of the States. I do not know of any provis on in the Constitution under which we may legislate to stop gambling in the States.

It is said that this bill is in the interest of the farmer. I have voted for farmers' legislation here; a part of my constituency is in the country. I voted for the bill to give them the right to organize collective bargaining associations. I voted for the emergency tariff bill; but do you not think, gentlemen, it is about time that we stopped ascribing every bill that comes here as intended to relieve some particular situation in the life and business of the farmers? They are not coming here supplicating the House and asking for this legislation. Let us legislate on the merits. If this is a good thing, let us pass it; but let us not make the argument that it is being demanded by any part of our citizens or for the interest of any particular class.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman think that the opinion of the Chicago Board of Trade would be conclusive whether it was good or bad?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not, not at all; nor do I think the opinion of the farmers is conclusive whether it is good legislation. The main object, as I understand, is to stop gambling, but I venture the suggestion that you are not reaching that [Applause.] You are not, but you are going to impose restrictions on the exchanges of the country that are going to prove in their opinion-and their opinion is worth whiledangerous and disastrous. We are flooded to-day with messages from people who have the right to appeal to us just as much as any other class of the population; and I say, gentlemen, we should not pass legislation as to the effect of which we are not advised. The lengthy arguments that have been made here show that the committee do not think that this will do just what they intend to do, but they have brought in something that they think will be the next best thing.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and on the section close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has already closed and all speeches now are by unanimous consent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the precise motion before the House? The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burness] is before the House, and all debate being conducted now by unanimous consent. Mr. LONGWORTH.

That amendment would be open to further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I give notice that I shall object to further remarks.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, is it the gentleman's intention to complete the bill to-

Mr. TINCHER. It is my purpose to complete the bill to-night, Mr. LONGWORTH. I understand that the ruling of the Mr. TINCHER. Chair is that the amendment of the committee is open to further amendment, and therefore gentlemen will have further opportunity to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment is closed.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing about the practical part of stock or grain transactions on a board of trade. I never bought or sold a dollar's worth of anything on a stock exchange. The reasons were several:

First, I did not have the money; second, I did not have the disposition; and, third, I never did believe in playing somebody else's game. Therefore I need some information about this thing before I can vote intelligently upon it. Now, this amendment that has been proposed by the gentleman from North Dakota seems to me complicates it somewhat. It provides that in addition to the tax now imposed by law there is hereby levied a tax amounting to 20 cents a bushel on each bushel involved therein, whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to. Now, under that amendment, if I understand it correctly, if I go to a friend of mine and make a contract with him by which I get the right to purchase from him a certain amount of corn at a certain time and put up my money on the proposition intending to take the corn, I thereby violate the law.

Mr. TINCHER. That would be true if the remaining part of this section were not in the law.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illino's. The remaining part of this section provides "upon each and every privilege or option for a con-tract either of purchase or sale of grain," and so forth.

Mr. TINCHER. I am sure, as the section is now-I do not have in mind just how it reads with the amendment-the gentleman would not contend that it would affect his transaction?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I do not know. Here is the thing that is in my mind, whether the latter part of this section saying "intending hereby to tax the transactions known to the trade as 'privileges, bids, offers,'" and so forth, limits the preceding and enacting part of the statute, and I think that is a matter of doubt.

Mr. TINCHER. I think there is no doubt about limiting it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is what I have in mind. I have no doubt that it is necessary and advisable to limit these purely gambling transactions. I think they do a great deal of harm to the farmers of the country and I believe generally. have known corn on the board of trade to vary 10 cents a day in price purely on account of transactions of this kind. I remember in May, 1919, on a speech that Mr. Barnes delivered at Minneapolis, threatening to put corn under a regulation as to price, corn dropped 10 cents in one day and back again in a few days because of that speech. Pure speculation in grain futures ought to be stopped; it does nobody any good; they are illegitimate transactions. But I say to you gentlemen, that I do not believe we ought to curb a legitimate transaction where a person intends to buy the grain.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman know of an instance where a person intending actually to buy or sell grain does it through the medium of a so-called put and call?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The words "put and call" may have a technical meaning in the grain trade, but when you put them in the statute they have no specific meaning and to ascertain the specific meaning of the words the courts in going over this section will consider the language which precedes those particular words. Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. BURTNESS. I think myself the statute could be written and better language used, but the statute specifically refers to puts and calls known to the trade, and any court will give it reasonable and liberal construction.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The courts may have judicial knowledge of what puts and calls are, but I do not.

Mr. BURTNESS. But if they have not they will find out. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire make the motion necessary to obtain the floor—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In order to get some information on this section. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] a moment ago intimated a doubt that this was a revenue bill. The distinguished parliamentarian now occupying the chair, however, has ruled that it is a revenue bill, as has also the distinguished parliamentarian who preceded him. Now, this being indubitably a revenue bill, I shall ask some gentleman in charge of the bill whether they have any estimates from the Treasury Department as to how much revenue will be raised? [Laughter.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say to the gentleman that, considering the condition of the Treasury, we thought that there was no danger of having any great surplus. and we did not secure that information.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman does not think this law will raise a substantial amount of revenue?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I do not think the gentleman in the consideration of taxes and fariff bills need worry about the surplus that will be created by the passage of this bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, I only wanted to know whether this amount of tax proposed is a use of the taxing power to destroy industry or methods of doing business.

Mr. TINCHER. I will say to the gentleman that it is not a use of the taxing power to destroy industry, as I understand the meaning of the word "industry."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not in any controversy with the gentleman, because I shall probably vote for his bill. I merely want to know whether this is a use of the taxing power to prevent certain transactions, and if so, how it is you arrived at 20 cents a bushel. Was there an investigation made to ascertain whether that would make such transactions prohibitive?

Mr. TINCHER. I will say to the gentleman, under section 3, which is now under consideration, nearly every State in the Union, including the gentleman's own State, has a State law attempting to abolish that evil or method of gambling. Now, it is my judgment, while we can not pass a national law prohibiting that mode of gambling, that it will not be possible with that tax and they will desist from transactions known as indemnities, privileges, puts, and calls; that there will not be any revenue, because the practice will cease.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not averse to the use of the taxing power for putting down certain transactions or industries which are not to the benefit of the public.

For instance, I supported, some Congresses ago, a bill which put such a high tax on the manufacturers of white phosphorous matches as to make the industry impossible under those circumstances.

mstances. But that is the only precedent I know about. Mr. MASON. I can give the gentleman several other precedents. In the mixed flour bill-

Mr. LONGWORTH. That has never passed the House.

Mr. MASON. The filled cheese bill was passed upon, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that the judicial power could not interfere with the legislative power, and they immediately passed a tax that would be absolutely prohibitive.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There is no question as to the power to do it. The only point is, I recollect only one precedent to the present bill since I have been a Member of this House. And what I am trying to ascertain is whether the committee is frankly making use of the taxing power to destroy this method of doing business?

Mr. STEVENSON. The child labor act that was passed tended the same way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute that has been offered. In line 16, after the word "tax," insert the word "only."

The CHAIRMAN. There is no substitute pending. There is only an amendment pending.

Mr. ELLIS. Then the amendment, or whatever it is called. Consent was given by the Member who moved the amendment that the substitute be considered in its stead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Ellis moves to amend the amendment by inserting, on page 2, line 16, after the word "tax." the word "only."

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that the placing of this word in line 16 will be accurate, because of the change in the amendment to the whole section. But I have been impressed by the uncertainty and misgivings of some Members here, the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois, as to just what this section refers to and what transactions we are driving at. I submit that it will tend very much to remove doubt upon that matter if you insert this word, so that it will read "intending hereby"—that is, by this section to tax only the transaction known to the trade as "privileges," "bids," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes none. So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burtness].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, may the section be read as it would appear if this amendment should be adopted?

The Clerk will report the paragraph as it The CHAIRMAN.

would read if amended.

The paragraph as it would read if amended was again read. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CABLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to ask the Chairman a question relating to section 3 of the bill, which contains the only reference in the bill to what you admit is gambling. Is it intended that the penalty mentioned in section 9 applies to section 3, or is it your intention to exempt gambling from the penalty clause?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not care to take the time to discuss that matter. If the gentleman will examine the section, he will find that it refers to making a report, and there is no report in this.

Mr. CABLE. If you will examine section 9, you will find it does not apply to section 3 in any way, but applies to sections 4 and 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. That in addition to the taxes now imposed by law there is hereby levied a tax of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved therein, upon each contract of sale of grain for future delivery made at, on, or in an exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of bushess except.

or in an exchange, board of trade, or similar institution or place of business, except—

(a) Where the seller is at the time of the making of such contract the owner of the actual physical property covered thereby, or is the grower thereof, or in case either party to the contract is the owner or renter of land on which the same is to be grown, or is an association of such owners or growers of grain, or of such owners or renters of land; or

(b) Where such contracts are made by or through a member of a board of trade which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market," as hereinafter provided, and if such contract is evidenced by a memorandum in writing which shows the date, the parties to such contract and their addresses, the property covered and its price, and the terms of delivery, and provided that each board member shall keep for a period of three years from the date thereof and for such longer period as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct a permanent record of such contract for future delivery.

Mr. LINERERGER. Mr. Chairman I rise for the purpose

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of securing information. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the exception provided in section 9 is intended to exempt the practice commonly known to the trade as hedging? Whether we exempt the hedger, the grower of grain, who goes out and buys a sufficient amount of grain from the board to cover his own crop?

Mr. TINCHER. There is no question but that the grower of grain is permitted to use the hedging facilities of the market.

Mr. LINEBERGER. This paragraph is intended to cover that'

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 3, line 15, after the word "delivery," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That the number of bushels of grain that may be sold under such hedging contracts as are provided for in subdivision (b), wherein actual delivery of the specific grain is not within the contemplation of the parties, but is speculative only, shall be limited to and not exceed double the amount of bushels of the grain actually to be delivered under contracts made on such market."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not subject to a point of order. It is clearly a limitation, and it carries out the idea of my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], the chairman of this committee-the idea that he first had about this matter of properly limiting the hedging transaction. provides for only that limitation which he sought to provide for in his original bill; that is, the bill that he introduced at the last session, where he limited it to three times the amount of actual grain involved. This is really three times, because it is double the number of bushels that are actually in existence. I think it will easily insure a flexible market. It will easily permit the proper hedging and will carry out his idea of what should be done, the idea he had six months ago.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any definition in the bill of a hedging transaction?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, there is not any definition of "puts and calls" and "ups and downs," because the trade seems to know what "puts and calls" and "ups and downs" are already. There is somebody going up all the time and somebody coming down.

Mr. WALSH. Is that a form of transaction that is well understood?

Mr. BLANTON. Hedging is well understood on the market; it is well understood by the trade. It is better understood among the trade than the words "puts and calls," because all grain dealers—that is, the actual grain sellers—understand what hedging is, and there are some of them who do not understand thoroughly about "puts and calls" and "ups and down." The farmers all understand what "ups and downs" are, though.

I do not see how my friend from Kansas can object to this amendment. With this amendment passed I am one of the farmers' Representatives here who can vote for this bill, and I am one of the farmers' Representatives, because three-fourths of the voters of my district are farmers and stockraisers. It is their interest that I seek to represent here first, and with this amendment in the bill I can vote for it conscientiously, but with this amendment not in the bill I will not vote for it, because I believe it legalizes gambling and is against the interests of the farmers that I represent here.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. Yes,

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman take the position that there should be any limitation upon hedging, legitimate hedg-ing?

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever you go beyond the question of a legitimate insurance to the man who is buying the commodity, then you are going into a gambling transaction.

Mr. BURTNESS. As I understand it, the gentleman intended to limit not only the speculation and gambling, but hedging and what is regarded by everyone familiar with the business as entirely legitimate.

Mr. BLANTON. I am seeking to cut out the speculative gambling in the farmers' product and limit it to legitimate hedging.

Mr. BURTNESS. Why do you limit the hedging? you have no objection to legitimate hedging. You limit it to an amount that might not be sufficient to take care of the grain trade.

Mr. BLANTON. If I want to buy 10,000 bushels of wheat on the market for legitimate purposes, to be actually delivered to me, and I want to insure myself against loss in respect to that contract, I am permitted under this amendment to go upon the market and sell 10,000 bushels of wheat futures, and somebody else is permitted to buy that 10,000 bushels and sell it one time. My amendment permits this. That would be double the amount of the actual wheat involved in that transaction. It involves two different hedging sales. Whenever you go beyond that you are going beyond the legitimate insurance of hedging and are coming within the pale of gambling transactions. [Applause.]

has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to oppose the amendment. I am sorry the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] could not give this bill sufficient time to write it, so that he could vote for it. While I did not know much about the intricate workings of these boards of trade, I did draw a bill and introduce it, prior to all the hearings on this matter, seeking to prevent fluctuations on the board of trade and still protecting hedging with reference to the business transactions which are connected with the sale of a given commodity. But I am not in that condition where I am not always susceptible of enlightenment, and the witnesses appearing before the Committee on Agriculture convinced me that my bill was weak, in that it would permit corners by the big interests of this country which would be destructive to the producers and consumers of the country, and by the advice and suggestions of men like Herbert Hoover and Clifford Thorne and Mr. Howard and other men versed in the subject, and I may also say I had some suggestion from men in the exchanges, men like Mr. Wells, men of high standing, explaining that a bill containing the provisions of this amendment would afford a certain man, whose name is very familiar in the grain trade, who lives in Chicago, an opportunity absolutely to corner the grain market-for that reason in the new bill and during all the recent consideration by the committee of this matter we have abandoned the theory of controlling it in that manner.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TINCHER. Let us vote on this proposition before the gentleman from South Carolina begins.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

I understand a point of order has been made. Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the chairman of the committee I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been withdrawn. The question therefore recurs to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] is recognized.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, thus far I have not had anything to say about this measure, and it is not my business to mess in other people's troubles. But they keep bobbing in here with suggestions that the cotton people ought to be embraced within the provisions of this measure. This measure is practically the cotton-futures act, enacted in 1916, found in Thirty-ninth Statutes, part 1, page 476. There is nothing particularly new in this bill, except that it deals in pounds in the cotton-futures act and in bushels in this act, and you are simply following, as nearly as it can be made applicable, the legislation laid down for cotton in that cotton-futures act. So that there is no necessity for the cotton people being brought into this legislation. That act may be a good reason why we can afford to follow the gentleman from Kansas on this bill. I expect to follow him on this. That act has been satisfactory so far as it has gone, and the only great complaint there has been about it was that under that act there are 10 grades of cotton that can be delivered on any contract. Now, a man goes on the market to buy the cotton which he wants-a high grade of cotton, and probably the highest. He bids for it in the market and buys it at the exchange price, if he buys on the exchange, with the privilege of requiring his 100 bales of cotton to be delivered. The fellow who sells it is selling it about 2 cents below the spct market. That is about the way the future market runs in com-parison with the spot market. He is selling at about 2 cents below. Therefore when the man who bought the cotton calls for delivery the seller does not want to deliver the grade of cotton that the buyer bought, because he has got to lose some money on it. What does he do? Instead of delivering the highest grade he is going to deliver the lowest grade, because under the law as it now exists he can deliver all of it in any grade he sees fit. The purchaser has no say so about what shall be delivered if it comes within the 10 grades. The result is that the future market is usually from 2 cents to 4 cents lower than the spot market. So when the farmer goes to borrow money on his cotton at 90 days and spot cotton is selling at 22 cents, if the farmer wants to borrow 18 or 19 cents the banker will say, "No; your note is payable in 90 days and the August or September market is running at only 19 cents. Therefore yoù can not borrow 17 cents, but you can only get 15 cents a pound in the way of a loan on your cotton." And all the time that spot cotton is selling at 22 cents you are governed by the future market in making your loans and in financing your cotton transactions. That is the only great abuse that has grown up and that has been corrected to some extent.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURTNESS. Have you noticed any benefits to the producer from the passage of that act?

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, yes; there has been considerable benefit.

Mr. BURTNESS. What are some of the benefits?
Mr. STEVENSON. The market has not been nearly as bad as it used to be, especially since it has been limited to 10 grades. At first the Secretary of Agriculture prescribed 20 grades, and there used to be a difference of 5 cents between the future market and the spot market. Now, the only thing we seem to need is legislation which would enable the buyer to specify in what grades 50 per cent of the product shall be de-livered and let the seller specify the other 50 per cent. Then you have got the buyer and the seller on an equality.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman know that in the transactions of the grain market that is all provided for, because of the fact that the grades are specified on contracts as to one and two?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am not familiar with the grain market and I am not attempting to interfere with this bill that they have brought in here; I am speaking to the claim that cotton is not embraced in it. I want to show you that cotton is already provided for, and it needs only one additional amend-ment, and then it will be about as well provided for as you can

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forms amendmen will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate boards of trade as "contract markets" when, and only when, such boards of trade comply with the following conditions and requirements:

(a) When located at a terminal market upon which cash grain is sold in sufficient volumes and under such conditions as fairly to reflect the general value of the grain and the difference in value between the various grades of grain.

(b) When the government thereof provides for the making and filing of a record and reports, in accordance with the rules and regulations and in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into by the board or the members thereof, either in cash grain or for future delivery, and which record shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of the United States Department of Agriculture and United States Department of Justice, and such record shall be in permanent form and shall show the parties to all such contracts, any assignments or transfers of such contract, the parties to and terms of such assignments, and the manner in which said contract is fulfilled, discharged, or terminated.

(c) When the government thereof prevents the dissemination, by the board or any member thereof, of fake, misleading, or insecurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of commodities.

(d) When the government thereof provides for the prevention of the manipulation of prices by the dealers or operators upon such board, including a reasonable limitation upon the total quantity of grain of the same kind covered by contracts unfulfilled or unsettled at any one time by or on behalf of the same person commonly called "open trades" in speculative transactions.

(e) When the government thereof admits to membership thereof and all privileges thereon on such boards of trade lawfully formed and c

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan: Page 5, line 4, at the end of line 4 add the following: "Provided, That any such association or its representatives applying for admission for membership on the board of trade be able to and shall comply with and conform to all rules and regulations of such board if the same have the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which this subdivision (e) relates has occasioned a good deal of controversy in some parts of the country. It is a matter that has been before the Committee on Agriculture for some time. It appears that representatives of cooperative associations have applied for membership in boards of trade and have been refused, because, as charged by boards of trade, the associations have not been able and thus far have not been willing to conform to the rules of the boards. If it were necessary I might mention some of the rules of the boards of trade that have been invoked against the cooperative organizations, but I think it is not necessary. These cooperative associations feel that injustice has been done them, and in some of the States effort has been made to have laws enacted to compel the admission of the associations to membership and to all rights and privileges of members on boards of trade. Effort has been made to have a law passed by the Congress compelling the boards of trade to admit representatives of the cooperative associations. I think members of the Committee on Agriculture who have given attention to the matter believe as I believe, that these associations ought to be admitted if they are able and willing to comply with reasonable rules and regulations, but that if they can not so comply they ought not to be admitted. It will not do for an individual or an association to claim membership in a board of trade and be unable or unwilling to comply with reasonable rules and regulations. It is charged, and I guess it is commonly admitted, that some of these cooperative associations are not able to comply with the rules of some of the boards of trade, because the rules are unreasonable; that rules are made by the boards for the very purpose of excluding members or representatives of these local associations.

Now, inasmuch as the entire business of these boards of trade is to be under the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he will have authority to oversee and, if necessary, to demand changes of rules or regulations, I have thought that we might provide for the admission of the representatives of these cooperative associations if they are able to and if they shall during membership comply with and conform to regulations, and if we provide that these rules and regulations shall be reasonable and found to be so by the Secretary of Agriculture. I offer the amendment with that idea in mind. Everyone knows and will, I am sure, admit that a board of trade must have rules and regulations to which all members must conform, but they should be reasonable and at the same time fairly and honestly administered and applied to all members alike. bill before us, as it now stands, would compel the admission of any cooperative association which might apply, although it might not be able, might not be willing, to comply with proper and necessary conditions, and after admission it might fail or refuse to conform to rules and regulations.

Such a law would be ridiculous; my amendment is intended to provide for admission of such associations as are proper for and capable of membership, and for only such, letting the Secretary determine a controversy between an association and a board of trade.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield right there?
Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman will remember that during the hearings one of the main reasons given by boards of trade for not admitting members of these associations was that the representative of the association would let the members of his association participate in the profits by reason of being a member of the board.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; I spoke of the objections that were urged by the boards of trade, and that often the boards of trade would not permit representatives of the cooperative associations to become members. I did not mention the specific objections. The instance which the gentleman from Kentucky gives is one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Let me ask the gentleman, for information, if his amendment was adopted and they had a rule prohibiting them and the Secretary of Agriculture agreed that that was a valid reason, under your amendment they could not become members?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is true. But here is the Secretary of Agriculture being intrusted with authority to regulate and control boards of trade in every particular in most important respects. We are willing to trust him with all the intricacies of the organizations; he can put them out of business if he chooses. It seems to me that we ought to be willing to trust him to insist on reasonable rules and regulations so that cooperative organizations willing to do the fair thing can be protected. And I believe these organizations ought to be willing to trust him. That is why I have offered this amendment, and I believe it is proper and ought to be adopted.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Admission of cooperative societies to grain exchanges should be a matter of right and not of discretion. This question is important and arose as soon as cooperative societies were organized in the wheat-raising sections of the country. The bill, you will observe, authorizes the Secretary to permit these boards of trade to be designated contract markets "when the government thereof admits to membership thereof and all privileges thereon on such boards of trade lawfully formed and conducted cooperative associations of producers having adequate financial responsibility."

That is the only qualification that ought to be required. These boards of trade are organized so as to have absolute control of who shall be members, and as no one can buy or sell in the markets they maintain unless he is a member, or employs a member to act for him, they are in fact closed or private markets instead of open public markets. One of their rules forbids any member from dividing commissions, and this is construed to prohibit admission of cooperative societies, because it is contended they divide profits among members; that is to say, they pay a patronage dividend. My bill declared that all the organizations operating a regular place of business or trading room for members and in which members buy, sell, or exchange grain for themselves or others in interstate or foreign commerce in accordance with the interstate grain standards act are declared public markets, subject to the provisions of the act, and that all rules excluding cooperative societies from membership by reason of the fact that they are organized on cooperative principles shall be void.

The gentleman from Kansas did me the honor in his opening speech on this bill to give me the credit for originating this provision. He said: "There is another paragraph in this bill that I want to mention. That is the provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to compel the grain exchanges to permit the cooperative associations to have membership on the grain exchanges. That was not my idea originally. STEENERSON and several other Members of Congress had bills pending covering that proposition, and several of the States have passed laws covering that proposition, and when we had before our committee the present Secretary of Agricultureand he is a man who has given this subject great study for many years-it was his opinion that while passing this legislation we should incorporate that feature in it. I want to say that our committee had by unanimous vote voted out at the last session of Congress Mr. Steenerson's bill covering that point, and it was his opinion that we should take it; so we have stolen Mr. Steenerson's bill and put it in here in one short paragraph."

While I appreciate the generosity of my friend in giving me so much credit, I protest I never claimed any proprietary right in the idea, and the gentleman and the committee had a perfect right to include the provision in the bill. I had, in fact, asked the committee to do so if thereby it was thought the legislation I sought would be advanced. I am glad it is in the bill, but at the same time I hope the committee will report my bill and let it go on the calendar. My bill is much broader than the present measure and covers all grain exchanges, while this bill may cover only a part.

THE RELATION OF GRAIN GRADES TO COOPERATIVE MARKETING.

The importance of this matter can not be understood without bearing in mind the actual conditions under which grain, especially spring wheat, is marketed in the Northwestern States. Spring wheat under Federal grades is divided into two classes, namely, hard red spring and durum. The first class, however, is divided into three subclasses of six grades each. There are seven distinct requirements to grade No. 1.

They are, first, cool and sweet; second, test weight, 58 pounds per bushel; third, moisture, not more than 14 per cent; fourth, foreign material, not more than 1 per cent; fifth, damaged kernels, not more than 2 per cent; sixth, mixture of common white, white club, and durum wheat, not more than 5 per cent; and seventh, mixture of humpback wheat, not more than 5 per cent. The following are the requirements for all grades: The first four grades shall be cool and sweet. Test weight: 58 pounds for grade No. 1; 57 pounds for No. 2; 55 pounds for No. 3; 53 pounds for No. 4; 50 pounds for No. 5; sample grade is No. 6. Moisture: 14 per cent for No. 1; 14½ per cent for No. 2; 15 per cent for No. 3; 16 per cent for Nos. 4 and 5. Foreign material: Not more than 1 per cent for No. 1; 2 per cent for No. 2; 3 per cent for No. 3; 5 per cent for No. 4; and 7 per cent for No. 5. Other wheats, not more than 10 per cent for No. 1, which includes 5 per cent of humpback; not more than 5 per cent for No. 2; and damaged kernels, not more than 2 per cent for No. 1; 4 per cent for No. 2; 7 per cent for No. 3; 10 per cent for No. 4; and 15 per cent for No. 5. A sample may fulfill or exceed six requirements but fall a little short in one, and it is graded down. It may have 141 per cent moisture and grade No. 2, involving a loss according to present prices of 8 cents per bushel, or $80 on a 1,000-bushel car lot. For this onehalf per cent excess water in this car, equal to 5 bushels in weight, which at $1.50 per bushel would amount to $7.50, there is a loss of $80 to the seller, or a penalty of $72.50, which goes to the buyer. The next car is 14 per cent moisture and No. 1, and mixed with the first car both become No. 1, and so on to the end of the list.

These grades have been the cause of much dissatisfaction since they were adopted five years ago, and we have had hearings almost every year before the Secretary in order to get them simplified and liberalized, but without avail.

At a recent hearing before the Secretary many farmers and grain-inspection officials of the three States testified in favor of changes. I should like to quote all of this, but can here only give part of the testimony of A. J. McGovern, chief deputy grain inspector of North Dakota, as follows:

Mr. McGovern. I just want to take up one phase of the matter, and the other gentlemen from North Dakota will make a more extended explanation. I would like to show you the effect that the sales of wheat have upon the grades and the grades on the sales.

The Secretary. What line of business are you in?

"Mr. McGovern. I am the chief deputy grain inspector for North Dakota. I will just show you a sample of one dark northern spring wheat. The test weight is 50 pounds; it has one-half per cent of wild peas, which the Federal grades will carry. Take the April 20 market, the No. 1 dark northern; the average sale was $1.48 at the terminal market at Minneapolis. I show you a sample of No. 2 dark northern spring The test weight is 59 pounds; it contains 1 per cent wild peas. The average sale is $1.41, a loss of 7 cents per That loss is on account of having one-half per cent more of wild peas than the No. 1. I show you sample No. 3. No. 3 in the Federal grades will carry matter other than cereal grains a total of 2 per cent. I show you a sample of three dark northern spring wheat; test weight 59 pounds, contains 2 per cent wild peas. The average sale on the 20th of April was $1.22, or a loss of 26 cents per bushel compared with the No. 1 dark northern, on account of having 1½ per cent more of wild peas than the No. 1 dark northern. If you examine this wheat you will find that it is all choice and the same wheat. I show you a sample of No. 4 dark northern spring, test weight 59 pounds; contains 3 per cent of wild peas. The Federal grades will allow matter other than cereal grain a total of 3 per cent. The average sale on the 20th of April, the same date as the other sales, was $1.11 per bushel, or a loss of 37 cents to the raiser of this grain comparing it with the No. 1 dark northern, on account of having 21 per cent more of wild peas than the No. 1. I show you a sample of No. 5 dark northern spring wheat, with a test weight of 62 pounds, with 5 per cent of wild peas. The No. 5 of the Federal grade carries a total of 5 per cent of matter other than cereal grains. The average sale on that wheat on the 20th of April was $1.05 per bushel, a loss to the raiser of this grain of 43 cents per bushel, for the reason that it had 42 per cent more than the No. 1 dark northern. I show you a sample of the sample grade dark northern wheat that has a test weight of 62 pounds to the measured bushel that contains 51 per cent. The No. 5 of the Federal grades carries 5. This is one-half per cent more than the No. 5, and places it in sample.

"The average sale of this sample wheat on the 20th of April, 1921, was 96 cents, or a loss to the raiser of this grain of 52 cents per bushel simply because it had 5 per cent more of wild peas than the No. 1, or a difference of 9 cents per bushel between your sample grade that has 5 per cent and the sample which has 52. The man was penalized because it had a half per cent more, or if it went over 5, a quarter, it would go in as sample. Now, these peas are cleaned out. I speak of wild peas because we had samples that had peas in them. We have kingheads; that comes under the head of other materialpeas, kinghead, wild rose, and corn cockle. I thought I had some here to show you, but this can be readily cleaned out, and there are two ways to take care of this at the terminal market. That is, the mixer would take one car of that sample and he would take two or three cars of perhaps a lower grade. You see he has 62 pounds; he can bring that down to 59 pounds and be within the Federal grades. He has 4 pounds there to work on. He could mix that with two other cars, perhaps, of a lower grade; he could make that No. 1 by mixing and losing that pea.

"The Secretary. These can be separated by the ordinary fanning mill.

"Mr. McGovern. Well, I would not say by the ordinary fanning mill, but the mills have cleaning machines.

"The SECRETARY. Well, these could be separated by a good farm fanning mill.

"Mr. McGovern. Well, it can be separated in the mills, not by a fanning mill.

"The Secretary. I understood you to say it was easily separable.

"Mr. McGovern. The big mills have separating machines.

"The Secretary. What does it cost to separate it?
"Mr. McGovern. They charge out in our State two cents a bushel for cleaning the grain.
"The SECRETARY. The difference in prices you quoted there would make it very profitable to separate it. The farmers could unite and have a cleaning arrangement.

"Mr. McGovern. Well, the farmer is not equipped with the capacity to handle all this grain, not always. He has to ship out a great deal of this grain, but that is the way the Federal grades actually work out. Now, I am a believer. I believe that the United States grain standards act is all right, the law itself, but we have no use for the Federal grades as they are now established. I would like to have the rule made by the Federal Government so that that elevator out in the country could handle this grain. At the terminal markets they have everything there to do with, and have plenty of time. the farmer is thrashing his grain the elevators are very busy. They have usually in the farmers' elevator perhaps two men for a couple of months. The line elevators have one man. Now, they handle a great deal of grain. It is not an unusual thing for a farmers' elevator to take in from 25 to 30 loads a day, and he has to make a record of his grain, but the manager of the farmers' elevator or the country elevator has not the time to inspect this grain under the Federal rule. As far as that moisture content is concerned, I would say that we would not care much about the moisture placed at 15 or any other amount. We think that in the handling of grain if a man running an elevator could not tell whether grain is fit to bin or not, that it is not fit to run in an elevator, and that is the way the elevators are operating. It is all on judgment, without any instruments. They have not the time to test out the moisture. Well, the farmers of North Dakota are very dissatisfied with the grades. They are so much dissatisfied that they have always sent a representative to all of the meetings that have been held by the Secretary of Agriculture. They have been to Montana, Chicago, Washington, Minneapolis, and other places. We have a gentleman here who will speak before we get through, Mr. Hagen, who attended all of those meetings. As long as there are millers here I would like to make this statement that these Federal grades, in my opinion, were made for millers and by millers. Take that as you like. I thank you very much.

The Secretary. I do not think it is quite fair to allow that to go, Mr. McGovern. While I did not have anything to do with it, I have a great deal of faith in the integrity and purpose of the people in the department who have handled this subject in the past. They may have made mistakes, but I do not think your statement is fair."

There were 15 or 20 other witnesses representing the graininspection bureaus and representing actual farmers who all spoke to the same effect.

"Mr. Steenerson. I have attended most of these hearings from the very start, both before the Secretary of Agriculture and the man at the head of the Bureau of Markets, Mr. Brand, and others, and when these Federal grades were first proposed, the only justification that he offered was that he had submitted it to the grain trade and it was satisfactory to the grain trade throughout the United States. That is the record. I will furnish the hearing where you can read it yourself. I do not say that he wanted to be against the farmer, but he supposed the trade knew all about it. The theory of this bureau was that the only men that knew about this business were the millers and the scientific chemists they employed, and they formed these grades just exactly as Mr. McGovern has stated."

In my closing argument before the Secretary I said: "Mr. Secretary, I have attended nearly every hearing by the department except one or two in Minneapolis, some of them before the Secretary and some of them before the Bureau of Markets, ever since the year that these grades were established. I have come to the conclusion that, as Mr. Young has pointed out, that these grades are framed upon a system of penalties that are unfair to the producer. Take, for instance, the matter of moisture. Say 14 per cent makes No. 1, but if there is a half per cent over it is degraded No. 2. Now, say that it is 1 per cent, that would only be on a thousand-bushel car; it would only be 10 bushels, and at $1.50, which is the price now, it would be $15. Instead of that, according to my home paper—I have the clipping here—there would be a reduction in price of 8 cents between No. 1 and No. 2. That is $80. Because of this 15 per cent of water that is theoretically in there they penalize the man $80. And so it is with the wild peas here. If they can be separated, or if anybody had said yesterday that they actually damage the flour so that it is unsalable, or something of that kind, but so far as foreign material is concerned by degrading it you lose from 4 to 12 cents.

"Now, I just got this from my home paper in Crookston:

"I will say that I live in the Red River Valley of Minnesota, the greatest hard-wheat producing part of the United States, and I have myself been engaged in raising wheat in the Red River Valley for 40 years. That is, I have the farm. I have not done the farm work myself. I have been practicing law most of the time, but I have marketed wheat at the elevator and have shipped wheat to Minneapolis, and shipped it before there were any State grades. Originally the chamber of commerce graded the wheat, and the cry went up every year, just as it does now, against the Federal grades, and there was an agitation constantly; it was a part of the campaign; there was a constant agitation. When KNUTE NELSON became was a constant agitation. When KNUTE NELSON became governor he established the State inspection and State weighing system, and whatever has been hinted here by some of -I have lived right there and been in politics-I say to you that during the 20 years before these Federal grades came in the question of grain grades and inspection was taken out of politics. Now, then, I want to say another thing. Of course, I realize that men in matters of judgment are swayed by the point of view of their avocation. They are are swayed by the point of view of their avocation. They are prejudiced, so to speak, and it is perfectly proper for the Secretary or any one of these gentlemen opposing these changes to ask this question about whether we favor Federal standards, Federal grades. I want to tell the Secretary the origin of that. That was started in every hearing by the opponents of the farmers; that is, those that took the other side of the question—the millers and the grain men. all hinted or urged that the opposition was due to the theory that we were opposed to Federal inspection. Now, the history of that matter is this: There was some dissatisfaction in North Dakota and some in South Dakota about the State of Minnesota inspection. They seemed to think that we were regulating their affairs and the markets being there they started an agitation for Federal grades.

"The demand for Federal grades came from North Dakota, and Senator McCumber was the first man to introduce a bill. When it came to the Congress, of course, representing a farming constituency, if they were opposed to Federal grades I would have voted against it, but my best information was that most farmers throughout the United States and in my district favored Federal grades, so that the only opposition that came before committees of Congress was the opposition of the State of Minnesota grain inspection organization. The railroad and warehouse commission, through Mr. Jacobson, did come down here representing the State authorities opposing the legislation on the theory that we had for 20 years built up a successful and satisfactory system under the State laws and he was afraid that the Federal system might not be as good. Now, that is the truth of it, and when the Federal grades were established, Mr. Jacobson, like the rest of us, said: 'Well, although we thought that, if you can make the grades workable and practical we are not opposed to them on principle.' Mr. Jacobson is not a States rights man; he would be perfectly willing to have Federal grades, provided they were just and fair and operated justly. Now, when these questions are proposed to every man that comes up here, 'Are you in favor of Federal grain inspection?'—that question was, I think, brought up, and every Congressman from Minnesota voted for it. Everybody thought as long as they did not have it they wanted it. The idea was good. After they got it, it became very unpopular, and now, of course, if you ask a man 'Are you in favor of Federal grades,' he naturally says, 'Not the grades that we have now, but if we can get reasonable grades we would favor We are not here opposing the present grades or asking for a modification because we are against a Federal system of We are the originators; these three States are the originators; introduced the first bills 10, 12, 14, or 15 years ago to establish this system, so it is not fair to charge us with being prejudiced against these and therefore not fair judges of its Why, the theory of some department representatives that I talk with and some of the millers and elevator men seems to be that we would oppose any kind of Federal grades, because we are States rights people and want the States to have all this business themselves.

"Now, that is not true. We started out as favorable to this proposition as any human being could be; we were hungering for it; we were wishing for it. It was only when we got it and tried it on that we did not feel satisfied. So that this question about whether we favor States grades as a general principle really has not any bearing. We are all in favor; it is only the abuse that we object to.

"The Secretary. Now you have tried it, as you say, you all favored it to start with. Now you have tried it, do you still have the question of States rights? Do you still think that the Federal system of grading is preferable?

"Mr. Steenerson. If it could be made satisfactory; yes. And Congress was very careful in providing this system. not suppose that the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture under this law would be like the laws of the Medes and Persians, not to be changed, because they provided themselves that they should be changed, but they should not be changed without 90 days notice after the change has been decided on. Of course, we have had that demonstrated. We have had 90 days notice and six months. The first notice they would consider changes, and then notice of what little change had been made according to law, of course. Now, I do not want to go into the details. Other men have done that better than I can do, but I want to say one word about the matter that came up when Mr. Shanahan testified. Mr. McGovern, as a closing remark, said that the grades appeared to be as if they were made for millers and by millers, and I made the remark then that that is just exactly what the representatives of the department had defended the grades on, that they were satisfactory to the grain trade. Now, I do not mean to charge the representatives of the department or any official with any dishonesty or any corruption or anything of that kind, but that is their point of view. They were undoubtedly doing what they thought was right, but they were wrong. Now, to prove that they were wrong it is a great satisfaction to me that Mr. Shanahan was on the stand and appeared here, because I never knew before who the real author of these grain grades and standards was.

"Now we know; we don't have to suspect or guess from what Mr. Brand stated before the committee that they were made after consultation with the grain trade; we know that he (Mr. Shanahan) made them; he says so. There was no question about it. These are his words: 'I represent specifically There was no the New York State Millers' Association at this time. Further than that, I represent about 35 years' of close study of this subject and hard work to bring about Federal standard grades. Four of those years were spent here in the Department of Agriculture in charge of that department of the work, and I believe that I can say that the principles upon which these grades were built are mostly mine.' He was an officer of this department and he says, and I have no doubt he believed, he made the grades in the interest of all; he was honest; he intended to do it, but he had a different point of view, and, of course, at that time there had been no dispute as to the grades because the grades did not exist. The dispute as to these grades and their application in practice has existed only since the grades were made. Now, what is more natural than the fact that the father of these grades should have that pride and paternal joy which is natural to everybody to defend them, right or wrong. is human nature, and, of course, he does it. And now, how did He has stated here before the Secretary and he defend them? before this audience that he made these grades in the interest of everybody, to be fair to everybody, and when somebody mentions the millers, he says: 'The miller is the farmer's best friend. as far as wheat is concerned.' I have it right down here in my pencil notes; his interest is the same as the farmer's. Now, a man with that point of view, who was justified in taking that point of view at that time because this dispute had not arisen; he had that idea as everybody else; they don't come in touch with the farmers; a man comes in there and all the atmosphere that surrounds the man that inspects and handles the grain is the point of view of the grain trade. Therefore, they believe and he believed that the interest of the farmer and the grain men and the millers were the same. Since that time it has developed that there is a division of opinion about these grades between the farmer and the department and the millers.

Now, then, who is right and who is entitled to consideration? Is it the farmer or is it the miller in this matter? Now, let us The Secretary was kind enough to show me, at my request, the telegrams that came in here yesterday from Portland, Oreg., asking that this hearing on red spring wheat, hard spring wheat, should be postponed until they could be here. Why, they would not know hard spring wheat from barley over there. They raise soft wheat.

"Mr. McMillan. They raise hard wheat.
"Mr. Steenerson. That should be taken figuratively. I hope these gentlemen will bear with me; I do not want to be interrupted. I was simply saying that as a hyperbole. They do not know anything about red spring; they are not interested in it, yet they telegraph the Secretary to postpone the hearing until they can be here, and upon what ground? In the interest of the farmer? They are the philanthropists that will lift the farmer out of the slough of depression by having these grades fixed as they don't want them, and that is the tone of the tele-I know; I have received in the last two or three years letters from almost every one of these men on this matter of coming before Congress. I know their names—all of these mills that are in those telegrams. If you will read those telegrams you will notice that not one of them is appealing to the Secretary to protect the miller. Oh, no! They want protection for the farmer, and they say they know it will injure the farmer. And the question recurs here, Who are the best judges of the farmer's interest—the millers, the speculators and the elevator men, or the farmers themselves? Now, the farmers may not know so very much, but here in this case they are fortified by some pretty intelligent men. Here is Mr. Potter, the president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau; he is a farmer, recognized all over the United States as an authority on farming. Isn't it fair to say that he is prepared to know the interest of the farmer when he is running an elevator and trying to operate under these grades? Here is Mr. Bendixen, a farmer for 25 or 30 years. Does he know enough to know his own interest? Here is Senator Sageng, an actual farmer who has handled wheat, sold wheat, and shipped wheat, and been in the senate for a great many years.

"Is not he a pretty fair judge of the best interest of the Would he be here if he thought this was a fictitious issue and that the miller really was right or that it was for the benefit of the farmer to have these grades modified? And here are the professors; here is a professor in an agricultural college who is in charge of inspection in North Dakota; here is Dr. LADD, the United States Senator, who was here yesterday, and in harmony with the proposition that we advocate. And aside from all these, I will not mention the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota, and the two States, because, as I have said, there seems to be an idea among some that they are prejudiced because they want more power in the States, but here are the Congressmen. Does anybody suppose that Mr. Young, of North Dakota, does not really believe what he says? He has had experience in farming and legislated for farmers for 25 years. Now, does he know enough to know their interest, or does he not? Is the miller and the elevator man and the speculator, whether from Buffalo or anywhere else, a better judge of what is practically best for the farmer? Now, it seems to me that is the question here. We have been before the Secretary of Agriculture so many times; we have had it up before the committees of Congress on the proposition to take away the grain-grading authority from the Secretary's office and leave it in another body. I have heard another theory advanced that the farmers do not know their own interest. Now, it is not going to hurt them any to have these modifications. If so, let them show it up wherein they are going to lose money; but do not let them come in here and represent the farmer and say he is going to lose money, because the farmer is here represented so nobody can question; and it is not a sporadic case, it is a continuous struggle for nearly four years to have these grades modified. And it seems to me that in view of the new matters that have been brought up here; in view of the fact that the man that made these grades thought that at the time that when he served the miller he also served the farmer, and he was the dominating spirit in the making of these grades; in view of that fact, which was probably true at that time, true because this division had not occurred.

"Now, then, since this division of opinion between the farmers and the millers has occurred, we appeal to the authorities in behalf of the farmer, because he is the producer; God knows he has a hard time now; the price has been cut in two and everything that he buys almost is as dear as ever. The farmers feel kindly toward this administration. all speak of the wonderful speech that President Harding made at the Minnesota State Fair; you have heard it mentioned here; and they feel heartened by the friendly attitude of this administration, and the expressions of the Secretary of Agriculture in their behalf, and they feel confident that if the authorities can only see these things in the right light that they will have relief. It can not be possible that the millers understand this better than the farmers themselves. And it is also brought out here that the farmer, the small farmer, a great number of the majority, has to sell his wheat at the local elevator, the same as I now do, although I formerly shipped in carload lots. Those little farmers are the victims of these arbitrary grades, because it has been brought out here that the man who ships in carloads, if he has a good honest representative of the board of trade, he can sell his wheat by sample and it does not make much difference what the grades are. You can sell No. 3 at No. 1 price provided you have the right judgment. I have spent a great many days on the board of trade in Minneapolis and watched these samples and these buyers. They know how to test grain; they can test it to the finest point. They can have a reinspection chemically and everything, but the farmer can not do that. So that the buyers in the terminal markets can protect themselves, but the farmer, as has been explained here, is at the mercy of the elevator man and these grades and rules operating against him. They operate in favor of the man that does not need help because he can help himself. We, therefore, with confidence look forth to a change in these grades. Now, it may be suggested, I think it has been suggested, that the department has already passed on this, but if you will read Mr. Secretary Meredith's decision, if it may be so called, it is based on the theory that the time has not yet arrived to consider these changes. He says that they had only been tested under war-time conditions. The hearing was held in 1920; the grain corporation, the Federal Government, was still in the grain business in 1920. The 1919 crop was handled in part by the United States Grain Corporation.

"The raw crop did not come in until late in the summer, so that when that hearing was held it was true that the Federal Government was in the grain business and that it was not normal conditions. Therefore Secretary Meredith suggests that the time to take this up is after these grades have had a test in normal times. They have now had a year's test under normal times, and here are the men who have told you the results. So it is not res adjudicata of that question."

THE VALUE OF THE SAMPLE MARKET.

These are the grievances and injustices resulting from the enforcement of the Federal grades for spring wheat. Whether they could be entirely remedied by the proposed changes may well be doubted. But one thing seems clear, that the best way out of the difficulty is to enable the farmer to reach the sample market at the terminal, where grades are not controlling, but where the article can be sold on its intrinsic merit and value.

What has the controversy as to grades to do with the question of cooperative farm organizations to seats on the grain exchanges? That is what we are now to point out.

A great deal has been said about the value of standardization of farm products, so they can be sold unsight and unseen, on the brand or mark. That may be very good in some lines, but it has its limitations, especially when it comes to spring wheat. You can have a box of apples run through a sieve and have them uniform in size and of one variety, and you send them to market and they can not be manipulated. The same thing may be said about potatoes and many other products which can be safely sold and bought upon the grade or standard. Not so with wheat, Anyone who will thoughtfully consider what I have said will readily see that the grade often fails to indicate the real milling value of the wheat, and that the grade can be changed by simply running a few cars of different grades through an elevator and mixing them, or the moisture may be reduced or foreign material taken out. That is the reason why in the great milling centers and terminal markets of Minneapolis and Duluth wheat, although inspected and graded as the cars come in, is largely sold by sample on its milling value and at a premium over the original grade price. A car of No. 2 by reason of one-half per cent excess rye may be 60 pounds test weight, and so dry it only contains 12 per cent moisture, and a miller who may have many cars without rye admixture can well afford to pay 10 cents per bushel premium over the grade price.

Millions and millions of bushels more of No. 1 wheat are taken out of the terminal elevators annually than are put in. It goes in as one grade and comes out as another. A good deal is said about the wheat exported, and that it fixes the price here.

The exporter gives just what the grade requires and no more. If he buys 60-pound wheat with 10 per cent moisture, he either sells it to the local miller or mixes it down so it just fills the requirements and ships. But the wheat grower at the country elevator gets no premium.

The farmers' cooperative organizations, or a federation of such organizations, desire to have their own men on these exchanges whose sole business it shall be to do the best possible for them in the market. By so doing millions of dollars would be saved to the wheat growers annually. When we find that under the present conditions a farmer who has 1,000 bushels of wheat of the best quality is penalized 43 cents, or $430, because there is 5 per cent of wild peas mixed in it, which at the terminal can be taken out at an expense of $20, or 2 cents per bushel, and then sold for feed, we can easily understand the enormous profits to the middleman who buys on the grade price. The way to avoid this enormous loss to the farmer is to reach the sample market at the terminals, and this can only be successfully done through farmers' cooperative associations by men of their own choosing. It is a most important section and the most practical section there is in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. STEENERSON. The Secretary of Agriculture, having refused to modify the grades, I have introduced the following

A bill (H. R. 6379) prescribing standards and grades for spring wheat.

Be it enacted, etc., That the grain standards and grades for spring wheat heretofore fixed, established, and promulgated by the Secretary of Agriculture under authority of the United States Grain Standards Act and now in force, are hereby changed and modified so that that part of the regulations relating to spring wheat shall read as follows:

CLASS 1.

HARD RED SPRING.

This class shall include all varieties of hard red spring wheat and may include not more than 10 per cent of other wheat or wheats.

CLASS 2.

DURUM.

This class shall include all varieties of durum wheat and may include not more than 10 per cent of other wheat or wheats. This class shall be divided into four subclasses, as follows:

AMBER DURUM.

This subclass shall include wheat of the class durum consisting of 75 per cent or more of hard and vitreous kernels of amber color. This subclass shall not include more than 10 per cent of wheat of the variety red durum.

This subclass shall include wheat of the class durum consisting of less than 75 per cent of hard and vitreous kernels of amber color. This subclass shall not include more than 10 per cent of wheat of the variety red durum.

RED DURUM.

This subclass shall include wheat of the class durum consisting of more than 10 per cent of the variety red durum.

DURUM MIXED.

This subclass shall contain 80 per cent durum, of which not more than 10 per cent shall be red durum, and 20 per cent of wheat of other classes.

GRADE REQUIREMENTS.

HARD RED SPRING WHEAT.

This class shall be divided into five grades, as follows: Grade 1-

(a) Shall be cool and sweet:

(b) Shall test weight of 57 pounds per bushel;

May contain not more than 15 per cent moisture;

(c) May contain not more than 15 per cent moisture;
(d) May contain not more than 2 per cent of rye, and all foreign material, except rye, shall be considered dockage;
(e) May contain not more than 2 per cent of damaged kernels, which may include not more than one-tenth of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels;
(f) May contain not more than 5 per cent of wheat other than band red arrives which 5 per cent of wheat other than 15 per cent of wheat than 21 per cent of common white and white club wheat, and 5 per cent of durum and winter wheat, either singly or in any combination; and

(g) May contain not more than 5 per cent of wheat of the variety humpback. Grade 2

(a) Shall be cool and sweet;

(b) Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 55 pounds; May contain not more than 15 per cent of moisture;

(d) May contain not more than 3 per cent of rye, and all foreign material, except rye, shall be considered dockage;
(e) May contain not more than 4 per cent of damaged kernels, which may include not more than two-tenths of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels; and

(f) May contain not more than 6 per cent of wheat other than hard red spring, which 6 per cent may include not more than 3 per cent of common white and club wheat and 6 per cent of durum and winter wheat, either singly or in any combination.

Grade 3-

(a) Shall be cool and sweet;

(b) Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 53 pounds;

(c) May contain not more than 15 per cent of moisture; (d) May contain not more than 4 per cent of rye, and all foreign material, except rye, shall be considered dockage;

(e) May contain not more than 7 per cent of damaged kernels, which may include not more than five-tenths of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels:

(f) May contain not more than 8 per cent of wheat other than hard red spring, which 8 per cent may include not more than 4 per cent of common white and club wheat, and 8 per cent of durum and winter wheat, either singly or in any combination.

Grade 4-

(a) Shall be cool and sweet;

(b) Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 50 pounds:

(c) May contain not more than 16 per cent of moisture;

(d) May contain not more than 5 per cent of rye, and all foreign material, except rye, shall be considered dockage;(e) May contain not more than 10 per cent of wheat other than hard red spring, which 10 per cent may include not more than 5 per cent of common white and club wheat and 10 per cent of durum and winter wheat, either singly or in any combination.

SAMPLE.

Shall be wheat which does not come within the requirements of any of the grades from No. 1 to No. 4, inclusive, or which has any commercially objectionable foreign odor except of smut, garlic, or wild onions, or is very sour, or is heating, hot, infested with live weevils or other insects injurious to stored grain, or is otherwise of distinctly low quality, or contains small, inseparable stones or cinders.

DURUM WHEAT.

Grades for durum wheat: The subclasses amber durum, durum, red durum, and durum mixed shall be divided into five grades for each subclass, as follows:

Grade 1-

Shall be cool and sweet;

Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 60 pounds;

May centain not more than 15 per cent of moisture:

(d) May contain not more than 2 per cent of rye, and all foreign material, except rye, shall be considered dockage;

(e) May contain not more than 2 per cent of damaged kernels, which may include not more than one-tenth of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels;

(f) May contain not more than 5 per cent of wheat other than durum, which 5 per cent may include not more than 21 per cent of common white and white club wheat and 5 per cent of winter wheat, either singly or in any combination; and

(g) May contain not more than 5 per cent of wheat of the variety red durum in either No. 1 amber durum or No. 1 durum,

(a) Shall be cool and sweet;

(b) Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 58 pounds;

May contain not more than 15 per cent of moisture;

(d) May contain not more than 3 per cent of rye, and all foreign material except rye shall be considered dockage;

(e) May contain not more than 4 per cent of damaged kernels, which may include not more than two-tenths of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels; and

(f) May contain not more than 6 per cent of wheat other than hard red spring, which 5 per cent may include not more I than durum, which 6 per cent may include not more than 3 per cent of common white and club wheat and 6 per cent of winter wheat, either singly or in any combination.

Grade 3-

(a) Shall be cool and sweet;

(b) Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 56 pounds;

(c) May contain not more than 15 per cent of moisture; (d) May contain not more than 4 per cent of rye, and all foreign material except rye shall be considered dockage;

(e) May contain not more than 7 per cent of damaged kernels, which may include not more than five-tenths of 1 per cent of heat-damaged kernels;

(f) May contain not more than 8 per cent of wheat other than durum, which 8 per cent may include not more than 4 per cent of common white and club wheat, and 8 per cent of winter wheat, either singly or in any combination.

Grade 4-

(a) Shall be cool and sweet;

(b) Shall have a test weight per bushel of at least 54 pounds;

(c) May contain not more than 16 per cent of moisture; (d) May contain not more than 5 per cent of rye, and all foreign material, except rye, shall be considered dockage;

(e) May contain not more than 10 per cent of wheat other than durum, which 10 per cent may include not more than 5 per cent of common white and club wheat and 10 per cent winter wheat, either singly or in any combination.

Shall be wheat of the subclass amber durum, durum, red durum, or durum mixed, respectively, which does not come within the requirements of any of the grades from No. 1 to No. 4, inclusive, or which has any commercially objectionable foreign odor except of smut, garlic, or wild onions, or is very sour, or is heating, hot, infested with live weevils or other insects injurious to stored grain, or is otherwise of distinctly low quality, or contains small, inseparable stones or cinders.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force 90 days after its passage.

Mr. TINCHER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Reserving the right to object, how many will that provide for?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment and section be closed in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object,

I would like to know what that includes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it includes section 5 and the pending amendment and all amendments to the pending amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It should not include all the amendments, because I have an amendment I want to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I object. Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the section and amendments to the amendment close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman a question. This is the most important section of the bill, and we do not know what amendments are going to be offered, and will not the chairman let the debate run on a little before he makes the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to close debate on the section, the pending amendment, and all amendments thereto in 25 minutes, not excluding the time allowed the gentleman from Minnesota.

there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That will not prevent my offering a perfecting amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not; but there will be no debate on the amendment after 30 minutes. Is there objection? Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, many years ago I read a book which was sent to me in the interest of a propaganda at that time and which was entitled "Government and Company, Limited." That appellation, it seems to me, might well be used Secretary of Agriculture?

in describing the organization which is provided by this section 5—"Government and Company, Limited." The Government is going to take charge of the boards of trade and similar exchanges in the United States. The Secretary of Agriculture is vested with absolute irrevocable power to determine what boards of trade shall be permitted to operate without paying the tax of 20 cents per bushel. More than that, he is given the discretion of determining what amount of this so-called gambling shall be permitted upon a board of trade. Read paragraph (d). In it the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to designate boards of trade as "contract markets" under certain conditions, one of them being, as stated in paragraph (d):

(d) When the government thereof provides for the prevention of the manipulation of prices by the dealers or operators upon such board, including a reasonable limitation upon the total quantity of grain of the same kind covered by contracts unfulfilled or unsettled at any one time by or on behalf of the same person commonly called "open trades" in speculative transcripers. speculative transactions.

It seems to me that the gentlemen who framed this bill, after having reached the conclusion that there is no way under which they could provide by legislation for the control of speculation on a board of trade, concluded they would pass that question on to the Secretary of Agriculture, and now the Secretary of Agriculture gets carte blanche authority to determine what is reasonable speculation upon the total quantity of grain in open trades" in speculative transactions.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman understand the language the way I understand it? As I understand it, it prescribes that the governing board-that, at least, is what is meant—the governing board of the exchange shall provide rules and regulations against manipulation on the market.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly; and the Secretary of Agriculture is to determine whether they have adopted proper rules.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is as I understand it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For a brief question,

Mr. JONES of Texas. I just want to tell the gentleman that as to the provision limiting the amount, the bill as originally drafted did not contain it, and it was put in there at the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture because he thought it would help him in controlling it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you will read the hearings you will find various members of the committee were afraid of limiting these transactions because they did not know what limit might be necessary to protect hedging in their home districts. Now,

Mr. Chairman-

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am going to lose all the time I have to discuss the bill if I yield further. It seems to me we have reached the point where we are going to put back the grain business in the country just exactly where it was under the Food Administration during the war. As a matter of fact, I think one of the most unfortunate results of the war was the continued tendency to maintain organizations which were necessarily established during the war, and where such organizations have been already disbanded to reestablish them in some sort The Secretary of Agriculture at present is a most estimable gentleman; I have no quarrel with him; but no business interests should be placed under the absolute domination and control of any member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States or of any other administrative officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired,
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. I have no quarrel with the gentleman from Minnesota when he says under certain regulations cooperative organizations ought to be permitted to become members of these exchanges. I agree with him entirely, but this paragraph, subdivision (e), page 5, provides that they must be admitted without any regulations what-The organization is not allowed to fix any restriction upon them, and so far as I can see the effect will necessarily be the dissolution of the boards of trade, because a board of trade could not have as its members a portion thereof who were not subject to any regulations whatever. Now, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan is not a farreaching one nor a rigid one. It proposes that they shall be admitted and put under such reasonable regulations as the Secretary of War may fix for that purpose.

Surely, gentlemen could not expect that they should be admitted without any regulations, and if we are not to prescribe the regulations in the bill-and I think we will all agree that we could not very well do that-then who better may determine under what regulations they should be admitted than the

Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Bland], I have been uncertain about the effect of this bill, and I am somewhat fearful that it may do more harm than good. If the paragraph under consideration is allowed to stand in its present form, it could not be beneficial. But the fears I have in mind are founded upon theory rather than fact, because the effect of provisions similar to those in this bill have never been tested. I may be entirely wrong. I hope I am. In any event, I think it will be worth while to pass the bill in order that we may settle this question of whether the dealings that are sought to be prohibited by it are harmful. Some of these questions ought to be settled, and the only way to settle them is by trial. The effect it will have will be, on the whole, for the benefit of the farmer and prevent the further depression of agricultural products.

Now, I am not impressed by what the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson] said with reference to the experience with cotton. If I know anything about cotton prices, and I think I do somewhat, although I do not live in a cotton region, there is no agricultural commodity that has depreciated faster in the last year or two, or gone down more in proportion to prewar prices, than cotton has. If the provisions that were enacted, in reference to dealings in cotton exchanges, have had no effectand they are similar to this-then this bill will have no effect. But, Mr. Chairman, I think this experiment ought to be tried. I think it is worth while to try it, and for that reason I shall support the bill if its provisions are reasonable with reference to exchanges. But it seems to me that to leave subdivision (e) as it stands would have the effect to make the carrying on of these exchanges, the great grain exchanges in Chicago and elsewhere, absolutely impossible, because there would be certain members subject to no regulations whatever.

Surely we do not want to do that. The closing of the board of trade in Chicago even for a few weeks would inflict an enormous loss on the farmer.

There are other provisions in this bill that I do not approve, but I believe they will be changed before it becomes a law. I have great confidence in the combined wisdom of the Agricultural Committees of the House and Senate and believe that I can in the end rely on their judgment better than my own.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to pro-pound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. First, is the vote to be taken on this pending amendment and then other amendments to be offered, or all of them voted on at the same time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the amendments may be considered as pending.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have a separate amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Kelly of Pennsylvania: Page 4, line 20, after he word "a," strike out the word "reasonable," and after the word 'limitation" add "to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill as a step in the right direction, but I regret that it does not go further.

The first lines of this subsection (d) express a most worthy purpose, that of preventing the manipulation of prices.

the real evil to be cured and it should be met effectively.

The wiping out of such transactions as "puts" and "calls" in bucket shops will not meet the situation and the real gamblers on the grain exchanges know that very well. They have spent money and waged campaigns in the past to end the competition of these petty gamblers.

"Puts" and "calls" are simply bets on the price of wheat or other grain. If wheat closes to-day at 90 cents the buyer of the "put" offers to bet $5 that the next day the market will drop to a price under 89½ cents, so that he will be able to "put" the wheat at that price and make a profit. The "call" is just the opposite. The buyer bets that wheat will go to a point above 90½ cents so that he may "call" the wheat and sell at a profit at that price.

Such bucket-shop operations do not fix the price of wheat, They are simply bets on the results of the work of manipulators who do influence the price.

In 1914 the Rules Committee of this House held extensive hearings into bills relating to grain exchanges. The president of the Chicago Board of Trade and members of the board appeared as witnesses. It was declared by experienced men that the change of a single cent per bushel of grain through manipulation changed values in this country $50,000,000. It was shown that on some occasions prices varied 17 cents a bushel in a single day.

That meant vast changes in values and resulting injury to many persons. The manipulators profited but the producer and the consumer suffered.

At that hearing S. H. Greeley, a former member of the Chicago Board of Trade, testified as follows:

I know what future trading is. I have been in it. I was brought up in it; bred in it from youth. No man on the board of trade that knows anything will deny that in the wheat pit alone, on an average, every day of the year the total amount of the purchases, plus the total amount of the sales in the futures, will at least total 25,000,000 a day, from 9.30 in the morning to 1.15 in the afternoon.

Remember also that less than 25,000,000 bushels of wheat came to Chicago in a year, and here is a trade of 25,000,000 in one forenoon. He goes on to say:

There are those who have boasted that they have traded in 20,000,000 a day, a single firm. Think of it. I myself, although I have been a little dealer, what you might almost term an "insignificant trader," have many a day traded 500,000 bushels to 1,000,000 bushels, and never thought much about it myself at the time.

That is the kind of trading which works injury. of distributing foodstuffs in this country is vastly too high, even with the elimination of all parasites who never handle a bushel of wheat or other grain, but who levy toll just the same.

It seems to me that we should make a determined effort to put all gamblers in foodstuffs out of business. It is not a question of Government interfering with legitimate business; it is a question of abolishing evil practices which work great injury to the American public. It is a governmental duty to prevent any set of men, through a series of chalk marks on a blackboard in a gambling grain exchange, from fixing the prices which a farmer must take for his grain and a consumer pay for his bread.

I seek in my amendment to provide that a definite limitation shall be put upon these deals in imaginary grain, and that the Secretary of Agriculture shall fix that limitation. it said that the Secretary will have that power under the bill, but I doubt it, as a practical proposition.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Let me finish the statement. I believe this bill gives him the power to approve a limitation suggested by the grain exchange, but if he finds later that it is not the proper limitation and the question goes to court it may be declared that he has no further jurisdiction under the provisions of section 6 of the bill. I want it specifically stated that the Secretary shall have power to say that any person or firm or association shall not go above a proper limitation in the handling of these deals in futures and that the use of "dummies" shall not completely nullify the intent of this bill. Now I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under your amendment you propose to have the supervision carried on by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under this bill, before he designates a central market, they fix the limitation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He can designate a grain exchange as a central market upon a limitation set by the grain exchange. That is their action. I would like to see it the affirmative duty of the Secretary to fix the limitation and then change it as conditions warrant. I believe there is a possibility that he will have no such power under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing more legitimate than grain raising, and there should be nothing more illegitimate than grain gambling. Let the law of supply and demand fix the price of foodstuffs, not the law or whim of great speculators who never touch a bushel of grain.

This bill will help to turn the searchlight of publicity upon the whole business and will help in the final remedy of this great evil. I believe, however, that it might be strengthened by giving the representative of the United States Government the right to absolutely control all trading in futures, and I hope the committee will agree to my amendment.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Ketcham: Page 5, at the end of the section, after the last word of the amendment offered by Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan, add: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of such cooperative association to permit the division of its profits according to its own by-laws."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. KETCHAM. I offer it as a perfecting amendment,

I desire, Mr. Chairman, just to make this statement, that I agree entirely with my colleague [Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan] as to the desirability of his amendment with reference to requiring cooperative organizations, if they gain a place on the boards of trade, to conform to the rules and regulations. But I think it is a common understanding that one of the great points of division between them is at this very point, which is vital to every cooperative association—in fact, the very life of it—the method by which its profits shall be divided. Therefore, with this proviso, it seems to me this amendment which has been proposed by my colleague is very desirable, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know what study the gentleman has given to the subject, but for my part I think the amendment is very good.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Yes. Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the effect of his amendment is not to limit the liability of the association for its membership?

Mr. KETCHAM. No. It is in accordance with all their other rules, except for this proviso.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman is entirely unnecessary. It is simply a direction in one respect to the Secretary of Agriculture as to what his findings shall be respecting the rules and regulations of the boards of trade. In my judgment he ought to be left free to exercise his judgment. I agree with the gentleman that one rule of the exchange invoked against farm organizations is unreasonable, in that those organizations are charged with splitting commissions, which is forbidden to all members of exchanges, and the rule says a division of profits at the end of the year or at the end of a season is equivalent to a splitting of commissions. But if you are going to take up this thing by suggestions put into this law to manacle the Secretary and tie his hands by one means and another, it seems to me it would be unwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan

has expired.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Ketcham]. It seems to me that if this matter is to be left to the Secretary of Agriculture it would be very unwise and very undesirable, as the other gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLaughlin] has just stated, to tie his hands and to prescribe in advance that this method or that method should be pursued.

Now, in reference to the contention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly] as to subdivision (d), it will be noted that the first paragraph of section 5 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate boards of trade as contract markets when, and only when, such boards of trade comply with certain conditions, Subdivision (d) is one of the conditions, and that condition is that the governing boards of the exchanges shall provide by their rules for the prevention of manipulation of prices by dealers on such boards, including, as the language of the bill is drawn, "a reasonable limitation upon the total quantity of grain of the same kind," and so forth.

Now, anyone reading the hearings will appreciate how perplexing a problem that question of a limitation on the trade presented, not only to the committee but also to the Secretary of Agriculture, who favored the measure. I think it was the disposition of a good many to fix in the bill a specific limitation, but the objection was made that a limitation made in one season of the year would not fit another season in the year, and so it was thought best by the committee and by the Secretary to leave it to the boards, subject to regulation by the Secretary.

But the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

Kelly] strikes out the word "reasonable." The gentleman from Pennsylvania would not only go to the length of this bill, and confer upon the Secretary this power, which is quite questionable, but he would also strike from the provision regarding it any question of reasonableness. He might fix it at 1 bushel or he might fix it at 1,000,000 bushels. It seems to me, if you are going to legislate, we should at least have a limitation of reasonableness upon the action of the Secretary.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.
Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman as to the word "rensonableness," but the gentleman has just suggested that there will be a difference in the different times of the year. Suppose the Secretary goes to court and the court says he has no jurisdiction over that. What shall we do?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I do not think the court will take such a position, but I do think that the people of this country will take such a position as to the passage of an act conferring such power on the Secretary without any limitation as to reasonableness. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota

has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, as to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan I have no likes or dislikes concerning it. I think the present Secretary of Agriculture has a very definite idea as to whether these cooperative associations should have the right to join an exchange; and whether the amendment prevails or not, I do not think, if this bill becomes a law, they will be barred from the exchanges because of the way they contemplate spending their profits.

As to the matter suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly], it was considered very carefully by us. It is quite an important proposition in this bill, and we decided that to give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to require the exchanges to have rules and regulations, involving, if necessary, the placing of a limitation upon certain classes of trade, would be going far enough, and while I feel that the trade and the country and everyone will be perfectly safe so long as the present occupant of the position of Secretary of Agriculture continues in his place-a man familiar with the subject, as the present Secretary of Agriculture is-yet I do not for the present want to go to the extent of saying to any man who is Secretary of Agriculture, "You shall have the power to fix the limita-" and amend this bill in that respect. I would prefer to have the section passed as it is, so that we can have an opportunity to try the law in this form.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Do any of these boards of trade now have regulations fixing the amount?

Mr. TINCHER. No; but the boards of trade with whose members we have talked about it rather encourage the proposition that it would not be bad to have the limitation. say to the gentleman that the men representing the legitimate trade, who appeared before our committee representing various boards of trade, are, I believe, in good faith opposed to the manipulator of the market, and that sometimes the absence of a limit affords an opportunity to manipulate the market.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What limit would the gentleman suggest with reference to the Board of Trade of Chicago?

Mr. TINCHER. Different members suggested different amounts

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Ketcham] to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLaughlin].

Mr. KETCHAM. May I request, Mr. Chairman, that both amendments be read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan: Page 5, line 4, at the end of the line add the following: "Provided, That any such association or its representative applying for admission to membership on a board of trade be able to and shall comply with and conform to all rules and regulations of such board if the same have the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture."

Also the following:

Amendment by Mr. Ketcham to the amendment offered by Mr. McLaughlin of Michigan: At the end of the amendment add: "Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of such cooperative association to prevent the division of its profits according to its own by-laws."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLaughlin],

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KINCHELOE) there were-ayes 35, noes 27.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a perfecting amendment: On page 3, line 24, after the word "when," strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu the charman. The Chark will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Punnell: Page 3, line 24, strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "said board."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with that is that we are not talking about any board, so when you speak of "said board" it does not mean anything.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What does "thereof" refer to?

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the previous agreement, I ask unanimous consent that we may have five minutes in which to discuss this. I think it is very important that we change the phraseology, so that there will be no question about what it means,

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the agreement to limit debate, he have five minutes in which to discuss the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. ASWELL, I object,
The CHAIRMAN, Objection is made. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have two minutes in which to explain it. Of course, this limit of debate should not have been fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is speaking out of order now. The question is on the request that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Purnell] have two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no particular pride of authorship in the words. Some one has suggested that the words "the governing board" be used. Certainly it is ambiguous to say "the government thereof." Everybody knows that refers to boards of trade. I merely want to correct the verbiage so that it will have some semblance of sense. [Laughter.] I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and instead of that to strike out, after the word "when," the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the go: rning board thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. PURNELL: Page 3, line 24, strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the governing board thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PURNELL) there were—ayes 33, noes 12.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, line 13, after the word "when," I move to strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof "the governing board thereof."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the committee sat down and spent half a day on the verbiage of this bill, and I think as far as that is concerned it ought to be satisfactory to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention to the fact that debate on this section has been closed. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL1.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Purnell) there were—ayes 33, noes 18.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.
On page 4, line 18, after the word "when," to strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the governing board thereof."

Mr. JONES of Texas. I offer an amendment to the amendment to strike out from the amendment the word "board" and insert "authority," so that it will read "when the governing insert "authority," authority thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr.

Purnell) there were—ayes 36, noes 14.
Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 5, line 1, after the word "when," strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the governing board thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Purnell: On page 5, line 1, after the word "when," strike out the words "the government thereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the governing board thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 3, after the word "trade," insert "any duly authorized executive officer of any."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota) there were 30 ayes and 10 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. That any board of trade desiring to be designated a "contract market" shall make application to the Secretary of Agriculture for such designation and accompany the same with a showing that it complies with the above conditions, and with a sufficient assurance that it will continue to comply with the above requirements. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to suspend for a period not to exceed six months or to revoke the designation of any board of trade as a "contract market" upon a showing that such board of trade has falled or is falling to comply with the above requirements or is not enforcing its rules of government made a condition of its designation as set forth in section 5. Such suspension or revocation shall only be after a notice to the officers of the board of trade affected and upon a hearing: Provided, That such suspension or revocation shall be final and conclusive unless within 15 days after such suspension or revocation by the Secretary of Agriculture such board of trade appeals to the circuit ourt of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the order of the Secretary of Agriculture be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such board of trade will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the board of trade, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the Secretary of Agriculture and shall be expedited in every way. Such a court may affirm or set aside

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, Baltimore is one of the greatest grain-export ports in the country. I am just in receipt of a telegram from the Baltimore Chamber of Commerce, signed by A. W. Mears, vice president. Yesterday when this bill was taken up by this committee I, knowing little about the bill or about the grain business, telegraphed to the board of trade in Baltimore, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, the Export Board of Trade, and two other grain organizations. I was advised last night by telephone that the chamber of commerce was the organization that knew about the grain-export business. That chamber of commerce held a special meeting this morning on the floor of the chamber, as I am advised, and I have received the following expression of their opinion which will govern my action on this bill.

Mr. DICKINSON. Have they read the bill?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I sent him two copies.
Mr. DICKINSON. Does the gentleman know how large the export of wheat is out of the United States?

Mr. HILL. No; I do not know.

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the gentleman know that it is less than 10 per cent-

Mr. HILL. I do not know anything about it.

The telegram is as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., May 12, 1921.

Hon. John Philip Hill,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:
We strongly protest against passage of bill II. R. 5676. Bill as framed would restrict free and open market and cause serious hardship to grain dealers and producers. To finance and handle movement economically banks and merchants must have open-market protection, Governmental control of marketing farm products is impracticable and unnecessary. unnecessary.

BALTIMORE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. A. W. MEARS, Vice President.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Did the gentleman make any effort to consult the producers in the State of Maryland to ascertain their attitude on the bill?

Mr. HILL. I may say that there is very little grain production in Baltimore City, and I represent Baltimore City.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Did he communicate with the large number of consumers in Baltimore?

Mr. HILL. I did not, except through the board of trade. Mr. HILL. I did not, except through the board of trade. Mr. TINCHER. How many directors were present at this meeting of the chamber of commerce?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. One or two gentlemen who appeared before your committee were present, and whose names appear in the record. As I understand, this was the regular meeting of the board of trade this morning.

Mr. PURNELL. Will the gentleman point out the specific objection that he has to this bill?

Mr. HILL. I consider it an unwarranted interference with private enterprise.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Knowing how the gentleman is situated and the constituents he represents, does not the gentleman think that the reading of the telegram ought to be incontrovertible proof and justification for the rest of us, who represent consumers and producers, to vote for the bill?

Mr. HILL. No; I do not think that is necessarily true. The fact that some one might object to rye because it is sometimes made into a certain intoxicating beverage is no reason why rye is not good chicken feed. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6. line 17, after the word "the," strike out "commission" and sert "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to oppose the amendment, but I desire recognition on it. I am not like the gentleman from Baltimore in some respects. I am in favor of this bill, but it strikes me that the section we are now considering is liable to very successful legal assault. I do not know whether there has been any decision or not, but the Secretary of Agriculture is here created as a court to try and determine the rights of the board of trade on complaint made to the Secretary of Agriculture. If he makes a decision adverse to the board of trade then the board of trade is given authority to appeal to the circuit court of appeals, which emphasizes the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture is being constituted a trial court to try a legal matter. And when it goes to the court of appeals the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make up a transcript, without any provision for corrections, if there are any differences between the Secretary of Agriculture and the board of trade. Then it provides that the appeal is on that transcript and on nothing else, and the court is to affirm or reverse or modify as it may see fit on the record made by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Kansas is a good lawyer, and I suppose he has looked up the precedents. But it strikes me that he has left this wide open to attack by any board of trade that goes into the courts on the ground that they have given judicial powers to an executive officer not otherwise clothed with the powers of a court.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.
Mr. KINCHELOE. If I am not mistaken, if the gentleman will examine the cotton future bill, and the Volstead bill we passed the other day, incorporating farm organizations, he will find that the procedure is the same.

Mr. STEVENSON. No; the Volstead bill provided that if the Secretary of Agriculture has passed on the matter there is an appeal to the Federal court, but in the Federal court it is passed upon de novo.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And in this provision for this hearing before the Secretary of Agriculture there is no provision for compulsory attendance of witnesses.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not find any.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Since it must be tried on the transcript it would not be due process of law under the Con-

Mr. STEVENSON. There are many things which have been held to be due process of law, and while I will follow the gentleman, I think, on that, I am satisfied I am right that where you constitute a man, a court, to try a case, hear the testimony, provide that he and he alone can make up the transcript that goes to the court of appeals and provide what shall be an appeal from him to the court, it is purely a technical legal matter, and on the transcript he makes up it must be considered, I am satisfied that you are going to find that will be constituting an executive officer a judicial officer with very broad powers, and I am inclined to think the committee had better proceed slowly. I want to see the bill pass in such form that it will be right, although I do not propose to offer an amendment

The United States Constitution provides that the executive, legislative, and judicial departments shall be forever kept separate.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, the only thing I desire to submitted for review are clearly legal, and suggest is the word "commission" was used by an oversight if left as it is, a trial de novo to the court.

and it is clear to any member of the committee that the words should be "Secretary of Agriculture."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What commission; what is that meant to refer to?

Mr. TINCHER. It was inadvertently used.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the contention of the gentleman from South Carolina, I think under the proposition of law his contention would be good; but it is not affected by this procedure. When it goes to the court the proposition that the court has got to decide is whether or not the Secretary of Agriculture has exceeded the authority given by this act, and therefore they can not act intelligently upon the entire evidence except on the evidence upon which the Secretary of Agriculture acted h'mself.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think there is any prohibition of the authority that we give the Secretary of Agriculture by this law. I am sure we are not violating any constitutional or legal prohibition.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The fact that the court will use the evidence that somebody else acted upon does not make it due process of law.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no. Fifteen years ago I quit worrying about due process of law, and the courts, the gentleman will notice, have gradually gotten out of that. I know it is a nice thing to worry about due process of law, but there is no reason why Congress should not give the Secretary of Agriculture all the power that we are giving in this bill. There is nothing in the Constitution or any reason why the court should not decide whether he had exceeded that authority, and there is not any reason why Congress should not point out the procedure that the court would follow in arriving at that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is not that the customary procedure when you appeal from one court to another? Is not that the customary procedure between final tribunals when you appeal from a lower to a higher court?

Mr. TINCHER. I think from the question asked that the gentleman comes from a section where the practice of law is on the old theory. If the gentleman will come out where they really practice law in recent years, he will find that they have abandoned all that sort of thing.

Mr. STEVENSON. What I wanted to ask the gentleman is if it is not the exercise of judicial power in this instance?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, in line 18, strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture" and insert the word "his."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Evans: Page 6, line 21, after the word "unsupported," amend by striking out the word "the" and, in line 22, strike out the words "weight of the."

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to take from the reviewing court the power to pass on the sufficiency of the evidence, the purpose being to give the Secretary of Agriculture the same force in his findings that is given to the finding of a jury. Now, therefore, it is, as was suggested by one of the members of the committee, the privilege of the court to pass only upon the legal questions involved. I think this should be done, because the act itself is administrative. It is not a legal question as to the sufficiency of the evidence, and the Secretary's findings ought to be conclusive as to the facts passed upon, unless there is no evidence in the

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Certainly.
Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it the purpose of the gentleman to perfect the law so as to make the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture as absolutely binding and irrevocable as possible?

Mr. EVANS. My purpose in offering this amendment is to carry out the thought that is in the act itself, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall pass upon these questions. He is an administrative officer. His function is administrative, and the Secretary should have all the power to decide as to the truthfulness of the testimony where he has seen the witnesses. It is to give his findings exactly the same force as the findings of a jury would have.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In view of the position of the gentleman, would it not be better, I submit, to strike out all this reference of review to the court of appeals?

Mr. EVANS. No; because the questions which are to be submitted for review are clearly legal, and this would make it,

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I know; but you are robbing the Secretary of Agriculture of some power that he might get.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman think that we have the right to limit the power of the Federal courts in the exercise of this function?

Mr. EVANS. The Federal court in this instance is having the power given to it to pass upon an administrative question, Mr. STAFFORD, Will the gentleman permit me further?

Mr. EVANS. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. The Federal courts to-day have that authority without reference to any legislative enactment.

Mr. EVANS. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Every order of the Post Office Department is subject to review by a Federal court as to whether or not it is within their power to

Mr. EVANS. As to whether a fact exists, but not to control administrative function.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Evans] is correct, if I understand his proposition. As he says, any order that is contemplated will be a mere administrative order. The general rule is that a court reviewing an administrative order sustains it unless there is one of three things found, namely, that it represents an unconstitutional exercise of authority or that it exceeds the limits of the statute or that it is arbitrary in the sense that it is entirely unsupported by evidence. That is illustrated by reference to an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Supreme Court has said time and time again that if the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is an administrative tribunal, passes an order, that order must be held good by the court unless it is beyond the constitutional or statutory power of the commission or unless it is arbitrary, as, for example, entirely without evidence to sustain it.

Now, it seems to be quite undesirable to provide that a court shall determine what is the weight of the evidence when it has had no opportunity to hear the witnesses and no such opportunity to scrutinize the evidence first hand, as was had by the Secretary of Agriculture. The case of the Interstate Commerce Commission is simply illustrative of the whole range of administrative proceedings in which administrative orders are treated by the courts in the manner I have indicated, unless there is some requirement of a statute that calls for a different treatment. and it seems to me there is no good reason why we should in this instance make an exception to the general rule.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course the illustration of the gentleman from Virginia was a case where there was a collateral attack of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in that case, of course, the court is limited as he indicates. But if there is an appeal, that is a direct attack and the jurisdiction enlarges. The question has been raised here as to whether or not due process is afforded. Of course, it is not due process if the hearings before the Secretary of Agriculture takes away a property right of these people without compulsory attendance of witnesses or without a judicial tribunal. Now, when it is provided that it limits the court of appeals to the evidence in the case, even where it did not have due process of law, in my opinion that does not cure it,

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not think there can be an appeal in a strict sense from the Secretary to a court. Whatever the language of the bill, an appeal only lies from one court to another. However, the language of this provision does not describe an appellate proceeding; it provides a review by the court upon an original petition being filed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia

has expired.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I notice section 6 of the bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to suspend for a period not exceeding six months or to revoke the designation of any board of trade as a "contract " and so forth. In other words, he can not suspend the designation of a board of trade for a period exceeding six months, but he can revoke the designation as a "contract market" for an indefinite time or absolutely. Then the bill pro-vides that the suspension or revocation shall be final unless the board of trade perfects an appeal within 15 days. The result is going to be that a board of trade will have to perfect an appeal in every case. Otherwise the suspension or the revocation will be final. And then if the board of trade perfects an appeal it will not amount to anything, because the suspension can not be longer than for six months anyway. So we have the rather ridiculous situation of compelling a board of trade to perfect an appeal in every case of suspension, even though it may know and admit that the suspension was entirely right and proper. It seems to me that the committee has undertaken to do something here which they are not accomplishing by the language they have used in this section of the bill.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think the language is subject to any such criticism. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to suspend for a period not exceeding six months, or to revoke the designation of any board of trade as a contract market. Now, then, such suspension shall be after notice to officers, and so forth. If they do not want to stand for the six months' suspension, they can appeal from it; and if they do not do it, it stands for six months. If it is revoked and they do not appeal, their designation is revoked.

Mr. DENISON. Here is what it amounts to: A board of trade must appeal within 15 days or the suspension becomes permanent, and if it does appeal, the six months will probably expire before the appeal can be determined. So they are compelled in every case to appeal to the court of appeals, and if the court of appeals should sustain the Secretary of Agriculture, the six months would probably have expired before the decision would be handed down. You are compelling them to go to an expense that will not accomplish anything in the long run.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no. If they do not object to suspension, they do not have to appeal.

Mr. DENISON. But they either have to go to that expense or the suspension becomes permanent.

Mr. TINCHER. What would the gentleman advocate? Mr. DENISON. I want to say to the committee that I think the suggestions made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SAN-DERS] are very serious objections to this bill, and if there is a vulnerable place in it, it is in this provision we are discussing. I doubt very much whether you are giving due process of law, and I think if this provision is ever tested in the courts it will be found unreasonable and unjust, and, for that reason, illegal.

Mr. TINCHER. I am frank to say to the gentleman that I do not understand him. He says that the provision gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to suspend for a period of six months, and then says that that order shall remain in force—giving the other man the right to appeal from it. That order shall remain in force unless he does appeal, and it shall remain in force even if he does appeal, unless a temporary order of some court shall set it aside.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is already an amendment pending. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Evans].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask a question, if I may, of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was it the matured opinion of the committee that no relief, no remedy, should be given to an applicant for designation as a "contract market," so that if the Secretary of Agriculture refuses an application of a board of trade to be designated as a contract market such board of trade has no right of appeal anywhere? There is no method provided by which it might go to a court of appeals to find out whether the proceedings have been regular.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, you can not take away from it by any law its right to have its day in court. But any board of trade that does not want to be designated as a contract market under the liberal terms of this bill ought not to have a place where it could trade.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But suppose the Secretary of Agriculture arbitrarily refuses to designate or recognize a board of

Mr. TINCHER. Everybody knows that such a board would be entitled to have its day in court, whether this bill provided the procedure for it or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Where would it have its right to its day

Mr. TINCHER. This bill does not give the Secretary the right of mandamus or anything like that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate. by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, and had appointed Mr.

PENBOSE, Mr. McCumber, Mr. Smoot, Mr. Simmons, and Mr. WILLIAMS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 76.

Senate resolution 76.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. William H. Frankhauser, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now adjourn.

FUTURE TRADING.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the tax provided for herein shall be paid by the seller, and such tax shall be collected either by the affixing of stamps or by such other method as may have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury by regulations, and such regulations shall be published at such times and in such manner as shall be determined by the Secretary

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I move a formal amendment, Mr. Chairman, in order to say a word about the merits of this bill. I have had an opportunity to-day to study it, and also to study the cotton futures act, which is entirely different. It does not make contracts for cotton futures illegal but simply regulates them wherever made.

The bill now under consideration, unless a man actually has the grain, makes all contracts for future delivery illegal and subject to a prohibitory tax, unless such contracts are made by or through a member of a board of trade which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market," and this bill therefore throws the monopoly of all such dealings and of all such contracts into such board of trade.

The bill then goes on in section 5 to say that no such board of trade shall so be designated as a contract market unless it be located at a terminal market upon which cash grain is sold in sufficient volumes." Such great grain markets are well known—Chicago, New York, Kansas City, and a very few others. The brokers in those markets are by this bill given an absolute monopoly of all contracts, whether hedging or otherwise, for the sale of grain for future delivery. This monopoly is a new thing, and these markets are to be regulated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

This is a new departure in the legislation of the United States and in the legislation of any State-to provide that the monopoly of this whole class of business shall be given to the brokers of a few great terminal grain markets. Those brokers already wield enough power. The principle of this bill would be no stronger if it provided that all sales of any goods in the United States should be subject to tax unless they were made in markets established by the United States and supervised and controlled by some United States Secretary. This bill creates a centraliza-tion of power in the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to give a tremendous monopoly to his agents and the brokers, governors, and managers of these great boards of trade. I can not stand for this as an independent American citizen, and I am therefore forced to vote against this bill in spite of the good objects sought by its promoters. [Applause,] The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture may make such investigations as he may deem necessary to ascertain the facts regarding the operations of future exchanges and may publish from time to time, in his discretion, the results of such investigation and such parts of reports made to him under this act, and such statistical information gathered therefrom, as he may deem of interest to the public.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know, gentlemen, that anything that I may say about this will make any difference one way or another. I have a very high regard for the present Secretary of Agriculture. I think he is a very superior man. But I have observed in my service here that whenever a man of any political party is placed in charge of an executive department, immediately it seems to be his effort or his desire to keep alive as many functions or bureaus as he can in his particular department, and to add to them from time to time in the number of clerks and employees in that particular de-

I would respectfully suggest to the gentlemen who are the proponents of this bill—a bill that I expect to vote for in spite of its many frailties-I would respectfully suggest that it ought to be understood by the Secretary of Agriculture that he is not expected to build up, under the authority of this section of the bill, an immense establishment that will entail an immense expense on the already overburdened people of the United States. This section gives the Secretary of Agriculture almost unlimited power as to what employees he shall have, what information he shall gather, or what he shall publish from time to time; and I dare say if this bill becomes a law, within the life of the present Congress you gentlemen and I will find that we shall have on the pay roll hundreds, or perhaps thou-sands, of additional employees that will be an additional burden upon the Federal Treasury.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.
Mr. LAYTON. In section 12 there is no limitation at all upon the expenditure of money by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I see no limitation anywhere.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I should like to have the opinion of the gentleman as to the meaning of the words beginning in line 13 and may publish from time to time, in his discretion, the results of such investigation and such parts of reports made to him under this act and such statistical information gathered therefrom as he may deem of interest to the public.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. He can issue a publication or a number of publications or books. He can also issue from time to time such statistical information gathered therefrom as he may deem of interest to the public.

Which means everything.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman will recall that during the war we had about 32 departments or bureaus that were issuing bulletins. Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Congress has been trying to cut that out,

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We who have been here during the war Congress and since have seen this thing go on and multiply and multiply, and, gentlemen, it ought to be stopped. We ought to have it understood here and now, and the Secretary of Agriculture ought to understand, that we are not setting up a great expensive department. I think it well enough to say this in advance.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think it will be true or that it will be understood that we are setting up an expensive department. I want to say that this bill is calculated to afford relief to people who have been asking for relief in the way of a law for 30 years, and the Secretary of Agriculture has not estimated that the administration of this law will cost very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 9. That any person who shall fail to evidence any such contract by a memorandum in writing, or to keep the record, or make a report, or who shall fail to pay the tax, all as provided in sections 4 and 5 hereof, shall pay in addition to the tax a penalty equal to 50 per cent of the tax levied against him under this act and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the cost of prosecution.

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and farmers-everyone here apparently claims to be for the farmer-I have listened to this discussion and studied this bill to some extent. From what I have heard I am satisfied that if passed it will be prolific of business to the lawyers of the country while they ascertain what section 3 means, and also sections 4 and 5. Each section will result in plenty of lawsuits. If the bill is ever held to be legal by the courts, the question is what effect will it have upon the farmer, the man for whom we are undertaking to legislate, if we are to judge by the expressions that have been made here upon the floor.

In the first place, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham], it is going to add to the cost of government. But, more than this, it is also going to add to the cost of handling grain and selling grain, by compelling the dealers in grain on boards of trade to keep an immense lot of records and employ a number of employees to audit them.

In that way it will compel them to have a greater degree of profits in order to pay the increased overhead in the conduct of their business, and thus greater charges will be placed upon the farmer's grain.

If hedging be necessary in the grain business-and that seems to be the consensus of opinion here-then why curb hedging? Why undertake to hamper it with all these regulations and centralizations of power in the hands of some one in the executive department of the Government? On the other hand, if hedging be unlawful, illegal, or immoral, then and in that event we should prohibit it. Let us make it a criminal offense or else tax it out of existence. But the consensus of opinion seems to be that hedging is necessary in the grain trade. That being true, why hamper and curtail it by a law or by orders issued by the Secretary of Agriculture? We empower him to execute his orders and then vest in him the power of a court to decide the fate of his own rules and regulations, with only an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, if that can be legally done. Secretary is thus the legislative, judicial, and executive official. He is the judge and the jury. It seems to me that the whole thing is only so much camouflage, and that it will not help the farmer. I want to cite to this body the statement of a man whom I consider the best-posted farmer and cooperative dealer in the State of Nebraska. I refer to Mr. J. W. Shorthill, secretary of the Nebraska Farmers' Cooperative Grain and Live Stock Association. In a speech delivered in Omaha in February, 1920, to the grain and stock men of the State, speaking of futures, he said:

But you must not expect your wheat market to be greatly improved by any legislation that Congress may pass on "future trading" in grain, for which the correct term is "speculation." Should Congress regulate or curb or even prohibit "future trading" in grain, it would not increase the price of your wheat one penny. You would get less without it than you do with it.

He was talking to farmers and for farmers. Again he said: There are evils in the grain-marketing system we now have, and I am for the elimination of every one that can be eliminated. I am only trying to tell you that the elimination of future trading in grain is not in the best interests of the farmer. It is in the best interests of a few gigantic corporations with immense capital sufficient to buy and hold the surplus wheat of the country until it is needed. Were future trading eliminated the grain markets of this country would very soon be controlled by a very small combination of big financial interests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. JEFFERIS. I ask unanimous consent for one minute additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JEFFERIS. As was said here by the gentleman from New Jersey, I think it would be well for us to hesitate about this proposed bill, because I believe we will only add greater expense to the sale of the farmer's grain and will not secure for him any benefit. If such be the result, it will come back to haunt us some time. Though we may claim to be giving the farmer some legislation for his benefit, I fear it will only hinder the grain business and be a detriment to the farmer.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Cable: Page 7, line 20, after the word "section" insert the figure "3" and a comma.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is obvious to most of us that this bill is to prevent grain gambling. The chairman of the committee [Mr. TINCHER] has virtually admitted on the floor to-day that this is not a revenue measure. Now, if it is to prevent grain gambling, it should be construed as criminal sections of the law are always construed, and that is strictly. This bill refers to two alleged kinds of gambling; under section 3 puts, calls, offers, and the like, and under section 4 dealing in futures. In other words, it is claimed there are two specific crimes set forth here, but by section 9 this bill only makes it a crime to deal in futures; and my opinion is that those who deal in puts, calls, and the like, also, when they fail to pay the tax, ought to be subject to the same conditions. There ought to be no discrimination between those who operate under section 3 and those who operate under section 4. Construing section 9 as it is in this bill, if a man should engage in puts, calls, and the like and fail to pay the tax he is not subject to the provs ons of section 9, but if he deals in future deliveries he can be punished. For that reason I offer this amendment so that there should be no discrimination in favor of any of those wno gamble in grain.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 20, after the word "hereof" insert the following: "Or who shall fail to pay the tax required in section 3 hereof."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, my amendment seeks to do the very thing that the gentleman intends to do by his amendment, but if you read the language that precedes the word in line 10, following which he offers his amendment section," inserting "3," and the comma, you will find that the language applies to many things not in section 3, and his amendment to come in there would be wholly out of place. Following the word "hereof," in line 20, inserting the language offered in my amendment, would provide that those who fail to pay the tax provided in section 3 would be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to the penalty.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of saving time, I withdraw my amendment in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. TINCHER. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, there is no opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. What is the purpose of having the word "all" in line 20? It would be better pharaseology, it seems to me, to say "as provided." This seems rather awkward.

Mr. TINCHER. All means a good lot, and I think it is a good word. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "all."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 20, strike out the word "all,"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 19, page 7, strike out the expression "or who shall fail to pay the tax.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think when seetion 3 is so ambiguous that there will be considerable difficulty in determining who might come within the law, we ought not in this act to provide a penalty of imprisonment against the man who fails to pay the tax. We tax him 20 per cent, and that is a heavy penalty. In addition, on his failure to pay the tax, it may cost him a year's imprisonment or a fine of $10,000. I think that is entirely too drastic and it will force persons to come in under section 3 at their peril and determine what the law is and pay this tax.

Mr. TINCHER. I hope that amendment, Mr. Chairman, will not prevail. I am sorry that it was not possible for the gen-tleman to be a member of the Agricultural Committee and them to be a member of the Agricultural Committee and help frame this language to meet his entire satisfaction, but we think the bill is clear enough to be understood, and I do not want the penalties taken out of it because the language does not suit my distinguished friend.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

SANDERS of Indiana) there were 30 ayes and 61 noes.

So the amendment was rejected. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. I offer this pro forma in order to get the Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the distinguished chairman of this committee, our usually genial friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], gets out of humor and condemns each one when we offer suggestions concerning this bill, as was done when the gentleman from Indiana offered his amendment. The gentleman from Kansas gets up and chastises us because we offer suggestions and says he is sorry that we were not present in the committee to help frame this bill. There are lots who are sorry, I can assure my friend, for there are at least 100 men in this House who would be glad to be members of the Agricultural Committee, if they had the opportunity, and they would have been glad to have helped to frame the bill, and it is very probable that if they had been members of the committee they would have been present, just like my dis-tinguished friend from Kansas was, every time that there was a hearing. But the gentleman should not get mad because we get up here and offer suggestions. Suggestions should be offered to every bill that comes before the House, because this is the House of Representatives, composed of 435 Congressmen from 435 districts in the United States, and all the people of the United States have a right to be heard.

Mr. HERRICK. We are all members of the committee to-day, are we not?

Mr. BLANTON. We are, and my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK] ever since Congress met has been in his seat constantly every time the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has had legislation under investigation. He has offered some very pertinent amendments here. He offered the only amendment that large ever been offered in the House that brought the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming from his sanctum sanctorum to save embarrassment to the other side of the Capitol. I want to say that we should all emulate the example of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma by being in our places, and we have the right to be heard on all legislation.

THAT THERE I SHOW I WERE THAT

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas in regard to section 9, as to the penal clause about these books and making reports. As I understand the bill it is based on the taxing power. You tax all contracts and sales of every kind except—and then you make certain exceptions. Where do you get the authority to make it a penal offense if they do not keep certain books? Is not the penalty severe enough in paying the tax? What right have you to say that man in a legitimate board of trade commits a criminal offense when he does not keep certain books?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, the courts have held in sustaining the taxing authority, in enforcing the taxing power—I can not give the names of the cases to the gentleman now that provisions of this kind are proper. Take, for instance, the income tax law, or any other tax law which requires certain returns, certain records, certain statements to be made, and they can punish a man who fails to do that, whether he is liable to a tax or not. Under the taxing power they are required to report, and it is on that authority that this section is based.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Your requirement here only applies to those who are free of tax.

Mr. TINCHER. They must do that to be free of the tax. Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman that, in my judgment, here is the gist of this whole bill. Whenever you do not make these fellows keep their record of public transactions, and all of that, I would not give a snap for the bill. Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Texas is not inquiring as to that, but inquiring as to the authority.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is the same authority as under the income tax law, where they can say how they shall keep a set of books

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 10. That if any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill if it is a fact that under the theory upon which this bill is written and prepared the Federal Government could levy a tax against every barber shop, every drug store, every grocery store in the United States, gambling or no gambling? Upon the theory of the taxation of business can not the Government regulate every business?

Mr. TINCHER. It has been pretty clearly demonstrated in the last few years that the Government can levy a tax on most every business.

Mr. McARTHUR. And tax it out of business. That is all I wanted to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That no fine, imprisonment, or other penalty shall be enforced for any violation of this act occurring within 60 days after its passage.

Mr. DENISON and Mr. MASON rose.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mason] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MASON. Line 8, strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "ninety." I have signed a good many papers, and I always liked 90 days better than 60 days. [Laughter.] I do not think there ought to be any objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment,

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 8, strike out "sixty" and insert "ninety."

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Mason) there were—ayes 31, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise approprlated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike to delay the committee this late in the afternoon, but I want to express myself for two or three minutes. Mr. Chairman, it just happens that I have had considerable correspondence with my constituents with regard to this legislation and I have committed myself by saying that I will vote for the bill. If I had not committed myself in that manner, I doubt seriously whether I would vote for the bill because of very serious objections to it which have been brought out in the course of this debate. It is apparent that the bill is going to pass. Therefore if I should vote against it it would make no difference in the result, but might place me in the attitude of opposing the purpose sought to be accomplished. So I want to make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee and to the other members of the committee who will handle the bill in conference. My suggestion is this: When you get this bill before the Senate or in conference with Members of the Senate change that provision of the bill which confers judicial powers upon the Secretary of Agriculture and constitutes him a trial court from whose decision an appeal is allowed to the court of appeals, where the record can only be considered as the record of an inferior judicial tribunal. I do not believe we can properly go that far. I believe you had better provide for an appeal to the district court, where there shall be a trial de novo before there can be an appeal to the court of appeals.

I want to make this further suggestion. You had better strike out of the bill entirely that provision in section 9 which makes it a penitentiary offense to fail to pay the tax. Such a penalty for the mere failure to pay a tax is unreasonable, and the offense itself is so indefinite that the penalty would I think be not only unjust but unconstitutional. That is the point that was raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Sanders], and I think it is a sound objection to this bill.

Then there is another thing. This bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to suspend for any period not to exceed six months the designation of a board of trade as a "contract market." If the board does not appeal within 15 days the suspension becomes final; that is, permanent. If the board does appeal, the suspension can not be for longer than six months even if the board loses its appeal, or it may be for a less time if the appeal is won. In any event the board is compelled to appeal or its suspension is final. For if it appeals and loses, its suspension can not be for longer than six months. Such a law would in my opinion be unjust and unreasonable, and may be held invalid if it is ever tested in the courts.

I think section 3 is too uncertain and indefinite to be of much value as remedial legislation, and there are other provisions of the bill which make its validity quite doubtful, to my mind, and I want to suggest to the committee, with all good intentions, that when they get this bill in the Senate they eliminate some of these objectionable provisions if they expect the bill to stand the test of the courts.

I am in sympathy, Mr. Chairman, with the purpose of the I think gambling and unfair manipulation and speculation in farm products ought to be stopped by law, if it can be I believe it is impossible to prevent all speculation without doing a greater injury to legitimate transactions. But some forms of speculation and gambling on the grain markets are immoral and unfair and injurious to the farmers and ought to be stopped. This bill may not accomplish much, but it is, I hope, a move in the right direction. We are assured by the committee, who have given careful study to the subject, that the bill will not hurt any legitimate business. If I thought it would do so I would not support it. As it is, I will vote for it for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Stafford: Page S, line 20, after the word "elsewhere," strike out the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Within the amount of the appropriation made by law for such purpose."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is no objection to the amendment by the chairman of the com-SEC. 12. The Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency or political subdivision thereof, or mittee. The purpose of the amendment, if I may be permitted to say just a word, is so as not to grant unlimited authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to rent all kinds of quarters and to incur other expenses as provided in the phraseology of the bill before us. This places the limitation upon the Secretary according to the amount of money that may be voted after con-Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to do so.
Mr. WALSH. If your amendment is agreed to, there is no authorization for any appropriation to be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes. The Appropriations Committee can come in and authorize the amount of money for that purpose, Mr. TINCHER. Maybe I did not understand the amendment. I would like to have the section read as it would read if

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the section as it would read if amended.

The section as it would read if amended was read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, to meet the objection raised by my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], I ask unanimous consent to change my amendment, the language to be inserted after the word "appropriated" in line 21, so that the clause will read:

And there is hereby authorized to be appropriated within the amount of appropriation made by law for such purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification of the amendment?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not want to destroy the authoriza-

Mr. STAFFORD. It says "there is hereby authorized to be appropriated within the amount of appropriation made by law for such purpose."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman knows well that in authorizing money to be appropriated we have invariably employed the phraseology, when we authorize an appropriation, that it shall be out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. STAFFORD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has left that out.
Mr. STAFFORD. No; I have retained that language in my amendment The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford]. The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Madden, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5676, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments en grosse.

The amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the reading of the engrossed copy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the Record on the bill now under consideration

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PORTO RICO.

Mr. DAVILA. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record an article which I have here. But before making my request I want to say once more that the movement of independence in the island of Porto Rico has been greatly exaggerated in the United States; that the people who favor this ideal are very good material out of which to build up loyal American citizens; that we all truly appreciate the privileges of being citizens of this Nation; and that our loyalty to the national flag, without mental reservations, is at the same time the best evidence of our love of the people of Porto Rico. At all events, the issue of independence is really unfortunate, but the common sense and the patriotism of the Porto Ricans induce me to believe that this ideal will disappear from their minds in the not very distant future.

I indorse everything printed in this article except the views of the writer regarding the governorship.

I really believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Porto Rico have a right to elect their own governor, and I hope that the Congress of the United States will recognize this right at the proper time. [Applause.]

At present we have lost our fight. But we are good losers, and, although the gentleman appointed by the President for the governorship is not a native of the island, he is our fellow citizen and practically a Porto Rican, and I am sure that his administration will tend to strengthen the ties of friendship and brotherhood between the continentals and natives of Porto Rico. We cordially congratulate him on his appointment. He will surely have the cooperation of our people in the discharge of his official duties. We wish him a successful administration.

Now, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Congressional RECORD an article written by Dr. Albert Shaw, which contains very valuable information concerning Porto Rico which may be useful to the Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Porto Rico asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an article by Dr. Albert Shaw on Porto Rico. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the article referred to:

PORTO RICANS AS CITIZENS—SOME OBSERVATIONS REGARDING THEIR POLITICAL FUTURE.

[By Albert Shaw.]

Political Futures.

[By Albert Shaw.]

The Porto Ricans, though living under the American flag and loyal to it beyond a question, are now having very elaborate political discussions about their future. These arguments are not closely followed in the United States and are somewhat puzzling, even to puble men at Washington who are sympathetic and open-minded and who really desire to understand. The Porto Ricans themselves are aware that people in the United States read more about politics in Ireland and Canada—and at times more about affairs in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa—than about what is going on in an island which we annexed more than 20 years ago, and whose people are now American citizens just as truly as are the people of Massachusetts and Virginia.

Most readers in the United States are not aware that the Unionis Party, which has a very large majority in each of the chambers of the Porto Rico Legislature, swept the island in the election last November on a platform which included an "independence" plank. The opposing party, which bears the name Republican, was, apparenty, weakened rather than strengthened by a coalition which it formed with the Socialist Party for election purposes. The strong and capable men of Porto Rico are to be found in both parties, in so far as the future of the island is concerned, the Republicans are wholly in favor of accepting the connection with the United States as permanent. The leaders of both parties, as also their newspaper organs, are warm in their expressions of friendliness to the people of the United States and to the Government at Washington.

The Unionist leaders disavow all thought of securing an independence that should come with any sacrifice of good will on either part. The Porto Rican political spokesmen on, both sides are men of remarkable oratorical ability; and in an election campaign where they seek to gain a large popular following they express themselves more passionately in the discussion of a question like that of independence than when con almost complete.

About a month after this measure of 1917, known as the Jones Act, had given the people of Porto Rico their present full rights of American citizenship, our Government declared war against Germany. Through their representatives these new citizens did not hesitate to express their loyalty and to accept the responsibilities of the war period. The draft act was cheerfuly supported, and in a short time more than 15.000 young Porto Ricans were in Army camps. When the war was over about 25.000 Porto Ricans had been in uniform, largely under Porto Rican officers, and their training had excellent results in physical and mental development. Just now—April, 1921—we are told that the National Guard of Porto Rico stands at the head of the entire list of States and Territories in filling quotas assigned by the War Department.

The question of Porto Rico's future is indeed an important one from several standpoints. It is true that Porto Rico is not a very large place on the map of the world, but it is loved with intense devotion by its own people; and the fact that they are concerned about their political future is in every way creditable. Little countries, quite as much as big ones, have been swayed by a sense of their own dignity through many centuries of heroic history. It is well, therefore, to consider the Porto Rican question as of importance, first, for the Porto Ricans themselves. Second, it is desirable that the people of the continental United States should understand that Porto Rico is a valuable and worthy member of our political system, whose interests—as affecting our own—must be thoughtfully and wisely considered. In the third place, there are still larger aspects of Porto Rico's possible future that pertain to the entire Western Hemisphere and thus to the world at large.

HOW PORTO RICO IS PROGRESSING.

First, then, let us consider Porto Rico's future from the standpoint of her own people. We are not living in the millennium, and the world struggle for freedom from ignorance, poverty, and disease is a long way from ultimate triumph. That struggle is demanding political, industrial, and social reforms. There are cynics and pessimists who believe that communities are really worse, rather than better, for all our efforts to make democracy effective and to spread abroad the means of social improvement. But most healthy-minded people find it necessary to believe in human progress, and they are upon the whole encouraged by a study of the facts in the case. In considering human welfare at a given moment, in a given place, it is always necessary to compare that place with other places and to compare that given moment with previous periods. Thus there is a great deal of poverty and disease in Porto Rico, and there is widespread ignorance. On the other hand, there are abundant facts on record to show that the Porto Rican people are decidedly better off than they were 20 years ago. Moreover, there are agencies at work which give us reason to believe that there will be greater progress in the next two decades than in the two that are past. In many parts of the world one finds poverty that is more abject and ignorance far more invincible than in Porto Rico. These agencies for betterment should be given an increased momentum. They might transform Porto Rico by the year 1950.

In contrast with an overcrowded population of peasants who are ignorant and poor, one finds highly cultivated and prosperous Porto Ricans, with a steadily growing number of young men and women who are the products of the present school system and who are occupying places as teachers in the schools, as clerks and officials in public employment, and as leaders in professional life and business enterprises. As one turns from contemplation of the terrible distress of races and peoples in central and eastern Europe and in western Asia, it is an impressive t

That the people of Porto Rico should be so ill-advised as to think seriously of exchanging their present assets of external security and of internal freedom and order for adventures in foreign politics, whether in those of the Caribbean countries or those of the continents and the hemispheres, is not to be believed. Complete and unqualified independence "straight off the bat," with Uncle Sam disdained and defied, is surely not the aim of any responsible leaders of the dominant political party in Porto Rico, and it is, of course, emphatically repudiated by leaders of the minor parties.

EDUCATION AND LANGUAGE.

When we brought Porto Rico under the American flag the island was already densely populated. It is only about 100 miles long from east to west, with an average width from north to south of about 40 miles. Its population of nearly 900,000 20 years ago has now increased to about 1,300,000. The government of the island maintains two official languages and has a bureau of translation. Bills pending in the legislature are printed in Spanish and also in English. Until very lately an appointive executive council served as the upper branch of the legislature. The popular branch elected by the people was naturally made up of native Porto Ricans. The executive council was for a good many years composed principally of English-speaking Americans who had been appointed from Washington as heads of executive departments. Naturally, the house of representatives debated in Spanish and the executive council discussed measures in English.

The beginnings of the American régime were marked by a tremendous effort to create a public-school system and to found institutions for higher training. It was believed that it would be a great advantage to young Porto Ricans to learn English. Many hundreds of teachers from the United States were engaged in helping to establish the standards of common-school education throughout the island. At the present time a large majority of the teachers are native Porto Ricans, although several hundred teachers from the United States are still in service. These Porto Rican teachers, largely trained in the normal school, teach most of the subjects of instruction with English textbooks and with creditable oral English on the part of teachers and pupils. Caro is taken to instruct all pupils in the Spanish language.

Gradually, though not very rapidly, the island is throwing off the burden of illiteracy. It does not become less Porto Rican or less Spanish-American, but it shows signs of becoming more cosmopolitan, and its leaders are discovering the value of being able to read and speak two great languages, e

When the treaty with Spain was concluded at Paris in December, 1898, Spain had signed away her last vestige of authority in the Western Hemisphere. Cuba secured not only her independence from Spain but what, in the economic sense, was more valuable, namely, her deliverance from a huge burden of indebtedness which had been unjustly saddled upon her treasury as representing the cost to Spain of waging war against Cuban insurrectionists. Porto Rico had not been involved in insurrectionary wars, and had not, therefore, been required, like Cuba and the Philippines, to support the cost of the Spanish Empire's internal struggles.

If Porto Rico, like Cuba, had been waging a war of revolution for independence, with a de facto insular government, it is wholly probable that we should have established the Porto Ricans as a separate sovercignty under our protection. But Porto Rico had velcomed the American troops in the summer of 1898, and was doing well under the temporary military administration which we then set up. The easiest way to climinate Spain in the framing of the treaty at Paris was to transfer the sovereignty of Porto Rico to the United States, This was not then supposed to be conclusive, however, as to the permanent future of the island, and it was taken for granted by many people in the United States—perhaps by most of those who considered it at all—that after a period of kindly tutelage Porto Rico would become self-governing, retaining, however, some permanent connection with the United States for purposes of security and of commercial advantage.

control of the period of all the properties and of commercial advantage.

VALUE OF THE AMERICAN APPILIATION.

Under the Foraker Act our military government of the island was superseded by a civil government in the summer of the year 1900. The local Unionist Party was formed in that period, and it has always had an independence plank in its platforms. For hundreds of year the properties of the people of San Domingo, of Cuba, of Venezuela, of Colombia, of Mexico, and of Central America. They have been familiar with the history and politics of 8 or 10 Spanish-speaking political entitles, forming a ring around the Caribbean Sea.

It is not strange, therefore, that many of the Porto Ricans should think of the destiny of their island as associated with that of the other Spanish-speaking peoples of their general region. Some of them have had dreams of possible future confederations, in which Porto Ricans a permanent connection with the great continental Republic of the United States has seemed more arbitrary than natural—a connection justified perhaps by material advantages, but sadiy lacking in its appeal to sentiment. And it must not be forgotten that all peoples dream of a proud destiny for their country or their region, and are more casily influenced by sentiments of race, of language, and of locality than by the cold statistics of economic advantage.

But we are living in a period when economic considerations have vital bearings upon the happiness and welfare of communities, and it becomes worth while to consider whether all the just claims of local sentiment may not be met without the breaking up of large political and commercial combinations. In central and eastern Europe a number of peoples of more of centrol and control and eastern Europe a number of peoples of more of centrol and control and cast and cast and commercial combinations. In central and eastern Europe a number of peoples of more of centrol and control and cast and commercial as trade between New York and New Jersey. The production and commerce of the island have increased enormously under the American régime.

Complete independence would subject Porto Rico to the tariff barriers faced by the trade of other Latin-American States. Porto Rican sugar, tobacco, coconuts, grapefruit, and pineapples have as free a market in the United States as the sugar of Louisiana or the fruits of California and Florida, while they have the benefit—in the markets of New York and the Atlantic seaboard—of water freight rates that are lower than the rail rates from the citrus fruit districts of the continental United States.

States.

As for the officeholders, they are now Porto Ricans by a vast majority. The American educators who went to Porto Rico to establish and carry on a modern school system require no apologies. Doubtless some Porto Ricans were more highly cultured than some of these Yankee teachers, but the heads of the system, from Dr. Lindsay's time to that of Dr. Miller, have been not merely men of professional attainments but men of statesmanlike grasp and foresight. They have worked hand in hand with native Porto Ricans, and the school system to-day is a worthy testimonial to the ability of Americans and Porto Ricans to achieve fine results by united effort.

PRESENT ORGANS OF GOVERNMENT,

Nothing is more noteworthy in the system of Porto Rican government as now at work than the judiciary. At the head of the system of insular justice is the supreme court of five members. The chief justice is a venerable Spanish judge of long experience and great attainments. Of the four associate justices, two are Porto Ricans and two have come from the United States. This body is firm in the confidence and esteem of Porto Rica. Its members are men of great learning and of the highest probity. They are deeply versed in the civil law of the Latin-American countries, and also in the common law and the statutory codes of the United States and England.

Under the Jones Act (the organic act of 1917) the legislature in both branches is elected by universal male suffrage. Besides the senators and representatives chosen from districts, each house has several members elected at large by a system which results in giving minority parties some representation.

bers elected at large by a system which results in giving minority parties some representation.

At the head of the executive branch is the Governor of Porto Rico, appointed by the President of the United States, who has a wide range of authority and discretion. The commissioner of education and the attorney general are also appointed by the President at Washington. Heads of the four other principal executive departments (interior, finance, agriculture, health) are appointed by the governor. There are many lesser officials and members of official boards who are named by the governor. It has been the wise practice of the present governor, Hon. Arthur Yager, of Kentucky, to name for appointive offices residents of repute and ability, some of whom have come originally from the United States, but most of whom are native Porto Ricans.

Thus the policy at Washington as expressed in the Jones Act has been to increase greatly the powers of the Porto Rican voters. The legislature, which is now sitting, meets in regular session once in two years like nearly all of our State legislatures. Its most important duties are budgetary. Its tendency is to promote progress in education, health administration, road building, and so on, but its zeal for more schools, better roads, and sanitary reform is always tempered by the fact that it must raise the money to pay the bills.

Porto Rico has a local income tax dating from the war period, but the surfaxes are at very low rates as compared with those of our national income tax. As regards public finance, the Porto Ricans are in an extremely fortunate position. The island's outstanding indebtedness is only about $10,000,000. All of the revenues raised by Porto Rican taxation are applied to the island's own purposes and are subject to the disposal of the legislature. In addition to these local revenues the United States Government pays back to Porto Rica for its own uses all the sums collected by our customhouse officers at the island's ports on goods from foreign countries.

FREEDOM FROM FEDERAL TAXES.

FREEDOM FROM FEDERAL TAXES.

The Porto Ricans are not subject to our national income or other direct taxes, and therefore are exempt from the burdens imposed by our immense war debt. They are protected by the Army and Navy of the United States, but do not pay any part of the cost of maintaining our defensive establishments. There is a Porto Rican regiment of excellent American troops at San Juan, but it is, of course, a part of the Army of the United States and as such is maintained by the Army appropriations at Washington.

In his recent message to the legislature, Gov. Yager points out the fiscal advantages enjoyed by Porto Rico as compared with Hawaii. Some Porto Ricans have strongly advocated the creation by Congress of a territorial form of government like that of Hawaii and Alaska, with a view to the ultimate admission of Porto Rico as a State in the Union. This is a perfectly logical idea; and undoubtedly the school children of Porto Rico—who are devoted to the Stars and Stripes as a national emblem—look forward to a time when Porto Rico is to attain, as its ultimate status, the proud position of a State in the Union. Gov. Yager, without wasting words, shows the legislature and the Porto Rican people how much better off they are at present than if they were projected into the status of independence on the one hand, or hurriedly admitted to membership in the Union on the other hand.

Thus the Porto Ricans last year naid only about $7,000,000 of taxes

Thus the Porto Ricans last year paid only about $7,000,000 of taxes altogether, while the Hawaiian Islands, with only one-fifth of Porto Rico's population, paid total taxes of more than $22,000,000. The assessed valuations of Hawaii and Porto Rico, adding together real and personal property, are approximately the same (personalty being underassessed in Porto Rico). Every dollar collected by Porto Rico went into the local treasury for local uses. The Hawaiians, on the other hand, kept less than $9,000,000 of their tax total for local use, while they contributed more than $13,000,000 to the United States Treasury. The governor advises Porto Rico to make the most and best of the very fortunate position in which the island finds itself, even though its political status is somewhat anomalous.

AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP IS APPRECIATED.

With great good sense Gov. Yager earnestly advises the Porto Ricans to tax themselves liberally in order to lift the island above the reproach of illiteracy, to transform its health conditions, and to build up the people of the island in all that makes for individual improvement and to tax themselves liberally in order to lift the island above the reproach of liliteracy, to transform its health conditions, and to build up the people of the island in all that makes for individual improvement and community welfare.

Meanwhile Porto Ricaus of both parties in the legislature have agreed in asking the authorities at Washington to go still further than the Jones Act in conferring self-government. This would mean, among other things, the popular election of the governor and the relinquishment of appointing power by the President of the United States. Such steps, if taken, would not alter the general relationship of Porto Rieans to the United States. The postal service and various other Federal arrangements would always remind them of "Uncle Sam."

The great political fact in the minds of the people of the island is their American citizenship. There are many thousands of Porto Rieans in New York and elsewhere in the United States. They have only to establish local residence in order to have full political privileges. That is to say, a Porto Rican coming to New York acquires residence and political rights on precisely the same terms as a citizen of Pennsylvania or any other State who comes to New York and acquires a legal residence. A Porto Rican boy may aspire to the Presidency, Great numbers of Porto Ricans voted in the last presidential election. The island is represented at Washington by a Resident Commissioner, who is elected by the people of the island. The office is one that has large possibilities. It would be worth while for Porto Ricans to consider seriously how they might increase the prestige of this office and make it a more conspicuous agency through which to keep the people of the United States informed about Porto Rico's affairs.

The majority party recently passed a joint resolution indorsing Gov. Yager, and intimating that his retention in the executive office would be acceptable to the dominant element in the island. In the nature of the case, there is no reason why a native Port

PORTO RICO AS A MEETING PLACE FOR BOTH AMERICAS.

The people of Porto Rico, it would seem to us, as they look to the more distant future, would make no mistake if they should rest firmly upon their United States citizenship, meanwhile making the most of the practical advantages of their position. These advantages appeal strongly to the sympathetic imagination. The two great languages and cultures of the Western Hemispheres bid fair to meet one another in Porto Rico as at no other point. North America is permanently English speaking, while Central and South America and the West Indies are permanently Spanish speaking. It is exceedingly desirable that we of English-speaking North America should better understand the Latin Americans, and vice versa.

There will always be some North Americans who have acquired intimate knowledge of Latin America, and there will always be many Latin Americans who have studied in our schools and universities, and learned to admire and trust the United States. But there is no other distinctive region in which the two civilizations may touch one another so effectively as in Porto Rico. The climate of the island is wholly delightful, and it will eventually draw hosts of visitors and health seekers. Its narrow coastal plains, with their rich harvests of sugar cane and tropical fruits, have their perpetual summer tempered by stimulating breezes from the Atlantic.

The verdant hills and mountains, which make up the greater part of the island, are also rich in yields of tobacco, ceffee, and many other topical products, or else afford excellent pasturage the year round for cattle by the thousands. The island has its agricultural college, and the United States Government maintains an agricultural experiment station. These should be developed constantly and generously, not only to minister to the further prosperity of the island itself, but to contribute scientific and practical knowledge for the development of all of the tropical and semitropical regions of the Americas. Such an object is one in which the island government and the Washington authorities may well continue to cooperate.

A FUTURE CENTER FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND STEDY.

object is one in which the island government and the Washington authorities may well continue to cooperate.

A FUTURE CENTER FOR SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND STEDY.

This agricultural college is a part of the young University of Porto Rico. One of the aims of the university is ultimately to aid the world in solving the problems of tropical medicine. Comprehension of a need and clear perception of an opportunity are the essential first steps in the achievement of any great human project. Obviously there is great need in the Tropics of medical progress and sanitary reform. Until recently it was supposed that life in the warm climates was less healthful than in the North, and that death rates must always be higher in the Tropics. That opinion is no ionger supported by sclentific experts. The northern latitudes once had their terrible epidemics of smallpox, typhus, and typhoid, and various other maladies which have been brought under control. Low death rates follow the acceptance of hygienic rules and sanitary regulations.

In building the Panama Canal, Gen. Gorgas and the American health authorities transformed the "zone" from a place of deadly epidemics to a health resort. In Cuba, and the Philippines also, our health administration has accomplished notable results. Porto Rico in like manner has furnished an object lesson to encourage further research and effort in the field of tropical medicine and sanitary administration. The health department of the Island, under Dr. Ruiz Soler, is conducted with an intelligent understanding of the work to be done. As in many other tropical regions, the hookworm infection is prevalent, particularly among the people in the country districts. Along the coastal plain there is much malaria, and cases of tuberculosis are far too common. The International Health Bureau of the Rockefeller Foundation is now beginning to cooperate with the authorities of Porto Rico in the warfare against preventable diseases.

Dr. Bailey K. Ashford, colonel in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, wh crete houses with suitable appointments, and selling these on a long-time plan to workingmen. This policy has been strongly encouraged by Gov. Yeger.

On some of the great sugar plantations villages of model houses are making their appearance, and families promoted from the primitive, palm-built huts to these little homes with sitting room, separate bedrooms, kitchen, shower bath, and toilet facilities, show quick appreciation, with evident improvement in health and standards of living. All great changes must have their beginning, and while the rehousing of Porto Rico's population has gone only a little way, it will be achieved in due time. A generous cut-of-door climate, with bananas and breadfruit growing around almost every little hut in the country districts, makes it possible to live in fairly open shelters in this land of perpetual summer. But better average wages have come to stay, and better food is demanded; thus with teachers everywhere preaching the gospel of domestic science to the pupils better family and social conditions will gradually evolve.

TWO-LANGUAGE SCHOOLS, AND THE UNIVERSITY.

TWO-LANGUAGE SCHOOLS, AND THE UNIVERSITY.

The academic courses of the university and the normal training school have already resulted in turning out many young women and many young men who have studied diligently and have carried enthusiasm into their work as teachers in the public schools of the island. The institution that heads the educational system puts on no false front and makes no pretensions. It is doing its best to create standards of culture and to have the school system, from bottom to top, serve as a steadily growing agency for the uplift of the whole population. It is willing to do the plain, necessary work of to-day, while it cherishes visions of a brilliant future. It is thoroughly American in spirit, and its pupils sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" with heartiness, and, what is more, they actually know the words of that song.

When one considers that Porto Rican school children and university students are hearing Spanish, spoken everywhere and are reading Spanish newspapers, just as American pupils in Ohio are living in a one-language region, it is nothing less than astonishing to note the intelligence and the industry shown in these Porto Rican schools in the acquisition of English as a second language. All over Porto Rico one finds hundreds of native teachers who have never been off the island conducting their classes in English. And this does not refer alone to classes in the English language, but to those in arithmetic, geography, and various other subjects, the children answering questions in oral English with remarkable fuency, considering the circumstances.

It ought to become a fixed policy of the United States Government, in conjunction with the Porto Rican government, to assist large numbers of these Porto Rican teachers to attend summer schools in the United States. There has been enough of this already to have shown that it is wholly prectical and very valuable in its results. It should also, as a matter of public policy, be made easy for teachers from the United States to come and go. Some use of Army transports in the past has shown that more might well be done in the future to encourage an excellent type of teacher from the United States to participate in educational work in Porto Rico.

The University of Porto Rico dares to have a high conception of its future status in helping to promote good understanding between the peoples of North America and those of the Spanish-speaking Republics. No single institution in the future will have a monopoly of any international service of this kind. In due time some North American students will study in universities of South America and many young South Americans will continue to come to the United States. But Porto Rico may properly aim to create an institution of very distinctive leadership, for Porto Rico is the one important Spanish-speaking community that seems destined to remain permanently under the American fag. Its interests from every standpoint compel it to become bilingual. The University of Porto Rico has by all odds the best chance of any institution in the Western Hemisphere to develop itself upon this two-language basis.

In due time it will establish a school of trade and commerce in close association with a school of history, international law, and diplomacy. Eminent publicists from South America may then come to give lectures at the University of Porto Rico to groups of students who understand Spanish perfectly well, while distinguished authorities in government, politic and unpiessant. But this is an age in which personal inderty and local distinctiveness seem to be entirely in keeping with large organizations of government, of commerce, and of culture for purposes of common welfare.

It takes courage to aim high and to work toward the realization of the largest possibilities. Looking to the future, it is easier to entertain the notion of an independent Porto Rico associated politically with other Latin American entities surrounding the Caribbean Sea. And this conception might be fully justified if the alternative meant a rough and tactless attempt to Anglo-Saxonize Porto Rico or to subject its people to rules, customs, and standards that seem to them both strange and unpleasant. But this is an age in which personal liberty and local distinctiveness seem to be entirely in keeping with large organizations of government, of commerce, and of culture for purposes of common welfare.

Porto Rico need not fear that the million.

Porto Rico need not fear that she will be a neglected Cinderella in the American household. It is probable that she can play her part in the Caribbean regions with more influence and success if she abandons all thought of a future substitution of her local flag for the Stars and Stripes. Porto Rico will inevitably be managed by Porto Ricans for their own welfare. There is not the slightest danger of domination from Washington for the benefit of continental America and to the harm of Porto Rico. The training and development of the Porto Rican people is much more important just now from the standpoint of democratic progress than the achievement of outward forms of a more complete home rule. Statehood may be expected as the ultimate thing.

In theory, of course, the Porto Ricans should choose their own governor. In practice, however, it would probably be best for Porto Rico, at least for some time to come, that the governor should be named by the President of the United States. Latin-American countries often victimize themselves in the undue excitement and factionalism of electoral contexts. It is the business of the governor, whether appointed or elected, to apply firmness, wisdom, and intelligence to promoting the welfare of the Porto Rican people. It is probably better for the island that the governorship, like the judiciary, should exercise its functions above and beyond the control of local parties.

There has been a good deal of conflict between capital engaged in such industries as those of sugar and tobacco on the one side and abor—organized under socialistic leadership—on the other hand. It might not be best for the island at the present time to have such economic conflicts carried into the political arena in the election of a governor. There would seem to be quite enough opportunity for a

FINALLY, PORTO RICO MUST BE MECOGNIZED AND AIDED.

From the standpoint of American defense, Porto Rico has the strategic advantages of location that have not at times been sufficiently well understood by the authorities at Washington. In the long run, the tests of efficiency and of economy would be best met by concentrating as far as possible upon harbor improvement and defensive preparations in Porto Rico as bearing upon the protection of the Panama Caual and of all our proper interests in the Caribbean regions.

As an evidence of our regard for Porto Rico and esteem for our fellow citizens there, it would be desirable to appoint a certain number of Porto Ricans to positions in the departments at Washington and also to select several Porto Ricans of suitable education and experience for diplomatic and consular positions. Porto Ricans have the advantage of understanding the language and the customs of other Latin-American countries. With these valuable qualifications, a reasonable knowledge of business conditions here in the United States would make them excellent additions to the personnel of our Diplomatic and Consular Service.

Although our Spanish-speaking neighbors to the southward have had more than four centuries of experience in trying to adapt themselves to the conditions of life in their respective regions, it is well to remember that there are centuries yet to come, and that the future will give ample opportunity to atone for the mistakes of the past. The application of scientific knowledge is the principal agency that we must now rely upon for improvement of individual and of social conditions. The Western Hemisphere must be harmonious in all that makes for the avoldance of war. It can be associated in many ways for intellectual progress and for the wide diffusion of things that make up our modern standards of civilized life. One of the ways in which the people of the United States can best promote the future well-being of our hemisphere as a whole is to contribute toward intensive progress in the beautiful island which recognizes the American flag as its own.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman unless he has the consent of the gentleman who objected to his request before.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I had a little conversation with him just [Laughter.] now.

The SPEAKER.

The gentleman is recognized, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to Mr. WILLIAMS. extend my remarks in the RECORD on the grain future bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none.

Mr. Griffin, Mr. Gernerd, and Mr. Snell were, by unanimous consent, granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

LEAVE OF ARSENCE

Mr. Buchanan, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, May 13, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ELLIOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 89) for the public sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 61), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 594) for the relief of certain exservice men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 63), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of

Mr. McKENZIE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5215) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 64), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 6150) authorizing the removal of certain cases in which the Government is the real party in interest from State courts to district courts of the United States, upon request of the Secretary of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs

By Mr. COLTON: A bill (H. R. 6151) to authorize the erection of a Federal building at Ephraim, Utah; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 6152) to authorize the construction of a drawless bridge across a certain portion of the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 6153) providing the method of transferring to the civil service retirement and disability fund the deduction required to be paid from naval appropriations on account of civilian employees of the Naval Establishment; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6154) providing for the insurance of currency shipped to disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. Underwood] is unavoidably absent on account of a death in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the particular item before the Senate is the item on page 35 providing for an increase of $7,500,000 for fuel and transportation, the exact figures being $17,500,000 as provided by the House, and an increase is made by the Senate committee to $25,000,000. I wish to submit some observations upon the increases in the bill, and as a number of amendments providing for increases have been passed over, I presume it is as logical to state them now as at any time.

The House bill carries $396,000,000, in round figures about $400,000,000. That is, as it seems to some of us, a very large appropriation for the Navy at this time, almost three times as much as we expended for the Navy in 1913.

The bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs increases the amount by about $100,000,000, making the total for the Navy about $500,000,000; to be exact I think it is $496,000,000. There is not very much information afforded the Senate in the report of the committee as to why these increases were made. In fact, in regard to this particular item no information is furnished the Senate. In regard to all the items, scarcely any information whatever is provided in the report as to the increases. Without assuming to criticize the committee, of course, it would seem that for an increase of $100,000,000 over the amount provided by the House and by a committee of the House that is known to be very aggressively in favor of a big Navy, there ought to be very strong and conclusive reasons stated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish to say that I did not catch the entire amount appropriated in the bill as he stated it.

Mr. BORAH. About $500,000,000—four hundred and minetysix million and some odd dollars, but when we taken into consideration the commitments in the bill, the expenditures which must inevitably follow, in my opinion the bill carries $650,000,-000, but the actual figures as the proponents of the bill present them are, in round numbers, $500,000,000.

For instance, let me call attention to the increase in the personnel. The personnel of the French Navy is about 45,000 men; that of the Japanese Navy, from 75,000 to 80,000 men; and that of the British Navy, about 100,000 or 105,000 men. It is variously estimated, but the most accurate figures which I have been able to secure and which I think are reliable are

The British Navy, of course, is now, as the ships are counted and as the proponents of a large navy in this country express it, a very much larger navy than that of the United States. The British Navy has a very much extended service to perform and particularly since the ratification of the Versailles treaty, because Great Britain is now master of one-third of the land of the world and about one-fourth of its population.

So we are providing and the House provided for a personnel of 100,000 men. That would be to all practical purposes the size of the largest navy in the world, to wit, the British Navy, lacking about 5,000 men.

It is now proposed to increase the Navy personnel to 120,000 men. I submit that, whatever may be one's views with reference to a large Navy, it does seem to me that in these times, when every effort ought to be made that can be made in reasonableness and safety to curtail the expenditures of the Government we can afford to limit our personnel to the size of the personnel of the English Navy, which is now the largest navy in the world. When we are cutting expenses, or at least have promised to cut expenses wherever we can, and when we know that we must deprive the Government of certain appropriations which it really ought to have for civic, industrial, and educational purposes, it seems to me that even the advocates of a great navy ought to be willing to rest with a personnel equal in size to that of the greatest navy in the world.

Mr, FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator whether the figures which he is giving include officers as well as men—whether they include the whole personnel?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator mean of the British Navy?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I understand they simply include the men, I am quite sure of that.

Mr. KENYON. What is the number of the personnel of the Japanese Navy?

Mr. BORAH. It is from seventy-five to eighty thousand men. Mr. KENYON. Does that include the air service and all other branches?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

We are, therefore, providing not only a Navy equal in personnel to the greatest navy in the world, but we are now surpassing it by from fifteen to tweny thousand men. cuse for that as assigned by the able proponents of the pending bill is that if we do not have this personnel certain ships will lie idle; in other words, in a time of peace, at a time when economy is absolutely essential to prevent bankruptcy and distress becoming widespread and extended throughout the country, we prefer to keep afloat, as a matter of exhibition and parade, certain ships rather than to save the taxpayers and permit those ships, as the British have permitted their ships to de, to lie idle. If, Mr. President, we now have 120,000 men to keep the ships which we have affeat and in condition, pray advise the American taxpayer the number we shall have to have when 16 additional battleships shall have been finished. We are creating what is known here in Washington as perpetual motion in appropria-This is the method by which these expenditures are now continually increasing.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President— Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. One of the reasons for maintaining the personnel is to supply the new ships which are approaching completion. When we recruit a lot of seamen, it is necessary to give them some little training before they can be put on a battleship to operate it. I assume that when the new ships are completed, and we have them available for service in the Navy, some of the older ships will be dealt with, as the Senator from Idaho recommends.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have no doubt that some of the old ships will be regarded as obsolete just as soon as the new ships can take their places. The thought occurred to me, however, I will say to the Senator, in view of the distressed condition of the taxpayers of the country, and in view of the fact that we are not now at least contemplating a naval war with any other nation, that we might permit these ships to be d'scarded, as the British have already done as to theirs of a similar type.

British have already done as to theirs of a similar type.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have just suggested that probably we would adopt that suggestion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The only difference between the able Senator from Washington and myself is that I should like to adopt it now and to limit the personnel to 100,000 men.

now and to limit the personnel to 100,000 men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We could not do that in one day or in one month. It is necessary to take some time in order to prepare men and to discard ships and get new ones and to man new ones.

Mr. BORAH. Have there been any steps taken toward putting out of commission any of the obsolete ships?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator in mind those particular ships?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not give the Senator from Idaho the names of the ships. I have the data here which I can supply the Senator. Included in the list are a number of the older ships, particularly a great number—something like 100—of destroyers, most of which bear the names of officers of the Navy. I can supply the names to the Senator from Idaho if he desires.

Mr. BORAH. Very well, I shall be glad to have them, because it is very difficult for a layman to know what ships are obsolete and what are not until the experts have passed upon the question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not mean to say that the destroyers to which I have referred are obsolete. I mean to say that they are being put in reserve; they are being protected; they are being preserved against destruction; but they are not being kept in full commission.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the British Navy, which the proponents of a large Navy in this country say now is very much larger and more powerful than ours, is getting along with a personnel of 105,000 men. When it comes to seamanship and to adequacy of defense from the seamen's standpoint, I think we may safely rely upon the strength of the British Navy as being ample to secure the British possessions. If that be true, what possible reason can be assigned for the United States adding 20,000 men to the number which the British Navy regards as a sufficient and efficient personnel in order to protect all the wide-flung British possessions?

Mr. President, the condition in this country is a very serious There are at present, it is said, 5,000,000 men in the United States who are out of employment. I read this morning a statement by a priest, in which he stated publicly that in his entire parish there were only seven men employed, and that the people were not only out of employment but that they were hungry and that some of them were actually starving. This condition, Mr. President, has become chronic, and is only preceding a more general condition that will come about, as indicated by the conditions which confront us in West Virginia this morning.

If the people of this country were satisfied that the Congress was doing what it could do to limit their burdens and expenses, I feel very certain that they would be patient to the very limit in regard to existing conditions, but at a time when business is discouraged, when industry is demoralized, when we are searching for more money in the way of taxes, and when the army of the unemployed bids fair to be as large as the Army of the fighting forces a few months ago, it is very difficult to justify the increase of the House appropriation, which was already large, by $100,000,000. The psychological effect as well as the actual effect of such things, in view of the distressed condition of the people of the country, is something that one does not like to contemplate.

The Secretary of the Treasury made a report a few days ago, and I invite the attention particularly of Senators upon this side of the Chamber to a paragraph or two from that report.

Mr. Mellon has been a marvelous success in the world of finance in his individual capacity, and I doubt not that he has given to this subject thorough investigation and the best effort possible to arrive at a business basis upon which to operate the Government. He says:

The Nation can not continue to spend at this shocking rate-

And yet, Mr. President, there is positively no chance in this Congress at the rate which we are traveling to lower the expenditures by one dollar. We will cut here and there a little, but one has only to look at the bills which are pending before Congress, and which will pass, to know that at the end of this fiscal year the expenditures for the actual running expenses of the Government will be greater than they were in 1920. If there is any plan upon this side of the Chamber being incubated anywhere to limit the expenditures of the Government it has not yet been revealed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

Mr. BORAH. I yield.
Mr. POMERENE. Is not the Senator mistaken about that?
I remember very distinctly that at the last session of the Senate, as the Senator from Idaho no doubt will remember, I was very much interested in trying to secure an increase in the pay of a few policemen out in the Zoological Park, but the Senate was so economical at the time that they would not permit that increase. The mere fact that we are expending four hundred million or five hundred million dollars for the Navy in one session of Congress should not make the Senator from Idaho lose sight of the very striking exhibition of economy to which I have referred.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, and I modify my remarks to that extent. Secretary Mellon continues:

modify my remarks to that extent. Secretary Mellon continues:

The Nation can not continue to spend at this shocking rate. As the President said in his message, the burden is unbearable and there are two avenues of relief. "One is rigid resistance in appropriation and the other is the utmost economy in administration." This is no time for extravagance or for entering upon new fields of expenditure. The Nation's finances are sound and its credit is the best in the world, but it can not afford reckless or wasteful expenditure. New or enlarged expenditures can not be financed without increased taxes or new loans. Expenditures should not even be permitted to continue at the present rate. The country is staggering under the existing burden of taxation and debt and clamoring for gradual relief from the war taxation.

The Nation should not be permitted to continue to expend at its present rate, and the people are staggering, says the Secretary of the Treasury, under the load which they are now carry-Yet I submit that we have not before us any plan or any program which permits of even a limitation of expenditures to the present figure

We were advised a few weeks ago by a member of the Finance Committee, who presented the figures, that this year we would appropriate $4,500,000,000, and that at the end of the year we would have a deficit of from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. The best figures which can be gathered by those who have the courage and are willing to present them is that this Republican Congress, pledged to economy, will increase the expenditures of 1920.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator, of course, knows that the appropriations for 1922 have already been made, with the exception of those for the Navy and for the Army; and he knows, furthermore, that they were made upon estimates furnished by officials of the former administration. If the Senator will take the time to look at the figures, he will find that the estimates sent in were very materially decreased in all the appropriation bills which were passed. I can speak for all of the bills except the Army appropriation bill, the Navy appropriation bill, and the Diplomatic and Consular bill. Those bills I can not speak about, because I have not the figures at hand, and they did not come before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. We always appropriate less than the estimates; that is always done by every Congress

Mr. BORAH. Yes; of course. Mr. President, in answer to the able Senator from Kansas I will simply repeat-and I put it here in the Record, and I ask the Senator from Kansas in a year from now to read it—that the expenditures of this Congress, for which the Republicans are responsible, will be greater than the expenditures of the preceding Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the prediction that the expenditures will be a billion dollars less than they were this year. The first time the Republicans prepare the appropriation bills upon estimates from their departments the reduction will be over a billion dollars. I make that prediction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield? Mr. BORAH. Just a moment, until I get through with this. The expenditures of the last Congress were passed upon by an overwhelmingly Republican Congress, and to say that the estimates were sent in here by Democratic officials and afterwards were cut to some extent by a Republican Congress does not relieve the Republican Congress at all from the fact of the expenditures as made by the Republican Congress.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have before me the figures, and they show that the appropriations, outside the Army and Navy bill which we have made for 1922, are $898,000,000 below the appropriations for 1921.

Mr. BORAH. Eight hundred and ninety-eight million dollars? Bless Heaven—$898,000,000!—and you will see a billion and a half of deficiencies appropriated here without a single effective protest.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is a bill for $300,000,-000 of deficiencies pending now in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether those figures include the naval bill and the Army bill?

Mr. CURTIS. No; they do not.

Mr. KENYON. So you would have to deduct those from the $800,000.000.

Mr. CURTIS. It is $800,000,000 less than was carried in the bills outside the Navy and Army bills. I said in my first statement that I could not speak for the Army bill or the Navy bill or the Diplomatic bill, because they did not come before the Committee on Appropriations,
Mr. KENYON. I did not understand from the Senator whether he included the figures of the Army and the Navy or

Mr. CURTIS. I did not; only the bills that were actually passed and which came before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. How much has the naval appropriation bill of the present Congress been reduced below the naval appropriation bill of the last session?

Mr. BORAH. Not a dollar-not a dollar. It stands right

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, of course I do not know what the Senator from Ohio refers to as "the naval bill." The bill as it came to the Senate from the House contained a reduction of nearly $100,000,000. The bill as reported by the Senate committee, including new program and new construction for aviation, is very nearly the same as the appropriations of last year.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, the estimates which came from a Democratic administration result in the same bill and the same appropriations as the estimates which came from a Republican administration. There is no difference between the two bills.

Mr. President, will the Senator permit me? Mr. KING.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that under a Democratic administration in 1914-15 the naval appropriation bill was only $141,000,000, and the year before $126,000,000, and the year before $129,000,000, and so on back to 1900, when it was $61,000,000. Now it is more than $500,-000,000, besides commitments which will necessitate an expenditure of $2,000,000,000 in the next two years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the sweep of the years, in the change of Democratic administrations and Republican administrations, taxes continue to increase year by year and decade by decade. Let me call your attention to some figures which indicate how little party politics have to do with decreas-ing expenditures.

In 1850 the per capita expenditures of the National Government were $1.77.

In 1860 they were $2.01.
In 1860 they were $2.01.
In 1890, $4.75 per capita.
In 1900, $6.39 per capita.
In 1910, $7.30 per capita.
In 1919, $144.77 per capita.

It makes no difference, Mr. President, so far as parties are concerned. If you look back over 50 years, there is a constant rise in the expenditures of the National Government in the per capita burden upon the people. Whether the estimates come from one party or another or are passed by one party or another, when it gets down to the taxpayer there is an increase of burden, regardless of what party is in power.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator should not be discouraged. This amount is raised by direct taxes levied upon the people. Cheer up; the worst is yet to come. These taxes are but a fraction of the indirect burden.

For instance, under the transportation act of 1920, which has operated, according to the testimony before the committee, but one-twelfth of the time, there has been an increase in rates of $400,000,000. If it had operated for a full year, there would have been an increase of practically $4,000,000,000. Mr. Hines has estimated that we pay $5 out of our pockets for every dollar of increase in freight rates. That would be an increase in freight rates of $20,000,000,000 under one act; so that the little amount the Government takes directly is so small compared with the amount we are taking indirectly that we should not be discouraged or dismayed.

Mr. BORAH. No; in view of the fact that both sides of the Chamber passed the bill.

Mr. STANLEY. I helped do it. I am not pleading "not guilty.

Mr. BORAH. I continue reading from the Secretary of the Treasury:

The estimated ordinary expenditures of $4,014,000.000 will on their part be affected by appropriations which are still to be made. The estimated expenditures of the War Department and the Navy Department, aggregating over $1,100,000,000 for 1922, will depend largely upon the military and naval policy adopted by the Congress at the present session. * * * In the absence of drastic cuts in military and naval expenditures, there is almost no prospect, according to the estimates, of any substantial available surplus even in the fiscal year 1922. * * Substantial cuts in current expenditures offer the only hope of effective relief from the tax burden.

The President has told us that this tax situation is unbear-ble. The Secretary of the Treasury has advised us that this shocking expenditure can not continue, and the Secretary of the Treasury has advised us that there is no place to reduce it except in the Army and Navy appropriations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he thinks the Shipping Board effers any opportunities for reduction of expenditures?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know. I am referring to the language of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury says there is no way to cut expenditures except in these two items. I presume he has surveyed the situation with some degree of accuracy and earnestness. It depends upon him, in a large measure, to see that there are presented to Congress the things which ought to be presented in order to reduce expenditures.

Being thus advised, what does this side of the Chamber pro-

A vast amount has been said about cooperation and harmony and teamwork, and we have a great deal of harmony and teamwork on certain matters; but on the question of expenditures we are in utter disharmony. One department of the Government is insisting upon increased expenditures, or holding them to the present level, and another department of the Government advises us that it simply can not be endured, and that this shocking expenditure will lead to disaster. The Secretary of War, who is also a student of finance and has been a success in it, in a speech made a short time ago said:

Something like $17,000,000,000 must be provided by the Federal Government within the next 30 months to meet its running expenses and refunding operations. This—is an infinitely greater task than was ever undertaken by any nation in the world in time of peace, and there is no one, skilled in financial operations though he may be, who does not view the prospect with more or less alarm. With this situation facing us it is the height of folly to undertake new commitments if they can be avoided, and I assume that no one will dissent from that proposition.

Seventeen billions of dollars in 30 months, the beginning of which 30 months is marked by discouragement and by demoralization in the industrial and business world. Senators here know that sources of taxation are being dried up day by day; that taxes which have come to us from a certain source come to us from that source no longer, because they say they are not there to give. Men who a few months ago were paying a large income tax would be delighted if they could turn their property over to those who hold a mortgage and step out free. I know men in my part of the country, sir, who a year or two years ago were what we call very wealthy men for our part of the country. They are now in financial ruin. One of them drove his herd into a field a few days ago, a man who was estimated to be worth $1,500,000 a year and a half ago, and said to the mort-gagee, "You can take it; I am going to the oil wells of Texas." That is only one of many illustrations; and yet, my friends, without any program, without any plan to lift the burden from the men who are bending under it, without even stopping to listen to the appeals which are made to us, we sit here day by day not only not decreasing the expenditures but increasing them—a party which was pledged in the last campaign in every way to economy.

Mr. President, the able chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], who, unfortunately, by reason of ill health, is detained from the Senate, in an interview upon this question of disarmament the other day said, "My opinion is that the American people are just now more concerned in getting revenue revised and taxes reduced and the sheriff retired to the background than they are in academic discussion of disarmament.

As I said, the able Senator, the chairman of the Finance Committee, being absent on account of ill health, I address my question to any member of the Finance Committee who is here, or who ought to be here. How do you propose to retire the sheriff? What is your plan? If disarmament is not the plan, what is your plan? Certainly the Senator from Pennsylvania would not be in favor of the United States fully disarming without an agreement among the other nations to disarm, and if you do not have it through agreement it is alto-gether probable you can not have it at all. You can take the word of the Secretary of the Treasury that unless disarmament comes through such an agreement we can not have any reduction at all in our taxes.

It has been stated here before, and I want to state it again, that it may go into the Record, that 93 per cent of the money expended by the Government during the year 1920 was on account of wars, past and future, closed and anticipated; 7 per cent for all the other operations of the Government, civic, educational, and everything which has to do with the building up of a Government and maintaining it.

The cost of all the civil-service activities of the Government from July 1, 1909, to July 1, 1919, averaged $2.15 a year per capita, and during that period the cost increased practically with the population. From 1834 to and through 1919, the War Department actually disbursed $23,002,390,008. In the same period the Navy Department expended $6,907,369,032. This makes a total for those two departments of $29,909,759.040.

Now, Mr. President, for comparison, the total cost of the Civil War, from June 30, 1861, to June 30, 1866, was $3,500,000,000. I have somewhere the total expenditures of the Government for the first 72 years of its existence, which is a little more than the increase in this naval appropriation bill.

The net cost of the World War to the United States was, up to January 1, 1921, $24,010,000,000. According to the appropriations passed prior to May 1, 1920, including the deficiency bill, our expenditure for that year was $5,686,576,000. Of this expenditure there was expended for the War and Navy Departments $1,424,138,667.57, or 25 per cent of the entire amount; $3,855,482,000, or 67 per cent, was for previous wars, in the way of pensions, and so forth. For primary governmental functions $181,000,000 was expended, in round figures, or 43 per cent of the entire expenditures of the Government. There was expended for public works, $168,203,557.46, or 2.097 per cent of the entire amount. For research and educational development work there was expended $57,093,660, or 1,001 per cent of the entire expenditures.

For research, for educational work, for the building of citizenship, for the building of character upon which republican institutions must rest, we appropriate 1 per cent of the entire expenditures of five billion and odd dollars, and 93 per cent

Now I ask you, not as an academic question but as a practical proposition, how long can a republican form of government exist under that condition of affairs? It is not guns alone, or ships alone, which constitute the safety and the security of a free government; it is the intellect and the character of the citizenship upon which the government rests. One per cent for laying the basis of character and citizenship and 93 per cent dedicated to the purposes of destruction and death, that is a road to speedy and certain breakdown in republican government.

A few weeks ago we were advised that one of the methods by which we were going to reduce taxes was that of discharging departmental clerks and employees, and it was estimated that we would get rid of at least 20,000 employees. I have no doubt but the able Senator who made that prediction, the Senator from Utah, who has been a consistent and persistent advocate of economy, felt entirely certain as to his figures. Mr. President, suppose we had discharged 20,000 employees, it would not have amounted to the appropriation in this bill for one battleship. It would have been a mere bagatelle compared with the $4,500,000,000 which we are to expend and the deficit which perhaps will follow. But, now, it appears, Mr. President, what those of us who have been here for years anticipated, that after a careful survey of the situation we can not cut out the employees to the amount of 20,000. We shall do well if we cut out to the number of 5,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I yield. Mr. POMERENE. Allow me to remind the Senator, at the same time, that in connection with the effort to reduce the civil employees 20,000-and I am in sympathy with that-there is also in the pending bill an effort to add to the Navy personnel by 20,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the speech of the Senator from Idaho, but I must correct the statement just made by the Senator from Ohio. There is nothing proposed in the bill looking to the increase of the personnel of the Navy at all. Mr. POMERENE. I ha I have before me the committee report, in which it is stated that the bill as it passed the House made appropriations on a basis of an enlisted strength of 100,000 men in the Navy, and the Senate committee recommends, and has so proposed amendments to the bill, that we shall make appropriations upon the basis of 120,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have 120,000 men in the Navy now. I have the figures here of the date of May 9, strictly up to date, showing that there are 120,687 men in the Navy. The Senate committee bill does not propose to increase that at all,

Mr. POMERENE. It evidently increases the appropriations on that basis, if I understand the report correctly

Mr. POINDEXTER. It reduces the appropriations.

Mr. BORAH. It increases the appropriations over the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what misled the Senator from Ohio. The bill as it passed the House proposed to reduce the number. The Senate committee bill is framed on the proposition of maintaining the same number we have now.

Mr. POMERENE. The fact remains none the less that you are increasing the appropriations sufficiently to take care of 20,000 men more than the House provided for.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an amendment to the House bill: it is not an increase of the appropriations heretofore made. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, now let us for a moment take a little broader survey of the debt situation. Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Before leaving the question of a reduction in the number of clerks, I think the RECORD ought to state what the facts are a little more fully than what the Senator has demonstrated. The Senator will recall that one of the leading Republicans of the House stated that there would be at least 40,000 clerks separated from the service as soon as the Republicans came into control; and it was stated frequently during the campaign. Recently a survey has been made, and in a Washington paper a few days ago there appeared this statement:

The beginning of the new fiscal year, July 1, will find more than 80,000 employees on the Government's pay rolls in the Capital.

Congress has been unable, despite all efforts at economy, to reduce the executive establishments to anything approximating their prewar size. Before the war there were 27,000 Federal employees in the District of Columbia.

Just one other statement, if the Senator will parden me:

A similar situation obtains throughout the country. The number of Government workers outside the Capital exceeds 550,000. This is 150,000 more than in normal prewar years, and brings the total of all workers to about 636,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is often stated, in answer to those who would like to curtail naval expenditures and Army expenditures, that the distressed condition of the world, the discontented condition of the world, the unrest throughout the world, will not permit of it at this time. The discontent and disorder which prevail throughout the world at this time are due very largely to the great debt which has been and is being imposed upon the people by reason of these Army and Navy expenditures throughout the world.

Almost equal to the crime of those who were guilty of the bringing on of the war was the crime which the allied and associated powers committed, when, after the signing of the armistice, they each and all began to arm against one anotherfor there was no one else against whom to arm-upon a more stupendous scale than had ever before characterized the nations of the world.

Let me call your attention to the fact that in 1920, two years after the war had closed, when the German Navy had been destroyed and her army reduced to 200,000, the allied and associated powers, the five great nations, expended for their armies and their navies $16,442,251,101.

Those powers which were victors together impose upon their people the burden in one year of over $16,000,000,000 for armament, for armies and navies, and against whom? source of the discontent. That is the source of the disorder. The promise that this war was to end war has resulted in a preparation for the next war upon a scale which the human mind never before conceived.

Now, I ask again of my friends, how are you going to stop it except through an agreement, except through a conference? How are you going to lift the burden which is now creating unrest and dissatisfaction not only throughout Europe, but throughout this country, except by an agreement among the powers which are laying on the debt?

Look at the condition in France to-day. army of 800,000 men. She has her military alliances with some seven or eight of the European powers. She is extending a network of militaristic power throughout Europe, and yet the condition of the French citizen to-day is one of abject poverty. How shall we assist in aiding France to get from under that situation? Shall we do it by building battleships, by increasing our Army and our Navy, or shall we bring about an agreement by which the great naval powers of the world may disarm the ocean and at least initiate a program of peace which will bring poise and contentment to the other nations of the world?

Mr. President, I do not wish to digress to the subject of disarmament. I simply desired at this time to call attention to some of these increases and the general subject of expenditures. I think I shall content myself with that phase of the subject at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I find it will be impossible for me to be in the Senate this afternoon on account of a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs, and per-haps out of order in the sense of the Senate not yet having reached the portion of the bill to which I refer, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for some information concerning section 4, which commences at the bottom of page 53, and has to do with the value placed upon the ration in the Navy when commuted and paid in cash to officers and enlisted men. The first part of the section reads:

That during the fiscal year 1922 the ration for officers and enlisted men of the Navy entitled thereto shall be commuted at the rate of 60 cents per diem.

The Army ration when commuted to officers and enlisted men is 53 cents per diem, and I am wondering why the Navy ration when commuted in this way should be 7 cents higher than that paid in the Army.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the difference in the amount allowed for commutation of rations in the Army and Navy is probably due in a very large measure to the different circumstances under which Army and Navy officers are situated when they receive commutation for rations. The naval service in very large measure when commutation of rations is allowed is in foreign port, and under a much greater variety of conditions in the main than those which surround Army officers who receive commutation of rations.

It is due also in part, no doubt, to the difference which is created by law in the contents of the Navy ration and the Army ration. Of course, I realize that that does not apply to rations which are bought officers who receive commutation of rations, but I have no doubt it had weight with Congress in the enactment of the law. This thing is fixed by the law, which provides 68 cents as the amount allowed for commutation of rations in the Navy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean 68 cents?
Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. The committee propose to reduce it in the pending bill from 68 cents, which is fixed by existing law, to 60 cents, a reduction of 8 cents. I may read the statute which specifies the contents of the Navy ration, bearing in mind all the time that it is not this ration which those who receive commutation of rations are supplied with, but suggesting that the law having fixed the contents of the Navy ration, the cost of that ration fixed by law perhaps had something to do with the amount allowed in commutation of rations to the Navy. The act of June 29, 1906, amending section 1580 of the Revised Statutes, provides that-

Statutes, provides that—

The Navy ration shall consist of the following daily allowance of provisions to each person: One pound and a quarter of salt or smoked meat, with 3 ounces of dried or 6 ounces of canned or preserved fruit, and 3 gills of beans or pease, or 12 ounces of flour; or 1 pound of preserved meat, with 3 ounces of dried or 6 ounces of canned or preserved fruit and 8 ounces of rice or 12 ounces of canned vegetables, or 6 ounces of desiccated vegetables; together with 1 pound of biscuit, 2 ounces of butter, 4 ounces of sugar, 2 ounces of coffee or cocoa, or one-half ounce of tea and 1 ounce of condensed milk or evaporated cream; and a weekly allowance of one-quarter pound of macaroni, 4 ounces of cheese, 4 ounces of tomatoes, one-half pint of vinegar or sauce, one-quarter pint of pickles, one-quarter pint of molasses, 4 ounces of salt, one-half ounce of pepper, one-eighth ounce of spices, and one-half ounce of dry mustard. Seven pounds of lard, or a suitable substitute, shall be allowed for every hundred pounds of flour issued as bread, and such quantities of yeast and flavoring extracts as may be necessary.

The cost of that ration, and upon which no doubt by analogy the allowance of commutation of rations was made-whether or not it should be based upon such an analogy as a subject which undoubtedly was weighed by previous Congresses, in fixing the amount allowed is a matter of mathematical calculation. The lowest cost, taking the basis of the average price of the ingredients which go into this ration and the wholesale prices paid in New York, which is the most favorable condition under which it can be bought, was 63 cents, and upon a full consideration of the entire matter the committee fixed the amount at 60 cents

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not pretend to an intimate knowledge of the methods of the Navy in procuring the ration. I think it can not be denied, however, that the Navy ration is very little different from the Army ration in its make-up. I do not think it can be contended that the sailors in the Navy are fed upon distinctly better food or more food than the soldiers in the Army, and in listening to the contents of the ration as provided in the law just read by the Senator from Washington it occurred to me that the two rations are very close together; in fact, the two services have often consulted, as I understand it-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, if I may be permitted. I understand, of course, that it costs a little more for the Navy to handle their ration because they have to handle it under more unusual conditions. I assume that handling the ration on shipboard, the keeping of it on shipboard, is a little more expensive than keeping it on shore as it is kept in an Army sup-ply base. Probably more overhead expense is incurred in that at the ship mess, because in that way danger of infection is regard. But the truth of the matter is that the Army ration to-day costs only 42 and a fraction cents, and it is surprising to me that the Navy ration costs 63 cents. I can not believe that there is that actual difference in value.

Now, as to the commutation. The commutation of rations is a part of the pay, in a very true sense, of officers and enlisted men. The Army commutes its rations to the officers and men who are entitled to commutation of rations, in accordance with the actual cost of the ration year by year. This year the com-muted ration in the Army is fixed at 53 cents, because that was the average cost of the Army ration last year. This coming year it will go down to something like 43 or 45 cents, and the officer or enlisted man who is on a detail which prevents him from eating at a soldiers' mess or taking advantage of the mess facilities provided in camps and Army posts will only get 43 or 45 cents a day for his ration. In other words, he gets that amount in cash with which he is supposed to buy his food. The Navy man on the same kind of detail will get 60 cents to go out and buy the same kind of food the Army man has to buy

I can not understand why there is this great difference. Either the Navy is too high or the Army is too low. fluctuates the value of its ration, when commuted to its officers and men, in accordance with the varying cost. The Navy ration is fixed by law, and law is inelastic and can not comply with the changing conditions of the market which govern the actual value or the actual cost of the ration.

Now, it is stated that so much of the Navy personnel is entitled to commutation of rations because they find themselves in foreign ports. I have not made an examination of the figures as to the cost of living in foreign ports as compared with the cost of living in the principal cities of the United States, but I venture the assertion that the cost of living in foreign ports is lower than it is in New York or Chicago or San Francisco, and that the 60 cents paid to the naval officer or the naval enlisted man as a commuted ration will go further in Hongkong or Tokyo than the 53 cents paid to Army men will go in New York or Chicago.

I think the two services should be upon one basis in this regard. I do not know how much money this amounts to in the course of a year, but the commutation of rations I know is a large item in the Army bill, and it has always been somewhat of a mystery to me why the Navy ration is asserted to cost so much more than the Army ration when they are very much alike in their ingredients. It does cost a little more for the Navy to handle their rations because they have to do it under artificial conditions, but why it should cost 50 per cent more passes my understanding. I merely make the suggestion to the Committee on Naval Affairs that they ascertain why the Navy ration, as compared with the Army ration, costs almost 50 per cent more. Sixty-eight cents, as I am informed by the Senator from Washington, is what the ration is supposed to be costing

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is fixed by law. Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; by law, and, of course, they will spend it, whereas the Army ration costs only 42.99 cents. There something wrong somewhere.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, of course the ration for the Army and the Navy is a fixed and certain quantity of ingredients.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And they are very much alike.

Mr. SWANSON. No; it is about 20 per cent more in the Navy. The estimate is that the Navy has about 20 per cent stronger ration than the Army. That is, they can make a selection-

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator surely does not mean that.

Mr. SWANSON. They have so much coffee, so much sugar, so much vegetables, and various other items.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the Senator does not think there is 20 per cent more coffee and 20 per cent more sugar for a sailor than for a soldier?

Mr. SWANSON. There is this difference: In the Army when a soldier is at Fort Myer we are willing he shall take his meals in Washington, because the health conditions in Washington are, on the average, probably as good as those at Fort Myer and at other Army posts; but, in the case of the Navy, if a sallor, for instance, is at Hongkong or at any other foreign port where the health conditions are not known he is discouraged from taking meals outside of the ship; everything possible is done to induce him to come to his mess. If a ship goes to Norfolk or to New York and it is not known whether there is an epidemic at the port where the ship anchors the commanding officers of the ship insist that their men, instead of taking meals avoided. If a sailor returning to his ship should bring an infection, such as typhoid fever or other contagious disease because of unfit food, it would nearly destroy the entire efficiency of the ship. The number of those who take their meals off the ship when on leave is reduced as low as possible, because everything is done that can be done for the health of the Navy on account of the peculiar conditions and the close contact of men on shipboard. Any other policy might be disastrous.

Then it is estimated that it takes more food to supply a man engaged in a seafaring life than it does on land, and his ration

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator consider work in the trenches?

Mr. SWANSON. Work in the trenches is not carried on in peace time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the same law in respect to this matter operates in peace and in war.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, when a ship goes to Norfolk or to San Francisco or to Galveston or to Hongkong it is not always possible to contract with the lowest bidder for supplies at each place. Consequently more is paid in the Navy than in the Army. It is impossible for the Navy to buy beef of the great contractors all over the United States, because a ship comes into port and leaves in a short time. Therefore it advertises for so much beef or for so many supplies of other kinds as it may need immediately, and, consequently, it costs a little more in order to supply each unit separately.

In addition to that, as the Senator has suggested, cold storage and other expenses for taking care of provisions and supplies in the Navy are greater than similar expenses in the Army. The estimate is that it generally costs about 20 per cent more on account of the conditions in the Navy than it does in the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the difference in this instance is 50 per cent.

Mr. SWANSON. The cost may be greater than I have indicated. I think the Navy had a larger supply on hand when mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. SWANSON. I think it had more of the character of supplies used by the men. I think some of the sugar used now was bought long ago. In any event, however, this commutation amounts to very little. No officer receives any commutation; the Navy feeds only the enlisted men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean to say that the officers of the Navy do not get commuted rations when they can not avail themselves of any other facilities?

Mr. SWANSON. Officers in the Navy, as I understand, are paid a certain salary and commutation of quarters when the quarters are not furnished; but the ration which we are now discussing is for enlisted men who can not take their meals at the mess. The Navy does not board its officers. The officers of the Navy pay their own board; they have what is called the officers' mess, the expenses of which are paid by private sub-scription amongst the officers. I will ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] if that is not true?

Mr. NEWBERRY. That is true.
Mr. SWANSON. Of course the commutation does not amount to over a few hundred thousand dollars.

An officer in the Navy is not allowed Mr. NEWBERRY.

commuted rations at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then why mention officers in the bill? Mr. SWANSON. I do not know why they are mentioned. It may be that warrant officers receive commutation, but no commissioned officer receives it. The provision may have ref-wr. WADSWORTH. Then, let us talk about enlisted men.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well, this provision applies to enlisted men.

If, for instance, an enlisted man when his ship reaches Norfolk is ordered to carry a message to Washington and is detailed for that purpose, he can not be at his mess, and accordingly the Government pays his expenses when he is away from the ship. He is given 60 or 63 cents a day to pay his board. I am inclined to think that it costs the man who is detailed more than the allowance given; but the item does not affect any large number of men. It simply affects the enlisted man who can not take his meals at his mess.

In order to fix the commutation a sample is taken and an estimate is arrived at as to what it is going to cost the next year, and that is covered in the appropriation. If the amount expended for this purpose is greater than the appropriation, the increase, whatever it may be, has to be taken care of by a deficiency. The enlisted man is entitled to get the specific things provided.

I do not believe any of the men who are detailed to duty away from their ships receive a commutation that is equal to what it costs them to live off the ship. I believe it costs them more than the commutation allowance.

Why is the commutation fixed? It is fixed for the reason that the enlisted man is entitled to it under certain circumstances when he is detailed away from his mess, but unless Congress fixes a specific amount the Comptroller of the Treasury will not pass the claim when it is filed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not fixed in the Army by law.
Mr. SWANSON. The Army fixes the commutation at the rate of 42 cents, I understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The commutation rate in the Army is fixed by the Quartermaster General with the approval of the Secretary of War, and Congress has no part in it.

Mr. SWANSON. In the case of the Navy it is generally fixed in the statute according to the cost of the ration the year before.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I may interrupt the Senator, there is the unfairness of treatment of the two services. The Senator recited the case of a sailor who was sent to carry a message, for instance, from Norfolk to Washington. On his way to Washington or on his way back, of course, he can not avail himself of the sailors' mess, and he gets his rations commuted for the time he is detailed to serve away from his mess.

Mr. SWANSON. That is 60 cents under this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A soldier from Fort Myer may be sent to carry a message down to Norfolk, and he gets 53 cents. Why should that be? Next year the soldier will get about 43 cents, while the sailor will still get 60 cents. There is no justice in that. Either the commutation in the Navy is too high or that in the Army is too low.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, like so many other apparently insoluble problems, I think this one can be very easily solved by pointing out an error in the premise upon which the whole argument is based. The Senator from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] asked the same question that any man not especially familiar with naval affairs might ask, as to why there was a difference in the cost of the Navy ration and the Army ration; and the Senator suggests as the basis of his criticism of this difference that the two rations are the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not quite, but very nearly the

Mr. POINDEXTER. And, of course, that assumption being erroneous, any subsequent conclusion based upon it is also The two rations are not the same. We made a most careful inquiry into that matter, and it is certainly a matter about which there could be no doubt when the records of the services are inquired into. The naval ration is fixed I read the law a moment ago-that is, the statute of the United States-and the naval ration is 50 per cent greater in quantity, by weight, than is the ration allowed the Army. The lowest figure of the cost of the Army ration as given here by the Senator from New York is 42 cents. If the Navy ration is 50 per cent greater than the Army ration, adding that 50 per cent to the cost of the Army ration would make, for the difference in quantity, 63 cents as the cost of the Navy ration, based upon the expenses which each is incurring in proportion to rations as they are now. The Naval Committee fixed the cost of the ration at 3 cents lower than that, or 60 cents.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator where he gets the information that the Navy ration is 50 per cent heavier than the Army ration?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I get it from the examination which was made at the request of the committee by the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts of the Navy Department, and his subsequently carefully prepared statement before the Naval Affairs Committee. I will give the Senator from New York some of the details.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. Then, I understand from that, that 50 per cent more food in weight is issued to sailors than is issued to soldiers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true. There is a much greater

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. The Army ration is— Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, a certain kind of food must be furnished in the Navy which it is not essential to provide for the Army. Take the matter of green vegetables and fruits. There is a certain quantity of those which are absolutely necessary for the use of the Navy. Unless the Navy may have a certain amount of vegetables and also fruits, such as oranges and lemons, which furnish a preventive of scurvy, it is a very serious matter. The rations in the two services are bound to be different. The ration for the Navy is fixed by the Medical Department of the Navy. If a thousand men in the Navy should become sick from an improper ration, it would involve a serious loss. So the Medical Department determines the elements of the ration, and the result has been beneficial to the Vicinity beneficial to the Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the "comparison of quantities of ration components allowed per man daily for the two services" in some of the principal items are as follows: The Army daily allowance of beef is 20 ounces, while in the Navy the daily allowance of beef is 28 ounces. The Army daily allowance of bacon, in case bacon is substituted for beef, is 12 ounces, while it is 20 ounces for the Navy.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does that apply to the Marine Corps? Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the Marine Corps ration is based oon the Army ration. This applies only to the Navy.
Mr. WADSWORTH. Is the Marine Corps ration different? upon the Army ration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is similar to that of the Army.

The amount of rice allowed in the daily ration in the Navy is 16 ounces, while in the Army it is 8 ounces. Of potatoes the allowance is 20 ounces in the Army and 28 ounces in the Navy. The allowance of beans for the Army is 2.4 ounces and 12 ounces for the Navy. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, a complete tabulated statement on

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the particular increase reported by the committee in the item of this bill which is now pending before the Senate, while it amounts to several million dollars, is of itself not of great importance, and were that the only item of increase in the bill I should not intrude myself upon the Senate. However, it is only one of a great many increases which, to my mind, need the careful consideration of the Senate. In my judgment most of them ought not to be made.

Mr. President, I have a few remarks to offer upon the subject of economy-a very unpopular subject in the Senate-and I make a special request that while I am speaking about economy the Presiding Officer and the reporter shall remain in the Chamber. I am not particular about others. I know that what I shall say about economy will not meet with a favorable response from the Senate, but probably will merely subject me to ridicule and criticism.

If a man goes in debt for the purpose of doing some useful thing, creating some new product, developing some new invention of use and benefit to mankind, he can afford to take considerable risk; and even when he is in debt it is sometimes good business to go further in debt for the purpose of increasing the production of manufactured articles for consumption, when a man borrows money to be destroyed, thrown away, he is entering upon a very doubtful enterprise, and he can justify himself only by demonstrating that borrowing the money or going in debt is a necessity. I am not quarreling with my friends who believe in a big Navy. The Secretary of the Navy is in favor of providing for the largest Navy in the world, and so was his predecessor; so I suppose it is an administration feature. I am aware of the arguments that can be made in favor of such a course, and while I do not agree with them and would not agree with them under ordinary circumstances, it seems to me under existing conditions that no man, in justice to the people and the country, can stand for that kind of a pro-No matter how badly we may think we ought to build more battleships and increase armament, no matter how necessary under ordinary conditions we might believe it to be, we are confronted now with the danger of bankruptcy.

The ordinary business man may want something now; but even though it be useful, if he is not financially situated so that he can afford it he will get along without it. He will have to. The ordinary person, if he bought everything that he wanted now, would be a bankrupt to-morrow. It is the same way with a government. We are confronted with a condition in the world and in the United States where bankruptcy is staring civilization in the face. For every dollar that we appropriate here, somebody must toil, somebody must work. It must be produced by labor. There is no escape from it.

We are now in debt away beyond the power of the imagination to conceive. We are now called upon to pay more interest on the debt that we owe than it cost to run the Government before the war.

In addition to that we have necessary expenses now that we must provide for that did not exist before the war, and for which we must tax in order to pay, so that the expenses of our Government necessarily must be much greater,

We can not at once get rid of the war machinery. come down gradually. We must pay the soldiers. We must continue to pay them during their lives, and their widows after Some of these things are necessary in fairness to those who fought our battles. We must be just to them, even though the burden is great. But, Mr. President, if in addition to doing those necessary things we are going into the extravagance of undertaking to build the greatest Navy in the world, and maintain in time of peace an Army all out of proportion to any that we ever maintained in time of peace before, we are then calling upon the taxpayers of the country to perform an impossibility, and when we reach that time we all know what the result must be. When we go so far with our taxation that it is impossible for money to be produced, then failure-bankruptcy-stares us in the face.

We are confronted now with a condition in the country where a great proportion of our people are suffering even for the necessaries of life; and, Mr. President, they will not justify, in my humble opinion, the expenditure that Congress is making in the particular bill that we have before us now. For the sake of argument, even concede that we would like to do it; even concede that we ought to do it; it is unwise to attempt to do it, because it is overburdening the people of the United States, the men and the women who have to toil to produce the money that we spend.

Mr. President, it is easy to say, amid the plaudits of the people, that we want to build up the greatest Navy in the world, that we want to carry our flag on battleships into every port in civilization. That would be nice; I confess I should like to do it myself; but, Mr. President, we can not do it. It is an impossibility. We are going on now at such a rate that unless we stop we shall face ruin; and when the people of the country, realizing that, bowed down with toil, suffering from hunger and shivering with cold, are once aroused they will repudiate what we are doing now and they will repudiate us.

Many of our people are not making both ends meet right now. Outside of the pledges that we made for economy, outside of the promises we made that we would reduce appropriations. even though they were never made, we are confronted now with a condition that absolutely demands that even though under ordinary circumstances these things would be considered by us as necessary, we must not have them now; and when the people realize that instead of reducing taxation we have increased the burdens of taxation they will repudiate us, and they ought to. We shall have to do that, even though we do not increase appropriations, Mr. President; even though we raise no more money than we have been raising. The burden of taxation must be increased, because some avenues of revenue are closed now and others are rapidly closing,

Men who paid income taxes in the year that has just passed will escape paying them now, some because they have no income, and some because they have invented ways of avoiding the law, such, for instance, as stock dividends, and so forth, the result being that the ordinary person pays a larger and a heavier tax, and Congress is hunting now for something to tax. We are looking around in desperation to find something on which we can levy a tax, and we all know that we shall have to increase the tax on many of the necessaries of life.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not the tendency of the present tax legislation to drive people out of business and to discourage people from going into business?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is; and right there, Mr. President, to show the condition of the people, where they are met, even after they have produced in abundance, with the fact that they can get nothing for what they produce, although in other localities people need the very thing that they produce, let me read a portion of a letter.

I was reminded of this by an interruption of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], when he referred to the other burdens outside of taxation that have been increased, and he referred particularly to freight rates; and, Mr. President, it was a very apt illustration, in my judgment. It makes very little difference whether we carry freight for nothing and pay for it out of the Treasury, or whether we charge for it as we do now; its cost is distributed over all of the people. Every man, woman, and child pays something on everything they eat, everything they use, and everything they wear, for freight rates, for transportation costs. They enter into everything around us and about us; so they constitute one form of taxation that we must all pay, even though we never see an engine or ride on a car.

This man writes me from Holt County, Nebr. As he says in the letter, that is one of the greatest hay-producing sections in the entire world. I think it is probably the greatest hay-producing section in the United States, at least. It produces hay in abundance. It is baled and shipped to market. Most of the land along the valley produces hay. It is the great industry of that particular locality, and it is shipped all over the United States.

This writer says, in part of the letter:

I had 300 carloads of hay on my ranch which I expected to bale, haul, and ship, and could have done so under the old 1918 rates.

He has just said, in the prior part of the letter, that the freight rates on hay had been increased 100 per cent.

I * * * could have done so under the old 1918 rates, giving employment to men, and used a part of the 457,000 idle freight cars, and would have paid the railroad $6,000 for hauling the hay to Omaha.

But, as he has said, the freight rate now amounts to $12,000, which is more than he can get for the hay; and so he goes on and says:

But I could not pay $12,000, the amount of the new rate; consequently, I had to let the hay rot in the stack. Now, this condition is a bad condition, and what is true with me is true with hundreds of others, and they will be ruined and put out of business, as they have no other business to depend upon.

Mr. President, that is not an exception to the rule; that is the general rule. That obtains all over the United States, in one industry or another. It is a form of taxation which the people of the country are called upon to pay beyond their ability to

ay. It can not be done; it is an impossibility.

Mr. President, I could fill the Congressional Record with letters. I have a letter here from a banker, who owns a farm near the town where he is doing business, and he went out there on Sunday and skinned a steer which had died the day before, together with the help of a man on the farm, and they hauled the hide to town, and the banker was not able to get enough for the hide to pay the man who helped him skin the steer.

He wrote here about his bank, located in a farming community, in a small village, where farmers, like this man, who had stock, who had hay, who had corn, were not able to dispose of it because they could not get out of it enough to pay for the harvesting of it or the hauling of it, as the case might be, but let it rot; so that a large amount of freight which would otherwise, under ordinary circumstances, come to the railroad, did not reach the railroad. It was a loss, not only a total loss to the man who produced it, but a loss to the railroad, and at the other end a loss to the consumer, who had to pay a higher price for the product, whatever it might be, because of the lessening of competition.

This banker said in his letter:

These farmers owe the banks on paper, which, under ordinary circumstances, would be the best in the world. My bank is the same as every other country bank. If we undertook to close out the men who owed, and put upon the market for sale, under the hammer, the products that are mortgaged to us, there would be nobody to buy. A horse worth $150 would not bring $10, and if the bankers bought all the products that they had they would go out of the banking business that day, because they would bankrupt themselves in trying to care for it and feed it, and would have no way to dispose of it.

Mr. President, that is the condition of the country now, and here we are called upon to pass an appropriation bill carrying amounts far beyond anything ever heard of in time of peace for the support of the Navy.

Again, let me say, I am not quarreling with the man who wants a big Navy. For the purpose of the argument, I am admitting you are right, although, as I said before, I do not believe you are. But let us admit you are right. You are confronted now with a condition in which, if you take into consideration the welfare of the people who compose this country, you must halt and wait. Mr. President, we can not afford to spend the money that is appropriated in this bill.

Outside of all that, Mr. President, I do not think there is any great demand for it. The menace of the German navy has disappeared. Our Navy, as it stands now, is larger than any navy in the world except that of one country, and even in a war with that nation, taking into consideration our coasts and her coasts, we would have in proportion a larger navy than she has.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator whether he saw a statement two or three days ago in the papers to the effect that Great Britain was going to increase her navy by building four superdreadnoughts, or, rather, super-superdreadnoughts, greater than any vessels afloat now?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I saw that. Mr. STERLING. I think they are to have a displacement of something over 50,000 tons.

Mr. NORRIS. I saw that statement in the newspapers, and I saw just a short time ago, I think in the Scientific American, a rather scientific analysis of what Great Britain was doing, in which it was shown that Great Britain was doing nothing of Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator please refer to the number of the Scientific American in which that statement appears? I get the Scientific American and I would like to refer to it.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not do it offhand; I have not got it But there were two articles in the Scientific American some time ago, before the naval appropriation bill was up in the last session. I had it then in my desk, and intended to use it, but on account of illness I was unable to speak on the bill.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt, it has been admitted by a member of the British Admiralty on the floor of Parliament that Great Britain is constructing the superdreadnoughts referred to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course I can not deny it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me just a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator said that the denial which he saw, as I understood him, was dated——

Mr. NORRIS. It was not a denial; it was a review of Great Britain's naval policy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was before the adjournment of the last session of Congress?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The information I have is that this program has been adopted since that time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that only furnishes another reason why we ought to call a halt. The size of the Navy is a relative proposition. In building the Navy we must take into consideration the navies of the other nations of the world, and they must do the same thing. After there passed through the House and was pending in the Senate at the last session a bill providing for this wonderful increase in the building of battleships, and of expenditures for the Navy, after the Secretary of the Navy of the new administration had declared for the largest Navy of the world, it was logical that other nations would take notice of it and increase their naval program, and that is just what Great Britain has done.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It ought to be borne in mind, however, that no naval appropriation bill was passed at the last session; that opposition developed to it in the Senate, and that by oc cupying the time Senators prevented the passage of the bill; but that the Senate did at that time adopt an amendment to the bill declaring in favor of the Nation negotiating for a limitation of armaments.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and it will probably do that again. The bill did not become a law. It passed the House; it was reported from the Senate committee; and it would have passed the Senate, as everybody knew, and as Great Britain knew, had adjournment not prevented it. Then it was followed by the Secretary of the Navy announcing that we wanted the largest lies of Great Britain was supported by the people of Great that other nations should take heed of that course?

Navy in the world, and is it to be wondered at, Mr. President,

We start out on a program here to build the biggest Navy in the world. It will take several years to complete it. But we forget that there are other nations in this race besides us. We can not carry that out without other nations in our class performing the same kind of trick.

We build a battleship bigger than any that floats. other nation takes notice of it and starts out to build a bigger one. The third nation sees what is being done and goes one better and builds a still bigger one. So on around the circle, and when you get around to the place of beginning the first battleship is out of date, fit only for target practice, it is scrapped, and all the money put into it is gone. So this race goes on around a circle. We increase in this bill our Navy program. It means that other nations, whether they want to or not, must increase theirs, and they will.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield. Mr. BORAH. The Senator is stating now what actually occurred, according to the contention of naval men of England, to wit, that Great Britain had not laid down a capital ship since the war.

Mr. NORRIS. Since the armistice.

Mr. BORAH. Since the armistice, and that she was not proposing to do so. I am only stating their contention, which I have here on my desk. After it was announced, first by Mr. Daniels, that we would have the largest Navy in the world, then followed by the announcement of Secretary Denby, the demand in Great Britain for building an increased navy was such that the Government was willing to go further, and they have put out those four super-Hood dreadnoughts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, nothing new occurred in the United States to cause Great Britain to make any such increase in her naval appropriation.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; something new did occur. The Republican administration came into power and announced, through its Secretary of the Navy, that it proposed to have the greatest Navy in the world, and that was at the beginning of the new administration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was not proposed by the Republican administration to add to the program which had already been adopted and which was already in process of construction, and had been for several years, having been adopted in 1916.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so; but the information was given out that the program was to be completed; that the United States was to take the mastery of the sea and to have a Navy which would dominate the sea. Will the Senator from Nebraska which would dominate the sea. permit me to read a paragraph in this magazine?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator. Mr. BORAH. I read from an article by Mr. Hurd, who is recognized the world over as an authority on naval affairs, in the April number of the 1921 Fortnightly Review. I will not read all of it, but a paragraph. The article states:

The naval situation is a simple one. The fleets of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia have, to all intents and purposes, disappeared; the navies of France and Italy have become obsolescent, owing to the long interval which has elapsed since they were reinforced by new vessels; only three naval powers can now be regarded as first class. They are Great Britain, the United States, and Japan. The strength of these three navies in capital ships to-day and three years hence is revealed in the following statement:

	1921	1924
United States:	9
Ships	. 17	33
	467,250
Displacement, tons	188	1,117,850
Guns
Foot-tons energy	. 11,989,176	28, 597, 176
Great Britain:	20
Ships.	. 32	32
Displacement, tons	. 808,200	808, 200 284
Guns	. 284
Foot-tons energy	. 19,080,000	19,080,000
Japan:
Ships.	. 11	17
Displacement, tons	319,140	543,140
Guns	108	164
Foot-tons energy	7,480,000	13, 415, 400

That was the program as it was outlined, as it was determined upon by Great Britain prior to the incoming of the Republican administration. After the incoming of the Republican administration, when it was announced that this program was to be completed, that the United States proposed to have the Britain and they began their building program. That ends the proposition which they have been telling us heretofore that in 1924 we will have a greater Navy than Great Britain, because Great Britain does not propose to stop building except upon the theory that we limit our building; and so, relatively speaking, as the Senator very well said, we will have no greater Navy in 1924 than we have now.

Mr. NORRIS. But we shall be a great deal nearer bank-

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Let me read this further paragraph:

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Let me read this further paragraph:

On the eve of Mr. Harding assuming the office of President the American Congress adopted a resolution in favor of a conference being called between the American, British, and Japanese Governments to consider a reduction in the plans for naval construction for a period of five years. That resolution is in line with the policy enunciated by the first lord of the admiralty 12 months ago. It offers the promise of a full, frank, and friendly discussion, which may lift from the peoples of the world the fear that they are about to be drawn into a new phase of naval rivalry which must involve them in standards of expenditure which they can not afford.

If the new American Government will make use of the channels at its disposal for obtaining accurate information, it will discover that this country has already given a lead in the direction of the limitation of naval armaments, and that the British dominions have kept step with it. No ship, large or small, whether for the British fleet, a dominion force, or a foreign fleet, has been laid down in this country for a matter of nearly five years—

Mr. NORRIS. To what country does he refer?

Mr. NORRIS. To what country does he refer? Mr. BORAH. Great Britain—since, in short, the American shipbuilding program was adopted—and, so far as France and Italy are concerned, those countries have spent practically nothing on new ships for a period of seven years.

By the time the present American program, with its 152 guns of 16-inch caliber, is completed the British Navy will comprise only 14 battleships which will then be regarded as first class, together with 4 battle cruisers.

That was the condition of affairs up until the inspiration to start rebuilding under the new administration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it disfigure the Senator's speech if at this point I should call his attention to the report made by the Secretary of the Navy with respect to the number of vessels we have?

Mr. NORRIS. No, indeed. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. KING. In the report of December 1, 1920, it is stated that there were in the Naval Establishment of the United States, fit for service on that date, 795 vessels of the following description:

Battleships	13
Armored cruisers Monitors
Cruisers Destroyers Submarines Gunboats
Patrol boats	Į.
Converted yachts	100
Submarine chasers	,
Tugs and mine sweepers	H
Fuel ships
Other auxiliaries	ď
Vessels unserviceable for war	3

The Secretary also reported as under construction 165 vessels of various types, which upon their completion would bring the total number of vessels of all descriptions in the Navy up to 960, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,910,316 and an aggregate horsepower of 12,865,897. Let me say, if I may further intrude upon the Senator, that I have here a comparative statement from Sir James Craig, who recently introduced in the British Parliament the new program—which was necessitated, undoubtedly, as the Senator from Idaho has just suggested, by the prodigious naval program which we are executing—and he shows in that comparative statement the absurdity of the contention made by navalists of the United States about our fleet being inferior to the fleets of other nations. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is nothing mysterious about this increase of armament; there is no unnatural law operating. It is perfectly logical. One nation looks to the other nation when it considers how much of an increase it is going to make in its armament. When we start out on a mad race to surpass the world, we must not forget that we can not run that race alone. When we start out with a program that in a certain number of years will put us at the head, we will find before that time is reached that we will have to double and redouble and treble our program in order to keep the lead, if we get it. Every other nation is going to do the same thing. Britain decided after the armistice to let up, but decided to start off again after she found out what America was going to do, and we are going to have cited in this Chamber and in the House of Representatives the fact that Great Britain is building these great big super-super-superdreadnoughts in order to have us build some a little larger.

That is going to be the argument used, and so it will go around the circle. It is endless, and we are as a matter of fact in a race for the bankruptcy of civilization. That is the thing that will come if men do not come to their reason before. Bankruptcy stares every nation in the face that engages in that race. While they look upon Italy and France as having been distanced in the contest, the flag has fallen in their face before they reached the quarter pole. When the race is ended and we are bowed down to earth with debt and burdened with taxa-tion, those nations that quit in the race early will be the only nations in the world standing upon their feet and doing business.

We can not engage in this mad race without ruin. It means ruin, and I protest in the name of the people who have to pay the taxes at this exorbitant expense that we are shouldering upon the backs of our people. We are too apt to consider that our resources are inexhaustible. We are too apt to forget that nature's law applies to our Nation-to Uncle Sam-the same as it does to everybody else and to the other nations. We can not go on expending money beyond the sources of our income without suffering the penalty. When a nation meets bankruptcy it is worse than an individual. When a nation goes through the court of bankruptcy every step that it takes is moistened with the blood of innocent human beings. Revolutions follow. Bolshevism follows. Always without exception bolsheviks hold their sway where revolution takes place, and we can, by overtaxing the people of the world and the people of the country more quickly than by any other means known to man, drive this world into bolshevism and destruction, into bankruptcy, into rebellion, into revolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] was speaking a moment ago I called his attention to a recent comparative statement presented to the British Parliament by Sir James Craig showing the naval estimates for the year 1921-22. I have before me the parliamentary debates in the House of Commons for Thursday, the 17th of March, 1921, growing out of these estimates. Speaking to the subject before the Parliament, Lieut. Col. Archer-Shee directed attention, inferentially at least, to the determination of the United States to carry into execution a program that called for the construction of a large number of powerful battleships and battle cruisers. He desired to direct the attention of the house to the new policy of the United States, and therefore offered this suggestion:

In the opinion of this house, owing to the great increase in naval strength of other powers, it is necessary that immediate steps be taken to further increase the strength of the Royal Navy in capital ships, and their ancillary vessels, in order to insure that the British Navy be at least equal in strength to that of any other single power.

I call the attention of the Senate to what I stated yesterday, and what has been referred to in the discussion to-day by the Senator from Idaho, that for five years or more Great Britain has not "laid down" a capital ship. When the armistice was signed Great Britain had upon the stocks three Hood cruisers of the most powerful type afloat, upon which she had expended more than $16,000,000. These mighty embryonic ships were broken to pieces and the amount expended toward their completion was completely lost. As I am advised, Great Britain was waiting to learn what other naval powers would do, and what steps would be taken to secure disarmament. She formulated no program calling for capital ships, and sought to secure an agreement looking to naval reduction. She and other nations appreciated the importance of the question of world disarmament or a reduction of the naval and military armament; but the United States declined to approve the league which provided a rational and workable system for disarmament, and, driven by a naval-istic and militaristic spirit unworthy of this Republic and in the face of the experiences of the World War and the aspirations of the American people and their desire for world peace, there will be forced through Congress a program that involves the expenditure of more than $1,000,000,000 in the construction and completion of capital ships and necessary auxiliaries. attitude of the United States has resulted in Japan and Great Britain reconsidering their determination and their programs. We find evidence of that fact so far as Great Britain is concerned in the resolution offered by the speaker to whom I have just referred in the debate on the 17th of March of this year.

Lieut, Col. Archer-Shee further states:

It is a momentous fact that this nation has to take into consideration that by 1925 this great Nation overseas—

Speaking of the United States-will have built a fleet which will practically make obsolete all of the battleships of our fleet at the present day, with the exception of one, the Hood, of over 41,000 tons, a battle cruiser.

In other words, while Great Britain was willing to suspend the construction of battleships-and that was her policy-Nation has announced its purpose to drive through a program that calls for several billion dollars for naval expenditures by 1925, and when the ships are completed most of them will be obsolete, if Great Britain completes the naval program suggested, because of our belligerent naval policy. The speaker proceeds:

To meet that situation the Government proposes to lay down four ships only this year, and that means that these four ships, as the parliamentary secretary has said, can not be commenced until next year.

In my remarks yesterday, Mr. President, I called attention to the fact that the attitude of this Republic has compelled Great Britain to change her policy, and that she is now projecting four "super-Hoods." Those are the ships to which the speaker, Sir Archer-Shee, is referring. He continues:

To meet that situation-

That is, the situation caused by the United States becoming a navalistic power, compels Great Britain to change her program, and she now proposes to lay down four ships. However, I desire to call attention to the fact that none of those war ves sels will be commenced until 1922. I presume there is a hope that the United States will change its expressed determination to carry out the 1916 program or that an agreement may speedily be reached between the naval powers which will permit Great Britain to abandon the tentative plan of four "super-Hoods." Opportunity is to be offered this Nation and other nations to join the moral and peace-loving forces of the world in an effort to secure a reduction of armaments and to alleviate the destructive burdens which are resting upon the people. speaker further says:

It is common knowledge that it takes several months after the matter has passed this House for contracts to be signed, and again six months, in all probability, for the material to be collected after the contracts are signed before the ships are commenced. These ships, therefore, will not be commenced until the beginning of the next year, and they may not possibly, therefore, be completed before 1925 at the earliest. It means that in 1925 we shall have constructed four modern ships, but the United States Navy will be in possession of more than four times the number of heavy ships.

There was further discussion in Parliament, and I see that distinguished Senators are alluded to. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick], is mentioned by Lieut. Col. Archer-Shee, who states that one of the reasons assigned on the part of the United States for the construction of such a powerful Navy is that it is necessary to "direct cable communications with continental Asia and Central Europe." Then he proceeds quoting from the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick]-

We share the common hope that armaments may be limited, and we may well wish to learn from Britain that if we join her in the limitation of naval armaments she will cease to build, not only on her own account but on Japan's account as well.

Then Lieut. Col. Archer-Shee proceeds:

Referring to the Senator from Illinois-

went on to attack the Anglo-Japanese alliance, and the suggestion that it was directed against America, although that alliance has been clearly shown to the statesmen of the United States to be absolutely free of the slightest threat to the United States.

He refers to the heading:

Harding for disarmament. Hint to the Senate. McCormick's speech so interpreted-and then proceeds:

Senator McCormick had just been to interview President Harding, and he went to the Senate and gave his views to contradict the views of Senator Borah, who wants to bring about an agreement for naval disarmament. He—mentioned the Panama differential tolls. They do not want a Navy "large enough to fight England," in the words of Admiral Huse, of New York, in regard to the differential tolls of Panama. That can be dealt with in their own discretion.

Referring to the Senator from Illinois-

The speaker continues:

We are faced with this situation, that by 1925 all our sea communications will be, to a certain extent, jeopardized, because another navy will have taken first place in the world. There is no country in the world which is so dependent on sea communication as this country. There is no other country in the world which has 75 per cent of its foodstuffs imported, and nearly all of its raw material, and which is absolutely dependent for its life upon it. There is no other nation in the world which has such vast possessions all over the world, amounting to one-quarter of the habitable globe and comprising practically one-fourth of the human race.

Mr. President, the record of the parliamentary debate reveals the fact as I read it, that British statesmen construe the action of the United States as being a challenge to the other naval powers of the world. When the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] visited President Harding and returned to the Senate, as he did during the last session of Congress, and advocated a powerful Navy and supported the proposition to drive through the program of 1915-16, the statesmen of Great Britain and the statesmen of Japan can not be blamed if they regarded his position as that of the administration; and when Senators declared it to be their purpose to outstrip the world in naval construction and reported a bill reaffirming that position, we can not complain if other nations take us at our word and regard our program as conclusive evidence of a determination to maintain naval supremacy. While they were and are seeking an agreement for disarmament, or for a naval holiday, we were spurning their propositions and demanding billions for naval construction; that is, we were insisting upon the execution of a program which when completed would cost billions of dollars

Sir James Craig, to whom I have referred, presented a comparative statement to show the strength of the American Navy as well as the strength of the other great naval powers. this comparative statement we have Great Britain, Japan, Italy, France, and Russia.

The report points out that it is not possible to forecast the relative strength in 1924-25, as this depends not only on the progress made in the respective building programs, but also upon the removal of older ships from the effective list. Sir James Craig adds that it is not considered desirable in the public interest to attempt to give an estimate of comparative values, as had been suggested. In this comparative statement an explanation is given of the naval strength of the nations just named. The letter "A" as employed denotes ships which, named. The letter "A" as employed denotes snips which, owing to their date, may be considered to embody lessons of the war. "B" indicates ships built or designed before this period. For battleships and battle cruisers "B" is divided into "B-1" dreadnaughts, and "B-2" predreadnaughts.

Of battleships "A" Great Britain has none. That is to say,

Great Britain does not possess a single battleship that embodies the lessons of the war. Her ships will be obsolete, as the speaker to which I have just referred stated, when our ships are completed.

The United States now has one vessel that belongs to the category just named, Japan one, Italy none, France none, and Russia none.

Of battleships of the "B-1" class—that is, dreadnaughts-Great Britain has 22, the United States 17, Japan 5, Italy 5, France 7, and Russia 4.

Of the "B-2" class—that is, predreadnaughts—Great Britain has none, the United States 18, Japan 8, Italy 8, France 9, Russia 11; but the majority of Russia's are disabled.

Of battle cruisers of the "A" type—that is, that embody some of the lessons of the war—Great Britain has 1, the United States none, Japan none, Italy none, France none, and Russia

Of battle cruisers of the "B-1" type—that is, of the pre-dreadnaught period—Great Britain has 7, the United States none, Japan 4, Italy none, France none, and Russia none.

Of cruisers of the "A" type, Great Britain has none, the United States none, and neither of the other nations has any.
Of the "B" type, Great Britain has 2, the United States has 15, Japan has 8, Italy 5, France 17, Russia 9, a portion of which are disabled.

Of light cruisers of the "A" type, Great Britain has 8, the United States none, Japan 3, Italy, France, and Russia none.

Of the "B" type, Great Britain has 43, the United States 15, Japan 14, Italy 10, France 11, and Russia 2.

Of flotilla leaders of the "A" type, Great Britain has 10, we have none, Japan has none, Italy has 2, France has 1, and Russia has none.

Of destroyers of the "A" type, Great Britain has 123, and we have 232. My understanding from the testimony is that we have 300; so this report underestimates the number of our boats in this column, as it does in a number of the other columns. Japan has only 30, Italy 6, France 19, and Russia 21, a portion of which are out of service; and I might say that many of these in Great Britain, as indicated by the memoranda here, are obsolescent if not obsolete.

Of submarines, Great Britain has 62 of the "A" type and 34 of the "B" type. We have 45 of the "A" type and 58 of the "B" type. Japan has but 7 of the "A" type and 16 of the "B" type. Italy has 11 of class "A" and 54 of class "B." France has 15 of class "A" and 34 of class "B." Russia has none of class "A" and 34 of class "B."

Mr. President, this comparative statement reveals that at the present time we have a Navy superior to that of any other nation in the world. I know that that statement is denied by many, but there are many facts to demonstrate its accuracy aside from the statement just referred to.

I again emphasize the position taken by British statesmen. We can not escape the damning indictment that we have driven Great Britain to revise her program, and to place upon the people of Great Britain additional burdens for naval armament. If we had pursued the path of wisdom and of reason, and had accepted the invitations of the great naval powers for consultation with a view to reaching an agreement for a reduction of armaments, undoubtedly this program would not have been presented, and the bowed nations of the world could have taken new hope in the knowledge that they were to be relieved of burdens which are made imperative if militarism and navalism are to rule the world. Of course when a powerful nation, such as the United States is, gives notice to the world that she intends to continue her naval program and to build the most powerful navy in the world, the suspicions and skepticism and, indeed, resentment are aroused upon the part of other nations. We can not conceive of a nation building these tremendous battleships and at the same time being devoid of some imperialistic ambition.

We attribute imperial ambitions to a nation when it announces a policy calling for a mighty navy or a powerful army. And following an exhaustive war there is greater ground for criticism if a nation declares for the "largest navy in the world."

When Germany was building her navy, and constructing the greatest fighting machine in the world, who could doubt that her ambitions were for territorial conquest, or her purpose to bring humiliation or defeat to some fancied rival in the field of commerce, or of economic and industrial development? very fact that Germany did arm, and that Von Tirpitz permitted to spend millions to construct a navy, excited the fears of other nations, and the result justified their fears; because when the thunderbolts of war had been prepared Germany struck, and the battle lines so extended that we became enveloped, and were compelled to fight for the honor and security of this Nation as well as for the cause of world freedom.

Will the world, with that picture before their eyes, look complacently and without suspicion or skepticism upon a policy by the United States which involves the expenditure of billions for naval armament? Will they not, upon the other hand, following the deductions that naturally arise from such conduct, assume that we have some ulterior designs, some imperialistic purpose?

That assumption is manifested in the statement of a number of English statesmen who addressed themselves to the question in the House of Parliament. Their justification is found in our conduct. They were willing to waive construction, but we prevented them from doing it and compelled a modification of

When the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] returned from Europe and consulted with President Harding and came and made his speech in the Senate of the United States, England took note of it. He was regarded as an ambassador of the President to deliver a message to the Senate of the United States; and when the Senate said, "We are determined to push through that great program," Great Britain very naturally took cognizance of our course, and felt constrained to adopt measures calling for new construction and increased expenditures. Doubtless the statements of the Senator were regarded as expressive of the position of President Harding, and the con-clusion reached that it was the policy of the present administration to have the most powerful Navy in the world. Such statements have frequently been made, that we must have the most powerful Navy in the world; and some of the continental papers and some of the papers in Japan, as I am advised, quoted statements made by Americans to the effect that we should have a Navy equal in size to those of Great Britain and Japan.

Mr. President, we have jingoists in the United States who seem to desire another conflict. They have not been satiated by the blood of the past, and apparently they would be willing to have our country again plunged into war. There are Americans and American newspapers constantly asserting the possibility, indeed the probability, of war between the United States and Japan or Great Britain.

During the last session of Congress the leader of the Republican Party upon the other side [Mr. Longe] moved that the Senate proceed in executive session to the consideration of important questions. I would not speak of it except for the fact that the newspapers the next day and for days following quoted with remarkable accuracy what was stated by the Senator in his able address to the Senate, and the reply which was made by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Will-

Of course, I can not state what occurred in executive session, but the newspapers said that there was imminent danger of war with Japan, that the immigration question and the Yap controversy were likely to provoke conflicts between the United States and Japan, which might culminate in war.

I ask Senators what effect newspaper reports of that kind would have upon other nations? We are presumed to be at amity and peace with Japan and Great Britain, and yet it has been stated upon the floor of the Senate that war with Japan was quite probable and that Japan was the foe we must fear.

Then there are some of our citizens who insist that a conflict with Great Britain is not only possible but probable. There are some people in the United States who are trying to prevent amicable relations between the English-speaking peoples of the world. There are some people in the United States who desire to sow the seeds of discord between this Republic and Great Britain.

Some, we know, are actuated because of their hatred of England and their love of Germany. They would like to see this Republic enter into an alliance with Germany to the exclusion of other nations, and have the two nations flout the rest of the world. They would like to see the league destroyed and Germany relieved from the conditions which the Versailles treaty imposes upon her. A world hegemony-for the United States and Germany-some desire.

During the campaign it was said that when the Republican Party came into power it would not only "scrap" the League of Nations but destroy the Versailles treaty, and that a treaty would be entered into between the United States and Germany under which an alliance would be formed and the United States would furnish raw materials to Germany, and the in-dustries of the latter would thereby be resuscitated and she would become the industrial and the economic power of Europe. America was to contribute to Germany's European primacy, and our supremacy in the Western Hemisphere was not to be questioned.

There are persons who would be glad to see all associations with Great Britain discontinued, who would be glad to see a hard-and-fast treaty binding the United States and Germany.

I might say, parenthetically, that I shall be glad to see the United States and Germany enter into friendly relations, but I am opposed to any policy which divides the United States and her former associates in the World War. I believe, Mr. President, that when the war is over it should be over. I do not believe in maintaining rancor and hatred and resentments. Germany has been defeated. Let her acknowledge her defeat. Let her seek, in an honorable way, honorable relations with the allied nations and with this Republic and I will be glad to join in welcoming Germany not only into the great union of nations of which we form a part—if we can not ratify the Versailles treaty, then I am in favor of a fair and just treaty with Germany.

But make no mistake. The American people are not willing that the United States shall desert the Allies or forsake France and Great Britain and Italy and the other nations which stood with her in the great contest. The American people desire the good will and friendship of the German people, but they are unwilling to betray the Allies, abandon the ideals which inspired this Nation in its glorious efforts. They fought to crush spired this Nation in its glorious efforts. They fought to crush militarism, preserve national honor, and secure the safety of civilization. We want the peace of the world, and Germany is a part of the world, and we must have peace with Germany, as we desire peace with other nations. But we want no war with England, we want no war with Japan, and there is no occasion for controversy between the English-speaking peoples or between the United States and Japan. When we set an example for peace, when we justify our moral leadership in the world, other nations will be glad to follow. Mr. President, the nations of Europe to-day are anxious to know what the policy of the new administration in this country will be.

Mr. BORAH. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should call attention to an editorial in the Scientific American which came

Mr. KING. I should be very glad to yield.

Mr. BORAH. I quote from the Scientific American, for the reason that that magazine has always been an advocate of a great Navy, and in connection with what the Senator said, it seems to me, coming from the source from which it does come, this editorial is worthy of consideration, even by the Senator who is now in charge of the bill. The editorial reads:

WHO IS DELAYING DISARMAMENT?

There can be no question whatever that the country at large was dumbfounded to learn, as it did a few months ago, that over 90 per cent of the current national expenditures are to cover the cost of wars that have occurred in the past and that may occur in the future. It was this material fact as much as, and perhaps more than, the moral aspects of the question that produced the practically universal demand for a reduction of naval and military estimates.

In response to the taxpayers, the Government, through its various representatives, from the President down, has stated during the past few weeks that we must at any cost complete the three-year program, including the six shios of the Indiana class, although these last will cost about $250,000,000. At the same time, in answer to the widespread desire of American citizens that our President should take the lead in calling a conference to discuss disarmament, the people have been told that we can not afford to undertake disarmament alone, and that the President must be given time for due consideration of this matter before calling such a conference. Meanwhile Congress is voting that we spend about $400,000,000, for this year alone, upon our Navy.

Having reference to the bill as passed by the House. The bill Having reference to the bill as passed by the House. The bill as reported to the Senate carries about $500,000,000.

The astounding thing about the statement that we can not consent to disarm until other naval powers agree to do so with us is that the only other naval power that has hitherto surpassed us in strength not only commenced disarmament more than two years ago but has carried the thing to such an extent that, first, it is questionable whether to-day she equals us in the power of her first fighting line; second, it is certain that if we complete our three-year program in its entirety our Navy will exceed the British Navy in capital strength by at least 30 per cent; and, third, if we also round out our Navy, which will be a comparatively inexpensive thing to do, we shall exceed that Navy in actual material strength by at least 50 per cent.

I repeat, Mr. President, that this is from a journal which has for years given attention to the question of the Navy, its proper building, its efficiency, its strength, and its supremacy. It has been recognized as an authority upon the subject, and does not belong to that class who are denominated "small Navy people." The editorial continues:

people." The editorial continues:

Startling facts, but true; for we must remember that the British first-line ships are obsolescent to-day, being with one exception from 5 to 9 years old, and that by the time the 17 capital ships which we have under construction are completed the finest of her ships will be from 8 to 12 years old. The question which we wish to ask Congress on behalf of the people of the United States who wish for economy is: Why is it that, in making these Government statements that we must go slowly in calling for a conference of disarmament, no acknowledgment whatsoeyer is made of the fact that the biggest navy in the world has already made this enormous stride in this very direction? Surely this is a fact pregnant with meaning, upon which the people of America have a perfect right to be informed.

That we are not unduly stressing a minor point, but that we are laying our hand upon a most significant and elemental fact, is proved by the reply to a question raised in the British House of Commons on April 13 as to the number of vessels that had been removed from the naval lists of Japan, the United States, and Great Britain since the armistice. The parliamentary secretary to the admiralty said that the phrase "removed from the naval list" had been taken to mean scrapped, and on this basis the figures are as follows: Japan has scrapped 2 light cruisers and 4 destroyers; the United States has scrapped 35 battleships of the predreadnaught class, 1 cruiser, 3 light cruisers, 21 destroyers, and 14 submarines; and the British Empire has scrapped 38 battleships of the dreadnaught and predreadnaught type, 2 battle cruisers, 87 cruisers, 300 destroyers, including flotilla leaders, and 106 submarines.

With such evidence of good falth before us, why do we hesitate to call a conference for the mutual adjustment of naval strength and the all-round reduction of naval and military financial burdens?

I ask the Senator to pardon me.

I ask the Senator to pardon me.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Idaho is a Republican; I will not vouch for his good standing in his party, but whether his standing be good or bad in the party, he is an able man and a worthy statesman; as a Democrat I want to ask the Senator, as a Republican, why his President-our Presidenthas, if we are to believe the newspapers, indicated that he did not want adopted by the Senate a resolution of the character which the Senator from Idaho heretofore offered, that we should not now attempt to negotiate an agreement or convention with the great naval powers of the world for the purpose of reducing armaments, and relieving the people from the burden of billions of taxes. What reason is there for it?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the first place, I do not think the President has said it. I do not wish to question the veracity of anybody who has reported it to the newspapers; neither do I wish to question the veracity of the newspapers, But I think a mistake has been made. I do not think the President has said that he did not want that resolution adopted.

My opinion is that if the President of the United States had anything to say to Congress upon so vital a matter, he would say it in a manner which becomes the President of the United States, and he would not pass it through subterranean channels to those whom he thought it might affect, and who might wish, by reason of the fact that the fleshpots of Egypt have not yet been closed, to keep on the good side of the President.

My candid opinion is, from a conversation which I had with the President himself, that he has made no such statement, and I take this opportunity to say that if any gentleman wishes it to be understood that the President has said any such thing, he ought to be willing, in view of the momentous question which is before us, to say it and say it publicly, and state when and how the message was given, and just what it was.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think, in view of the fact that the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], who is in charge of the bill and who is not here at the present time, was quoted by the newspapers as having made the statement to which the Senator from Idaho refers, that it would be well to wait and make that charge when he comes on the floor of the Senate, and then he can answer for himself.

Mr. BORAH. I had forgotten, if I ever knew, that it was the Senator from Washington who made the statement or that the Senator from Washington did make it. I greatly respect the Senator from Washington as a Senator and as a man.

Mr. HALE. I think the papers stated at one time that he did make the statement.

Mr. BORAH. I was not seeking to reflect upon the Senator from Washington individually: I had no such thought. I only wished to express the strong belief that if the President had any communication to make to Congress, such communications would be in a dignified and open way and not through subterranean passages and by way of the newspapers.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator need fear that the President of the United States will communicate with Congress or with anyone in a manner that is not dignified and proper.

Mr. BORAH. I assume that that is just what he will do, and therefore I assume he has not communicated in another way. In addition to that, I had a conversation with the President myself.

Mr. HALE. I will say that I went to see the President with the Senator from Washington, and we talked over the question of disarmament, and I gathered from what was said there that the President thought it was not necessary for Congress to go ahead in this way with a resolution asking for disarmament.

Mr. BORAH. If anybody conveyed to the President the idea that Congress was instructing him, they conveyed what is not correct. Congress is not attempting to instruct the President what to do. It is expressing in a manner which the President as a Senator has approved and in a manner quite in harmony with the rights and dignity of the Chief Executive the views of Congress upon a momentous question, in which the people whom the Congress represents are gravely and deeply interested.

Mr. HALE. I presume a request from Congress would be more or less in the nature of an instruction.

Mr. BORAH. No; it is the very opposite. In the Senate Chamber we never pass a resolution instructing the President concerning matters which relate to the President's duties, but we have time out of mind and repeatedly, even when we signed the "37" round-robin proposition, advised the President upon a matter; we requested him at least. I wonder where those 37 have disappeared, who are now so sensitive about passing a simple resolution expressing the desire of the Congress of the United States that something of this kind shall be done.

That was unofficial, was it not?

Mr. KENYON. That was unofficial, was Mr. BORAH. It was signed by Senators. Mr. KENYON. They might prefer an un They might prefer an unofficial round robin. Mr. BORAH. It was signed by Senators. I wish to say, before I sit down, in view of the fact that the Senator from Washington is absent and that it may not be understood when I was speaking that I was speaking about an individual, if the Senator from Washington has a message, while I would much prefer to hear it from the President, I trust the Senator from Washington will deliver the message which the President delivered to him. Then there will be opportunity for the Senator from Idaho to deliver the message which the President delivered to him.

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether the Senator from Washington has a message to deliver to the Senate at the present If he has, the Senator can ask him when he returns to time. the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. As I said a moment ago, I had a conversation with the President about this matter. I did not put it in the newspapers because I did not assume it was for the benefit of the Congress, and when I saw this other matter published in the newspapers I paid very little attention to it. It did not seem to me to be sufficiently direct or sufficiently authentic to call for consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when I was interrupted by the Senator from Idaho in order that he might present an editorial from the Scientific American I was commenting upon the report that the President of the United States had indicated that the time was not propitious for Congress to express its views upon the quest on of disarmament. To put it mildly, I was amazed to read that report. It did not seem to square with the views which I had supposed the President of the United States entertained upon the question of the reduction of armament. I could not believe that the Executive would express disapproval, in advance at least, of a course which the Senate and the House of Representatives had the undisputed right to pursue.

I deny that it is the right of the President of the United States, whether Democrat or Republican, to interpose in order to deter the Senate or Congress from expressing its view upon a question of policy so vital to the country and to civilization as the question now before us for consideration. become an offense for the Senate or for Congress to express its views upon the question of armament or disarmament? Mr. President, in 1916 Congress passed a bill which was stronger than a mere resolution such as that which was tendered by the Senator from Idaho directing and empowering the President of the United States to call a conference or to participate in a congress of the nations of the world in order to agree upon a plan to secure world d.sarmament and world peace

Was that an invasion of the prerogatives of the President of the United States? Would it be wrong morally or legally for the Senate of the United States or for Congress now to say that in its opinion the time has come to disarm or to reduce armaments, or to call together the great naval powers of the world for the purpose of securing a convention that will relieve the peoples of the world from the great burdens that are now pressing upon them?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], the leader of the Republicans, in a speech delivered upon the League of Nations, called attention to numerous precedents wherein the Senate had requested the President to adopt certain policies with respect to foreign matters. He justified the Senate's action, if I construed his attitude correctly, in participating in matters relating to our foreign relations. The Senate has more than a legislative function. It is a part of the treaty-making power. If the Senate desires a treaty with other nations that will secure a reduction of armaments, it has the undoubted right to express its views. The Senate has the right to say to the President of the United States, "It is our view and desire that a treaty be negotiated with the other nations looking to the reduction of armament and to the pacification of the world.'

In the days of Andrew Jackson-and that is one of the cases cited by the Senator from Massachusetts-the Senate passed a resolution respectfully urging him to negotiate a treaty of importance to the United States.

What has come over our Republican friends? tremble to-day in the presence of the Executive of the United States? Certainly, the "fleshpots of Egypt," to which the Senator from Idaho referred, would not deter eminent statesmen and brave and courageous men, as all are upon the other side of the Chamber, from adopting a course that their conscience and their judgment and their devotion to country dictated should be pursued.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] has just indicated, if I interpreted his remarks correctly, that the President of the United States had intimated—and if I quote him incorrectly I hope he will correct me-that this was not quite the time to present the question of disarmament. I would prefer to have the Senator state what was said, because then I can not be put in the attitude of misquoting him.

I stated that my impression, after talking with the President, was that he considered that this is not the time to go ahead with a resolution of this kind. Of course, the Senator realizes that our foreign relations at the present time are extremely delicate and that the country at large is looking to the President to straighten out those foreign relations.

Under the circumstances I do not think, so far as I myself am concerned, that we need advise the President what to do in the matter of making treaties. I think we can safely leave it to him. So far as the resolution is concerned, there was a resolution when the 1916 program was adopted which was passed by Congress looking forward to disarmament. I think we can let it go at that without taking any action at the present time. I am simply speaking for myself.

Mr. KING. I have confidence in the President of the United I believe him to be a high-minded Christian statesman, and desires the welfare of this country and the peace of the world. But the President of the United States is not omniscient, that he is exhibiting great recklessness,

His vision, great as it is, does not prevent other men from having vision and well-founded convictions upon foreign affairs. There is nothing inappropriate in the Senate, if it desires, expressing its views upon international questions. Some Republican Senators—and I do not say this by way of critic sm—and some Democratic Senators, let me add, felt that President Wilson, before he went to France to negotiate a treaty, would have strengthened his position by consulting with the Senate. That statement was made by Republican Senators in this Chamber and out of this Chamber, if my memory serves me correctly.

Mr. BORAH. While I am very glad he did not, nevertheless if he had the Versailles treaty would have been in very much better condition to-day, I have no doubt, than it is.

Mr. KING. The Senator may be correct.

Does the Senator mean that the President of the United States has not consulted Senators about matters that have to do with our foreign relations?

Mr. KING. I am not in the confidence of the President. He has not consulted me. I feel quite sure he has not consulted any Senator on this side of the aisle, but I am not complain-I do recall, however, that Senators upon the other side of the aisle cited the course of Washington, when President of the United States, in conferring with the Senate concerning treaties and our foreign relations, and approval was signified by Republican Senators of such policy. There are numerous examples of the Senate, by resolution, expressing its views upon foreign matters. Henry Clay sought to have action taken by the House in relation to the dealings of the United States with South American peoples. President Wilson in various messages to Congress stated his position upon the terms of peace which should be embodied in a treaty with the Central Empires, so that the country was generally advised as to his intentions when he went to Paris to take part in the peace negotiations. It is quite likely he would have avoided some opposition if he had freely consulted with Senators prior to his departure.

Mr. HALE and Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

Mr. KING. I will yield first to the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], because he rose first, and then I will yield to my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HALE. I do not care to interrupt the Senator. Mr. KING. Then I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Utah that my recollection is that President Wilson did confer with members of the Senate and that he submitted a tentative plan of the League of Nations and of the peace treaty to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is not that true?

Mr. KING. I had that in mind and was about to come to it before being interrupted by the Senator from Alabama, and I thank him for his interruption.

As I was observing, while it is possible President Wilson might have succeeded better if he had consulted the Senate before going overseas concerning the treaty to be negotiated, nevertheless it is a fact that when he brought back a tentative draft, as the Senator from Alabama suggested, of the treaty, he invited the members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to the White House, when a full discussion took place concern ng the draft, and the President responded to the numerous questions propounded to him. Among those who asked questions of the President was the present President of the United States, who was then Senator from the State of Ohio. President Wilson welcomed suggestions, and carried back proposed amendments which were embodied in the final draft of the treaty.

Mr. President, I see no impropriety in, nay, I think that it is eminently proper for Senators if they have views upon a question of such transcendent and vital importance as the one now under consideration, to respectfully communicate them to the As a part of the treaty making branch of the Government their views may well be of value to the Executive.

Why should not the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] be adopted? In view of the statement made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] as to the President's attitude concerning the question of disarmament I am somewhat curious to see how many Republicans will vote for the resolution. I inquire of my friend from Idaho if there was a single Republican who voted against his resolution when it came before us for consideration a few weeks ago?

Mr. BORAH. My remembrance is that it had unanimous support upon this side of the Chamber, as I presume it will again have.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, notwithstanding the sagacity of the Senator from Idaho, he assumes the prophetic rôle as to the course of some of his colleagues, particularly where an intimation has come from the Executive. I respectfully suggest

Mr. BORAH. I said I presumed that I would have unanimous support for the resolution.

Mr. KING. The Senator as a lawyer knows that there are conclusive presumptions and rebuttable presumptions; what dignity this presumption will rise to I venture no opinion.

Mr. BORAH. I must presume it, because to presume otherwise would be to presume an influence which ought not to be exerted upon a Senator.

Mr. KING. I feel sure that this colloquy between the Senator from Idaho and myself will make converts on the other side, and I am sure that Republican Senators now will be constrained, regardless of any fear they may have had lurking in their hearts heretofore, to stand with the able Senator from Idaho in unanimously adopting the resolution which commanded the unanimous support of the Senate only a few weeks ago.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President— Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah, in view of the fact that there are now only eight Senators in the Chamber, where he expects these converts to come from as a result of the debate?

Mr. KING. Sometimes, Mr. President, the truth, discovered or proclaimed in this Chamber, percolates beyond these walls. Perhaps those who are absent in body are here in spirit.

Mr. BORAH. And vice versa.

Mr. KING. It is possible that Senators who are absent when measures are under consideration, and who may be disposed to oppose them, may be impressed with the facts here presented, a knowledge of which reaches them; and it is possible that they may receive enlightenment from their constituents, who are not oblivious to questions here presented, particularly where some great moral issue is involved.

I hope the American people will speak upon this question. I hope the Christian men and women of this Republic will lift their voices against a policy that spells war and is a challenge—a menacing challenge—to the peace-loving peoples of the nations of the world. I hope Senators who are not here, and who have in the past given their support to a naval program which develops and strengthens the militaristic spirit, will reconsider, and that the wisdom for which we pray and the spirit of justice and peace, which should be our guide, will influence the final result, and thus promote the welfare and happiness of all.

Mr. President, the matter before us involves more than dollars and cents, although dollars and cents are important. This bill calls for the expenditure of $500,000,000 directly. It pledges or commits us to the expenditure of considerably more than a billion dollars. It calls for a Navy the maintenance of which will cost the United States more than one-half billion dollars annually. The naval program, huge and expensive as it is, is imperfect and incomplete, and millions of dollars more will be immediately required to complete it. The program is not properly balanced, and hundreds of millions more will be required to complete an efficient and modern Navy. We are to stagger forward borne down by the awful load of taxation which this foolish policy demands. But let us for a moment look at the moral side of the question.

The vital, the supreme questions of life are far above the material standards which alone are followed by some. Wealth may perish and the achievements of the finite mind be destroyed; but the moral and spiritual framework of the universe is enduring. We must fit our actions and our lives into this framework or we fail in our duty and our mission. We should now rise to the moral plane in dealing with this subject. We speak too much of the pecuniary cost of navalism and too little of the moral loss and moral cost which result. What is the just, the righteous course to pursue? What course will most conduce to the peace and happiness of mankind and to the honor and glory of God? Are we serving humanity and the cause of justice by adopting a policy which excites distrust and fear and resentment? We want the confidence and esteem of the world. We want them to love this Nation, not because of its strength and power and wealth, but because of its justice and its unsought and unselfish leadership in the moral world.

The war has left Europe distracted and the people groping for light and salvation. The sufferings and tragedies through which they have passed have shaken their faith in the mercies and goodness of God. They strike out blindly, often madly. In their despair they need help, and the stimulating and inspiring example of a calm, serene, and self-contained people. They have lived in war, and the clash of arms still resound in their ears. This pulsant Nation should steady the world. Thank God, we can do it, and in serving the world we strengthen and serve ourselves. We should cry aloud for peace, we should set the example for peace. We should with burning zeal seek to draw the frenzied peoples of the earth into a serener life and into the paths of peace and fellowship. America must lead the way. If we are to lead the way for peace, we must act in the interest of peace. It is only a few short months since we held the leadership of the world. This Republic, under the administration of Woodrow Wilson, rose to sublime heights and enjoyed a moral primacy that has never come to any nation in the past.

The great and the small nations believe in us—in our altruism; in our humanitarianism. The Starry Banner of this Nation took on added glory and became the symbol of moral greatness and spiritual power. America, the beloved child of God, became the Prophet and the Savior to mankind. We entered the war without malice or hate; we fought not for revenge or conquest. We gave and gave freely—yes, joyfully—in the cause of justice and to establish peace and righteousness among men. That is what history will say of us. Let us not mar our glorious record. Our work is not finished; the task is not concluded. The world needs us still. Our future, our peace, our welfare, as well as our unfinished work, all cry aloud for further service and continued moral leadership. Let us speak fo peace and point the way to world union under the reign of justice.

President Wilson may have made mistakes, but he struggled to attain his ideals—ideals which will survive and triumph in the end. I say he had ideals. The American people had ideals. He was one of them, and expressed in eloquent words the hopes, the aspirations, and the dreams of the people. They wanted peace; they desired to aid the world to emerge from the lurid flames of war. He went overseas seeking to consummate that great end. Europe, as I have said, was torn, disordered, distracted, and she has not yet recovered from the horrors and agonies of the long years of war. We can not expect the people of Europe to take the same calm, dispassionate view of world questions as will be taken by us. We should now point the way; we should call them back from hate and vengeance, from war and the spirit of war, and point the way of peace and justice and righteousness.

If this Nation shall not lead, what nation, I pray you, sir, will lead? What nation will bear the standard of justice and righteousness and peace in the world if it is not carried by this great Republic? We are the heir of all the ages, the legatees of the wealth, moral and spiritual, and the forces which have come down from the past, and as the servant of a Great Master we are expected to use our talents and not hide them in a napkin, to use the parable of the lowly Nazarene. Our light must so shine so that it will illumine the world. America must take the lead in the great forward movements which carry humanity.

How are we taking the lead? Is our cause now leading to peace and world amity? When the nations pray for peace and ask us to join them in an international conference for the reduction of armaments, we deny their appeal; and the Senator from Maine says the President of the United States intimates that now is not the time to participate in so worthy a cause. When is the time? Ah, I will tell you, Mr. President, when the time is if we are to follow the navalists. It is when we are irretrievably committed to a navalistic policy. When we are armed to the teeth and when we have the biggest Navy in the world and, perhaps, a Navy larger than the navies of any two powers in the world, then it will be time for us to speak for peace. The argument ought not to commend itself to just men and Christian men.

Where do you find justification in the philosophy of Christ? Where do you find it in morals? Epictetus and the philosophers of ancient times taught a truer philosophy than that. Marcus Aurelius preached a better doctrine than that; the philosophers of China thousands of years ago preached sounder morality. We, a Christian people and the leading Nation of the world, say to those who are crying for peace, "We will give you peace after awhile; when we are fully armed and have naval supremacy in the world, then we will talk peace and the possibility of reducing armaments."

If two men have a controversy, one of them does not say, if he sincerely desires justice, "When I have beaten you, when I have possession of the property in controversy, then we will talk of compromise."

Mr. President I respectfully suggest that if the Chief Executive of the United States should seek to interpose objection to an effort by an expression by Congress of its views upon the question of disarmament, he would be doing himself an injustice and committing a wrong against the American people.

When the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] had the floor a moment ago the question arose as to the expenditures made by the nations for naval purposes, and in his time and by his courtesy I called attention to naval appropriations made in the year 1914-15. Let me put into the Record other figures.

In 1900-1901 Great Britain expended for her navy-and that included all expenditures for construction, maintenance, and so forth—$145,000,000 plus. I will give the first figures and not the hundreds of thousands. The United States in the same year expended for her naval purposes $61,000,000, Germany $37,000,000, and France $72,000,000.

In 1901-2 Great Britain expended $150,000,000, the United States $68,000,000, Germany $46,000,000, and France $67,000,000. In 1902-3 Great Britain expended $150,000,000, the United States $82,000,000, Germany $48,000,000, and France $59,000,000. In 1903-4 Great Britain expended $173,000,000, the United States $104,000,000, Germany $50,000,000, and France $59,000,000. In 1904-5 Great Britain expended $179,000,000, the United States $116,000,000, Germany $49,000,000, and France $60,000,000. In 1905-6 Great Britain expended $161,000,000, the United States $109,000,000, Germany $54,000,000, and France $61,000,000.

In 1906-7 Great Britain expended $152,000,000, the United States $98,000,000, Germany $58,000,000, and France $59,000,000. In 1907-8 Great Britain expended $156,000,000, the United $80,000,000, $120,000,000, Germany and $62,000,000.

In 1909-10 Great Britain expended $181,000,000, the United States $122,000,000, and Germany $95,000,000. The Kaiser had determined to prepare in a military and naval way to carry out his ambitious projects and he felt the importance of a large navy. For the same year France appropriated $64,000,000.

In 1910-11 Great Britain expended $202,000,000, the United States $111,000,000, Germany $103,000,000, and France $74,-000,000.

In 1911-12 Great Britain expended $211,000,000, the United States $123,000,000, Germany $107,000,000, and France $80,-000,000:

In 1912-13 Great Britain expended $224,000,000, the United States $129,000,000, Germany $109,000,000, and France $81,-

In 1913-14 Great Britain expended but $237,000,000, the United States $136,000,000, Germany $112,000,000, and France

-that would carry Great Britain into the period of the war-Great Britain expended $260,000,000, the United States $141,000,000, Germany $113,000,000 only, and France $123,000,000.

So that, Mr. President, the highest figure reached by Germany for naval expenditures prior to the war and including one year of the war was $113,000,000, and our highest appropriation was $141,000,000. Now we are appropriating $500,000,000 plus, because I make the prediction that if this bill shall pass in its present form we will be called upon to meet deficits and other expenditures for the Navy which will swell this sum millions of dollars. But, as I said a moment ago, and I repeat it, this is not all. This is for maintenance, and only $90,000,000 to be applied upon the construction plan of 1915, which means hundreds of millions of dollars more. In the minority report which I submitted at the last session upon the Borah resolution I showed that this program would involve, before it was completed, in the neighborhood of three billions of dollars for maintenance and for the construction of other craft which would be demanded as a complement to this program.

Nor does that figure provide for such further construction as might be called for. England and Japan, meeting our challenge, feel compelled to revise their programs, and when we bave spent three billions of dollars our ships will be obsolete in the main, and if the naval madness continues we will be compelled to make further appropriations totaling hundreds of millions of dollars. While the world hungers for peace, our Nation, which should lead in the movement for world peace, is to turn a deaf ear to the piteous appeals.

Will the American people follow such a program? I warn Republicans and Democrats mad with this militaristic spirit; you will be rebuked by the American people. The mothers and fathers of our country, the Christian people of the land, will demand now, as they have done in the past, that war shall end, and that their representatives join with the nations of the world in writing a program which will put into operation what the hearts of all desire.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am not going particularly to discuss the items in this bill at this time. I understand that the item now to be voted on is the coal item.

Mr. HALE. I believe it is.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask the Senator what page it ap-

Mr. HALE. Page 35.

Mr. KENYON. I want to say just a word about that, Mr. President.

This proposition is to increase the item for coal and other fuel from $17,500,000 to $25,000,000. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if an explanation of that has been made?

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] put into the Record yesterday certain information about that matter. I think he has some further information to give on the subject.

Mr. KENYON. I hope we shall have that before we are called upon to vote. Of course, Mr. President, I realize that if we have the boats we must have coal for them; but apparently now the American taxpayers are going to be robbed of $7,500,000 on the coal proposition, which leads me to go back in memory to the last session, when we had the coal proposition before the Manufactures Committee. It had arisen under exactly the same circumstances, apparently, that are arising now to frighten the country on the coal situation, and have everybody rushing to buy coal in order to put up the price. They are having interviews sent out, some statements even coming from Members of the Senate, advising people to hurry up and buy their coal. We tried to get legislation at that time. We reported a bill to the Senate. It, of course, slept the sleep that that kind of a bill generally does in the Senate—a bill for some control of the coal situation in this That was laughed at as freakish legislation, socialistic legislation; but we shall be facing-and mark the prediction-exactly the same condition again in this country in the fall, and the same tactics are being pursued to bring it about, and we are reaping one result of our failure to act at the last session in this increase of $7,500,000 for coal.

If we had had some kind of control of this great natural resource of the country, the people would have secured the coal in the winter days to come at a less price than they are going to secure it. This is not a good kind of a day to talk about coal; I know that; but I am simply taking this opportunity to reflect back to the negligence of the American Congress in being afraid to attack that great proposition, being so terrified by the great industries that control at least the anthracite coal in the United States that they were afraid to pass any kind of legislation on the subject. That is one of the items in this bill.

Mr. President, I had not expected to enter into discussion of this naval bill. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and the Senator from 'Utah [Mr. King] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] have carried on the discussion very thoroughly. I wish the discussion could go on for a few days, in order that the people of this country, burdened with taxation as they are, that the farmers of this country, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] so well pointed out, struggling with debt and facing bankruptcy, could understand the proposition that the Senate of the United States shall add $100,000,000 to the $400,000,000 carried in the House bill. Whenever you happen to say anything about the Navy or question any item in the bill, such as $2,500,000 for a hangar in California, something for real estate projects, you are met with the inquiry: "Why are you not in favor of an adequate Navy for the purpose of defending your country?" Of course we are. I be-Of course we are. I believe in a strong Navy under present conditions, and we must have a strong Navy until we can reach some plan of partial disarmament for the world. We will never have complete disarmament; that is a dream. If we had had complete disarmament in the world, the barbarians would have taken the world. But there should be some plan to cut down the present armaments and these tremendous naval expenses. There is no doubt in the world that Great Britain is yearning for an opportunity to join with the United States on that proposition.

I do not understand why we do not do something. The Democratic administration did not do anything, but I am in hopes the Republican administration will do something. I see no reason why the Senate of the United States should not express itself on this disarmament proposition. I want to help this administration in every way I can, help make it a success, but I do not propose to surrender my conscience upon any subject, and I do not believe the President of the United States expects or desires anybody to surrender his conscientious convictions upon any of these subjects.

All through this debate there have been 10 or 12 or 5 or 6 Senators listening. No attention is paid to it. I do not suppose that outside of the Naval Affairs Committee there are 10 Senators in this body who can tell anything that is in th's bill.

The word has gone out to pass the committee amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that during the debates on all the great appropriation bills the Senate is usually empty, perhaps half dozen Senators who are interested in appropriations being on the floor? We spend millions of dollars with but very few Senators paying any attention.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask the Senator if there was any minority report presented on this bill?

Mr. KING. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I am a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, and I think I am the only one on the committee who is opposed to this bill. I did not file a minority report because of press of business, but I hope my dereliction in that respect will be compensated for by the speeches I have made.

Mr. DIAL. The Senator has done his part.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the point I am trying to make is this, that because Senators object to certain items in the bill, because Senators favor disarmament and a resolution looking to that end, they can not be put in the position of being opposed to a Navy sufficiently strong to protect this country.

I desire to call attention to the following provision on page 5: For new construction and procurement of aircraft and equipment, $6,125,750; for navigational, photographic, and aerological equipment, including repairs thereto, for use with aircraft built or building on June 30, 1921, $49,250.

Mr. President, I notice that the Army expense for that identical matter, for which in the naval bill we are asked to appropriate $6,125,750, is only around $4,000,000. Why so much more for nearly the same thing in the Army?

Again, the appropriations for aviation in this bill amount to 8,729,000. The naval aviation service, as I am informed $18,729,000. upon what I believe is good authority, is only about a third that of the Army, and the appropriation for the Army for this purpose is only around $19,000,000. So that with a third of the equipment and a third of the work, the naval appropriation bill carries within a few hundred thousand dollars of what the

We probably have a right to inquire concerning these articles in this bill without being false to the high standards of our country, and I desire to call attention to another item, on

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion, his comparison between the expenditures for the Army and Navy for the same items only illustrates that within the Government itself, within one nation, there is the same competition between different arms of the service that there is between the different nations of the world in regard to the military programs of the several nations. If we build a lot of new battleships, that is used as an argument in other countries to build a lot more, and when they build a lot more we use that here as an argument to increase ours. The item for the Navy of which the Senator speaks will be used as an argument to increase the item for the Army, and after it has been increased in the Army it will be used again as an argument to increase it for the Navy

Mr. KENYON. And that may be true, but I believe that the Army bills, under the chairmanship of the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. Wadsworth], have been held down to a remarkable degree. Last year they reduced the force of the Quartermaster's Department about 40 per cent, and the Army have made no new purchases of lands, buildings, and things of that character, such as are provided for in this bill.

man of that committee is entitled to much credit.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I would like to say, as far as the difference between the Army and Navy in the matter of aviation is concerned, that aviation has been carried on to a great extent in the last few years in the Army, but in the Navy it has not been carried on to such an extent. With the intro-duction of plane carriers, and the probability of having great quantities of airplanes to go out with the fleet, it has become of prime importance to develop this branch of the service, and the committee has considered that in every way aviation in the Navy should be encouraged and kept up, which accounts for the rather large appropriations we have allowed in the bill for that

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Speaking about aviation, I wanted to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not there has been any test between the Army and the Navy as to the effect which airplanes would have upon battleships as to sinking them?

Mr. HALE. I think there have been tests. I do not think they have reached any satisfactory conclusion, however. think in the maneuvers which are to be held the latter part of next month and in July the matter is to be thoroughly tested out, and it is hoped that we can arrive at some solution of the matter.

Mr. BORAH. It occurred to me that perhaps that test was not hurr'ed prior to the passage of this bill.

Mr. HALE. I have never heard any such reason given for not holding the test. Mr. BORAH. I have, and I heard it from one of the most distinguished airplane experts in the United States.

Mr. HALE. In the Army?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. He said that the Navy has positively sidestepped the issue, delayed the test, procrastinated on it, and refused the test in one way or another, and they have been unable to bring it to an issue.

Mr. HALE. I have never heard any such reason given for it, and the committee has never heard of it. I can not conceive that it is so.

Mr. BORAH. In the first instance, I understood they were to turn over the battleship Kentucky for the purpose of the test. After much delay they concluded that they needed the battleship Kentucky for another purpose. Then they suggested that they would turn over the battleship Alabama, and now there has been some delay about turning over the battleship Alabama.

Mr. HALE. I think a test was made on one of the battleships, and certain claims were made about the hits that were made, and there was some question about whether those claims were justified.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and it also appeared that the explosions from bombs from the airplanes had such effect that a photographic view of it was prohibited from being sent out by the Navy. Is there anything to that?

Mr. HALE. I do not know. Mr. GERRY. On those tests that were made on the Indiana the explosions did not take place from bombs that were dropped from the air, but the explosions took place from bombs which were placed on vital parts of the battleship by naval officers in order to see the effect of them, and the testimony of the experts was that even when they were placed on the battleship the resultant explosions were not sufficient to sink the battleship.

Mr. BORAH. What experts? One of the most distinguished experts in the country told me that he would agree to sink in 30 minutes any battleship you people would give him.

Mr. GERRY. Of course, with the Navy unable to shoot back, and the airplane operating not subject to gunfire, which, of course, makes a very different condition than that during war.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know about that proposition. I am simply stating that the aircraft people claim that the Navy refuses the test.

Mr. GERRY. But if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, the test made, when bombs were placed on a battleship so that there could be no question of missing, showed that the explosions were not sufficient to sink the battleship, which seems pretty conclusive evidence that the development of the bomb has not proceeded as far as some of those in favor of it seems to think it has.

Mr. BORAH. I think it was more conclusive evidence that the Navy did not want to go any further.

Mr. President, it has been conveyed to me in the most authoritative way that the Navy is unwilling to have this test; it has procrastinated and delayed it from one cause or another, particularly until the passage of this measure. I do not know whether that is correct or not. I have my opinion about it, and my opinion is that it is correct, because it is conveyed to me in such a way that I am not permitted to doubt it. But now we are building 16 battleships, which some of the great experts of the English Navy and some of the experts of the American Navy maintain can not withstand the attacks of airplanes.

It would seem that if we are going to expend this vast amount of money, as a mere matter of business we would test that quest on before the money is appropriated; and I am informed that the Navy people are unwilling to have it tested until after the money is appropriated.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am merely calling attention to that item as one of the things which it seems to me we ought to have more light on.

On page 6 is another amendment added to the bill as it passed the House, "for the construction of a hangar for rigid dirigible and other necessary improvements at Camp Kearny, Calif., which are hereby authorized at a limit of cost not to exceed $2,500,000." This is an item needing explanation.

If we take the House bill, it seems to me we can pass that without question. It seems to me the items which are added to the House bill ought to receive the most careful scrutiny of the membership of this body and ought to be discussed. Here is an amendment for the expenditure of two and a half million dollars for a hangar at Camp Kearny, as referred to before. Can we not get along without that for a while, when we are talking and preaching about economy in this country?

Again, following along through the bill, there is provision for a summer school for boys. I do not know just what the necessity of that is. It does not carry such a large appropriation, only $200,000, but if it is not absolutely essential at this time that item ought not to be passed.

The Senator from Idaho has said to-day that we are not hearing much about economy. I wish to say to him that he is going to hear a lot about economy when a certain bill that is now before the Committee on Education and Labor is brought before the Senate in a short while, I hope, a bill that carries a million dollars a year for a few years to help save the mothers and the babies of the country, a bill for stimulation of the States in helping on that problem. When that bill comes before the Senate with only approximately a million dollars a year to be appropriated, I hope the Senator will listen to the speeches that will be made for economy. Two hundred and fifty thousand babies a year dying in this country because they do not have the proper attention, thousands of mothers not properly cared for, a great humanitarian measure that passed the Senate at a previous session, and yet now we are meeting with opposition, with the statement that we can not do that; we must economize. A million dollars a year! The Senator from Idaho will hear plenty of speeches about economy and saving the public money when that bill gets before the Senate, although we can spend two and a half times as much on a hangar out at Camp Kearny in California. Do not be discouraged, I will say to the Senator from Idaho. He will hear enough about economy then. On page 27 of the bill I should like to know something about this item, if it is not out of place to try to find out something about it:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to acquire 1,000 acres, more or less, at or near Camp Kearny, Calif., for a site for a lighter-than-air aviation station and to pay for the same an average price of not exceeding $100 per acre out of any funds appropriated for aviation pur-

If that is essential, all right. If that is necessary in taking care of the strong Navy, if we must have it, all right. we do not have to buy a thousand acres of land at this time, let us not do it. So we can wander on through the bill, finding items establishing new bases, new sites throughout the country, especially in the West, and other items of expense.

I do not know whether we here exactly understand the feelings of the people of the country. I do not know that Senators have been out in the farming communities and know how the farmers of the country are feeling just now, not able to meet their debts, burdened with taxation as they have not been for years, discriminated against by the Federal Reserve Board in the days gone by, credit extended, and then told to liquidate at They are not doing much complaining. They are not ters. They have taken their losses and taken their bumps squealers. as no other class of people in this country have taken them. They are putting in their crops to-day under the most discouraging circumstances they have ever faced, with the old crop largely on their hands, with no market and not knowing but what one crop is going to bump into the other.

Nevertheless they are going ahead with a patience and a courage and an industry that might well be an example to the other people of the country. But they are going to inquire, and they have a right to inquire, when it is impossible for them to get credit to bridge over this difficult period, why the American Senate is so liberal in adding $100,000,000 to the House bill in the creation of instrumentalities to go out and destroy their fellow beings. They have a right to inquire and they are going to inquire. They are going to take some interest in the politics of the future.

Is it not a dreadful thing, Mr. President, that the backs of the people of this world must be bent in toil and labor to raise the money to buy things to kill off one another? As long as present conditions exist we have to do it. I do not think any sane man can argue against a strong and powerful navy for this country under present conditions. But why can we not start with the other peoples of the world and try to stop this enormous expenditure of money-one nation after another, as the Senator from Nebraska has pointed out this afternoon, chasing each other in the naval program circle. We are simply answered, "Well, now is not the time. It is impossible to do it For God's sake, when is the time ever coming? After going through this war, with millions of men killed and billions of property destroyed, was there ever a more propitious time in the whole history of the world to sit down and talk it over with other nations of the world? If this is not the time, then the time will never come.

There is no one doubts Britain's position. Britain and the United States standing together can bring about world disarmament, but we are always met with the one thing-Japan! So we talk war with Japan and Japan talks war with us, and we drift along toward a war which would be the crime of all I do not know how it can be handled, but certhe centuries. tainly let us start on it. I wish we could have a commission of the ablest men in this country to go to Japan, men like Root and Taft and Alton Parker and other men of that character, to meet a like commission from Japan, to put our cards upon the table and be frank and say to them, "We do not want any war; we will not make war on Japan, and you ought not to want war. We are not interfering in your plans and you need not interfere in our plans. What is the matter with you, anyhow? Put your cards on the table. If you want war, you will have to make the war, and if you ever make war on the United States there will not be anything left of your islands. But we do not want war. Silly, foolish thing!" Do not you believe that the good sense of Japan-and they are a sensible people-would meet us on that kind of a proposition?

Let this great Christian Nation, devoted to the highest ideals of the world and leading the world in everything else, lead off frankly in this movement. It would not be long until the whole world would join in it. If we do not do it, we are going to hear from a class of voters in this country that have lately come into the right of suffrage. You laugh about it in the cloakrooms. Some denounce their bills in the cloakrooms and vote for them on the floor. But the great, potential, powerful force of this country that is eventually going to drive Congress to take up some bight at a seventually going to drive Congress to take up some kind of a disarmament proposition and that will drive the world to it is the mothers of the country, the new class of women voters of this country. You will listen to them when you will not listen at all to the men. They are going to force partial disarmament throughout this old world. Mark

Mr. President, I rose merely to talk about coal and I have wandered away. I should like to discuss the bill further at some time before a final vote is reached.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator before he leaves that feature?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator was speaking about Japan. Undoubtedly there is a militarist power in Japan, and any conferdable of the conferdable of ence would have to deal with the militarist party; but there is no longer any doubt that the people of Japan are, just the same as the people of Great Britain and the United States, anxious for disarmament. There is every evidence of that. It is characteristic of governments generally to be militaristic, whether the people are or not. I wish to call attention, if the Senator will permit me-

Mr. KENYON. Certainly. Mr. BORAH. To a statement issued a few days ago by Dr. Iyenaga, a Japanese of very great distinction, who, it is said, speaks for his Government, though not officially. He said speaks for his Government, though not officially. He said The Japanese Government would welcome a conference looking toward reduction of naval programs. * * It is utterly foolish to think that Japan could compete with the United States in a program of huge naval expansion without bringing financial ruin upon the Island Empire. * * The dispute over the island of Yap will be settled through diplomatic channels.

Such is the opinion expressed by Toyokichi Iyenaga, director of the East and West News Bureau, and regarded by some as semiofficially reflecting the views of Japan. His declarations, above summarized, as to the general situation between Japan and the United States, the Yap controversy, and Japan's naval expansion, were made in the course of an authorized statement from the Japanese standpoint which Dr. Iyenaga had been requested to prepare for consideration by American readers.

Further on, he said:

Further on, he said:

If either Great Britain or the United States should propose a conference with Japan looking toward reduced naval programs, and as a logical sequence partial disarmament afterwards, it is my profound conviction that the suggestion would be most heartily welcomed by the Japanese Government and the Japanese people. I may say frankly that we Japanese feel that it would be wisest and most proper for the United States to take the initiative in such a movement. It may be remembered that not long ago Mr. Ozaki, formerly Japanese minister of justice, and also mayor of Tokyo, introduced in the Japanese House of Representatives a resolution providing for a conference with Great Britain and the United States looking toward reduction in naval programs and toward a reduction in military programs to be made in accordance with decisions of the League of Nations. This resolution was voted down, one of the chief reasons for its defeat being that Japan feels it would be presumptuous for her to take the initiative in such a move. And Mr. Kato, Japanese minister of naval affairs, said that Japan was willing to consider a reduction in her naval program if the United States and Great Britain would agree to a conference and succeed in devising a certain formula of naval equipment in accordance with the needs of the respective countries as dictated by geographical, political, and other considerations.

In an article published a few days ago in a Japanese journal it was said:

A powerful protagonist of disarmament has spoken in Japan, the rich Rihei Hyuga, managing director of the Oriental Sugar Manufacturing Co. His liberal and progressive ideas, expressed in a letter to the archmilitarist, Yamagata, has perturbed that proud prince and thrown the military party into a ferment.

In a double sense it is to be hoped that Hyuga will not lose his head and will be able to add such impetus to the movement against militarism that the Japanese will turn from their policy of aggressive imperialism and seek the ways of peace and good understanding with all nations.

Among the magnates of southern Japan his opinions evidently are widely shared, but in the north, where battleship building goes on apace, enriching contractors and providing labor with fair wages, the propaganda of reasonable pacifism has failed of its proper effect.

The world must not expect too much of the peace propaganda, even though it is fostered by one of the powerful industrial chiefs of Japan, The militarists have closed the doors against the light as Germany did for 40 years.

Hyper seems to place great dependence on the conception of the though it is fostered by one of the powerful industrial chiefs of Japan. The militarists have closed the doors against the light as Germany did for 40 years.

Hyuga seems to place great dependence on the education of the Japanese, but it was one of the saddening anomalies of German civilization that education made no headway against militarism. On the contrary, the militarists were able to put the nation's savants at work for militarism and imperialism and even the socialists found themselves insensibly indoctrinated with the views of the junker class in so far as the army and navy were concerned. Scientists, philosophers, historians, novelists, playwrights, the schools, the churches, the press; in fact, all the agencies of instruction played the game of militarism for power, pelf, or petty office.

We fancy that the game is being played with as great or greater effect in Japan, where all the sources of information are controlled with a grip that even the mailed fist in Germany did not possess.

To Yamagata the sugar magnate puts the case in this forcible and vital language:

"What Japan needs is fewer dreadnaughts and more education," he said to the correspondent. "Do you realize," he went on, "that 83 per cent of the boys who want to study in our middle schools, which correspond to your upper grammar-school grades, are unable to do so because there is no room, and that in the higher schools conditions are even worse? How can Japan hope to enter into commercial competition with the people of the West when her teeming new generations are not, and can not be, sufficiently educated? This is so fundamental a truth that it is scarcely worth dwelling upon; yet Japan is ignoring it, hoping to succeed without the essential fundamentals.

"Do you know why universal suffrage would not, perhaps, solve the problem? It is because our people are not educated up to the responsibilities of suffrage. And our elected Diet does not represent the will of the people.

"Do you know why in northern Japan the disarmament campaign bilities of suffrage. And our elected Diet does not represent the will of the people.

"Do you know why in northern Japan the disarmament campaign has not gone forward so much as in the south? It is because so many firms and individuals in and about Tokyo depend for their very existence upon the building up of the Japanese Navy, which means contracts to shipbuilders and dock companies and profit to the thousand and one interests which fatten on a swollen navy and on increased armaments generally."

I read that to call attention to the fact that while there is the militarist party in Japan and in Great Britain and in the United States, the people in all three of those countries are in the same attitude of mind toward the question of disarmament, and if one great leader should start the movement, should lead it, and ask for a conference, and the Government of any one of the three nations or of the two nations, Great Britain and Japan, should refuse to confer upon the question of disarmament or should refuse to agree to disarmament, neither one of the Governments could withstand the opposition of its people there. The Japanese Government in such a case would be overthrown, or the ministry of Great Britain would be overthrown if they refused to enter into a disarmament agreement.

We can never hope, Mr. President, to accomplish disarmament if we hesitate because the militarist representatives of a particular Government declare that it is impossible, that they will not accede to it. We can only hope to get disarmament if we organize and direct and utilize the public opinion of the different nations and the moral force of the people of the different countries.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Idaho does not believe that the people of Japan want war with the United States?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly not.
Mr. KENYON. Nor do the people of any other nation on earth?

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe the Japanese people desire war. As I have said-I do not want to be misunderstood-I have no doubt there is a militarist party there; but so far as the masses of the people are concerned, I do not think they desire war with the United States.

Mr. KENYON. Those who would have to go out and fight are not looking for war?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why is not now the time to take the lead in the movement for disarmament? Has not the Senator from Idaho introduced a resolution looking to that end?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Idaho has done so. Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me if he has done so that we ought to pass it.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator from North Caro-

Mr. OVERMAN. I heard both the speeches of the Senator from Idaho on the subject, and I heartily indorse them.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad the Senator from North Carolina indorses them. The Senator from Idaho says that the people of all these nations are for disarmament or for partial disarmament, and I agree with that. Is there no way for the people to get what they want?

Mr. BORAH. Let me read another item which I overlooked.

This is a dispatch from Tokyo:

JAPANESE, IN MASS MEETINGS, CALL ON PEERS TO SUPPORT DISARMAMENT. OSAKA, JAPAN, March 12.

At two mass meetings here yesterday, attended by thousands of persons, resolutions were adopted declaring that the budget gives preponderating importance to armaments, which places an unbearable burden on the nation and is contrary to public opinion. It was decided to send messages to the members of the House of Peers, asking their support in the disarmament movement.

Speeches favoring disarmament were made by prominent business leaders. Prof. Suchiro, of Kyoto University, declared that Japan should take the lead in an international discussion for disarmament. If this were done, he said, all questions which have been the subject of discussion between Japan and America would rapidly be solved.

Some one sent me some photographs of these press meetings

Some one sent me some photographs of these mass meetings which were being held in Japan, and it looked to me not only like thousands but hundreds of thousands of people were in attendance upon them.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, as the able Senator from Idaho has stated, the people in these different countries are for a movement looking toward disarmament. I believe that is eternally true. Now, if it is, I ask the Senator from Idaho is it possible when the people of various countries want something that there is no way of getting it? Is there a false pride that makes us stand back and makes them stand back for fear that if we suggest it to them we are compromising our position?

Of course, my illustration is not good, for I could not have any quarrel with the Schator from North Carolina [Mr. Over-MAN), but if he and I grow suspicious of one another and people go to him and tell him things I have said about him, and they come to me and tell me things he has said about me, and we grow apart and hard feeling develops, just as in the case of nations; if he and I should sit down at a table and talk the matter over squarely and fairly, we would not have any difficulty.

I fear the people of the different nations are suspicious of one another. Let us talk it over with them and end suspicion. Suspicion is the mother of hate and wrong.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator from Iowa, and I should like to make a suggestion on that point. I understand that some oppose the resolution which, as I understand, has been submitted by the Senator from Idaho. The Senator and I represent in part the people of our respective States. I know what the people of North Carolina think about this question, and he knows what the people of Iowa think about it.

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. All Senators know what the people of their respective States think about it. Why do we sit here and do nothing when the leadership is being taken by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] to bring about the thing we want? Why should we hesitate, when we are representing the people, because somebody is opposed to it?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from North Carolina and I,

I take it, are not going to hesitate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not going to hesitate about it a

Mr. KENYON. I wish the President of the United States to go ahead even if the proposal of the Senator from Idaho does not carry, and I assume he will, for I think he is just as much devoted to the idea as we are.

The Senator from North Carolina says we represent the people of our respective States. The people of the United States are in favor of some proposition looking to partial disarmament; there is no question about that; and as to the people who would drag us into war for Yap you would not find them anywhere near Yap when the war was on. I inquire of the Senator from Idaho if he has presented his proposal for disarmament?

Mr. BORAH. I have given notice of it, and it has been

Mr. KENYON. I hope it will be adopted, and if there is time enough given in this debate for it to get to the country it will be adopted.

Mr. President, I rose to discuss the coal question, and I have wandered far from it. I now ask to have read from the desk an editorial appearing in the Washington Herald on Monday, May 5, on the coal question. I make the request because the subject enters into this debate. The coal situation is one of the factors that make it necessary to increase the appropriations for the Navy. It is a question we have got to face in legislation before many days. I ask the Secretary to read the editorial, and with that I will desist for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Norms in the chair).

Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

COAL PRICES MUST COME DOWN.

Coal producers who are berating the public for not loading up now with coal for next winter at war inflation prices might as well save their breath. At a time when steel plants, textile mills, railroads, express companies, and other industries are readjusting war inflation wages, cutting war inflation production costs, and lowering war inflation prices, the coal trade can not expect to stay in the war inflation clouds and get away with it.

What the coal business needs to do to sell its coal is to offer its product to the public at a right price, like any other manufacturer or dealer. If it does not do that the coal trade is not going to sell its coal. It is of no use to tell the public that unless it buys its coal now at the excessive prices demanded for it the public next winter will freeze to death at still higher prices. The public is not going to buy the coal at these excessive prices and the public is not going to freeze to death.

the coal at these excessive prices and the public is not going to freeze to death.

The time has come for plain speaking to the coal producers who think they can sit tight on war inflation wages, war inflation production costs, and war inflation prices to the public when everything must be readjusted. Either they must act to bring about the economic readjustment which is imperative in their business as in every other business—cither they must thus provide the cheaper coal, or Federal, State, and local Governments, backed by all the power that is in the American people, will get on that job for them.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in what the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] has said; in what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has said; and also in the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon]. I did not have the pleasure of hearing the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], as I was in attendance upon the hearings before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads at the time he addressed the Senate.

Mr. President, I can not understand how Congress or any part of Congress is going to defend its position in failing and refusing to take a step toward permanent international peace, In 1916 Congress did not think that it was trespassing upon the rights and privileges of the President when it inserted in the naval appropriation bill of that year a provision requesting the President to call the nations of the earth together not later than the end of the war then raging in Europe for the purpose of working out some plan of international peace, for the purpose of bringing about disarmament, for the purpose of settling international disputes by arbitration.

That provision went into the bill, and my recollection is that there were not 15 Democrats and Republicans in the two Houses of Congress who voted against that provision. As a Member of the other House I supported that provision, and I will support a provision now looking toward the same accomplishment.

Are we to be told to-day that the great Government of the United States, the greatest of all the Governments in the world, is not going to be permitted to take her stand on the side of peace in the future? Are we to understand that this Government of the people is going to be taken over by those who profit by the making of guns and ammunition, by the building of battleships and other war equipment and used to put money in their pockets? Are we to understand that the Public Treasury is to be thrown open to those who desire to increase their fortunes at the expense of the taxpayers of America? If that is not the proposition, what is it?

Where is the danger that threatens this great Republic of the western world? What Government is it that now threatens our liberties? What Government is it that causes us to stand in dread and fear of its power? If there is no such Government, why are we called upon to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars at such a time as this when the taxpayers are already overburdened? It has been intimated that the people who are to profit by such a program are politically powerful. Shall they have their way to the detriment and injury of the rank and file of the patriotic people of our country?

The people who want taxes reduced and who are opposed to committing the United States in time of peace to a program of unnecessary war preparation are also politically powerful. What consideration are you giving to them? Those who are here urging you to provide stupendous war equipment will make Then there are millions of money if their plans are successful. those who want universal military training in the United States. Certain people will make big money out of that, furnishing guns and other kinds of war implements. That will tax the people many millions more. It is wrong to tax the people for the folly and the crime of plunging them headlong down the road of militarism, the terrible road down which Germany went to her fall.

Are we going to sit here in silence and permit that to be done? The boys who fought in France and those in training here at home and ready to go have a right to be heard in this matter.

Mr. KING rose.

Mr. HEFLIN. What is this Government for? It is for the benefit and general welfare of the citizen. Would you say that we are conducting it for the benefit and welfare of the citizen when we permit certain concerns to move upon the Treasury and shovel into their own coffers the money of the people? Shall we permit them to impose additional burdens upon the taxpayers by making curious noises in the dark and shaking a little yellow flag in the face of the American people and crying,

"Look out, there is danger from Japan"

Why, Mr. President, it reminds me of the story of the little red ant that placed himself on a railroad track in the West. He stood up on his hind legs and said: "I see coming in the distance a big passenger train, the Cannon Ball, and I am going to wreck it. When the engineer sees me standing erect on the rail he will be filled with dread and consternation, and when he blows the whistle, giving the danger signal, the conductor will cry out in vain to the passengers, who will scream with fear as they poke their heads out at the windows just before I wreck the train and destroy them all." The poor little ignorant, egotistical ant stood there for a moment, but the engineer did not even see him on the long shining rail. The conductor did not know that he was there; the passengers were unaware of the little ant's threatening attitude, and when the train had passed on there was just one little greasy spot left on the rail where the little ant had been.

If Japan has no better sense than to perch on the rail of this Republic's certain road of progress and destiny, there will be nothing left to tell the story of her folly but a little greasy spot. We are able to do this, and other things if necessary, with the war equipment we now have.

Mr. President, we are told that last year of every dollar wrung from the purse of the people in the way of taxes, 93 cents went for war purposes. Think of it! Ninety-three cents out of every dollar going for war equipment and on the war debt. For educational purposes, the care of our wounded soldiers, farm demonstration work, the building of transportation lines out amongst the millions of people in the way of dirt roads and rivers and harbors, public buildings, and everything else, just 7 cents out of the dollar, and 93 cents is turned into this other channel for war purposes; and the war is over, and I feel that we should do everything in our power to prevent the recurrence of another such war.

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator has passed by the point to which I desired to call his attention; but, if I may recur to it-

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.
Mr. KING. The Senator was speaking about the munition makers, and those who would profit by the maintenance of this naval program. An admiral who appeared before our committee, in response to a question, as I recall, which I propounded to him stated as follows: I was asking as to whether we could not suspend the naval program for some little time, with a view, of course, to securing an international agreement for a reduction of armaments, and he said:

I would have no figure on that; but the contracts have been let.

Let me say, parenthetically, that some of them, most of them, have been let, but upon some of them no work has been done. As I said yesterday, indecent haste was made in letting those contracts, so as to commit us to that program.

Some of the big concerns throughout the country are going ahead, and the stuff is pouring in, and the greatest loss would be in the holding up of the contracts. That would have a very great effect. I understand that a number of our biggest concerns are practically depending on these to tide them over until they get more work, but that would probably be the principal effect of it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, think of that! That is right in line with the thought suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. The farmer could not get any money to tide him over when the crisis was on. He is down, prone upon the ground, and the merchant and banker in his locality are suffering with him. He is selling his substance far below the cost of production. There is no governmental hand that reaches down to him to pull him up and tide him over this awful time of distress; but these other big concerns that the Senator from Utah speaks of say they want this business to keep them going distress in the agricultural sections than there are of any other class of people.

I am for an adequate Navy. We have to-day the best Navy in the world, except that of Great Britain. We have a great merchant fleet, the greatest in the world except that of Great Britain, and in some respects ours is an improvement over that of Great Britain. We have half the wealth of the world right here in the United States. We are the greatest war power in the world now on land. Great Britain may be somewhat a little more powerful on the sea, but on account of the resourcefulness of this Government and its man power we are the greatest war power in the world to-day; and here you are shaking this little yellow rag and saying, "You had better go ahead and tax your people for big war equipment. The Japs will get you if you do not."

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] comes in with a resolution asking for a step to be made in the interest of reduction in armament and world peace for the future. Disarmament? No, no. You say, "Wait until we arm ourselves, until we are by far the best armed Nation in all the world, then we will walk out displaying our armor, bristling with bayonets and groaning beneath the weight of our own war equipment and war burdens, and hold up to the other nations of the world the dove of peace." Why not make the effort now to bring about an understanding with regard to war equipment for the future?

The world is weary and sick of war. We must not permit those who love military glory and those who make money out of war equipment to cause us to lose the great opportunity that is ours as a Nation to prevent cruel, murderous war in the future.

I want to remind Senators on the other side that the House, controlled by your party, defeated Congressman Connally's amendment to this bill which merely suggested that the President extend an invitation to the other nations for the purpose of proposing and discussing plans for disarmament and universal peace. Do you indorse that action of the Republican House? Are we not going to be permitted, as I said in the outset, to come out and register our position on the side of peace? Why should we hesitate a moment in the matter of advocating arbitration and disarmament? The people all over the country would like to know.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything upon this subject to-day.

As the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] has said, President Wilson went a long way toward establishing world leadership for this Nation. We had that leadership and your side of this Chamber deliberately threw it away. We stood on the mountain top of the world in the affections and gratitude of the nations. Must the nations of the world who have heard us preach against big standing armies and stupendous war equipment in time of peace now conclude that this Christian Nation was insincere?

Senators, the people of this country are not with you on this proposition. The boys who offered their lives on the far-flung battle line in France are not with you on this proposition. The fathers and mothers of America are not with you on this proposition. The young men and the young women who love peace and hate war are not with you on this proposition. taxpayers who must bear the burden are not with you on this proposition. Those who make big money making battleships and the gun and munition makers, they are the fellows who sit back and clip their coupons and listen to the clink of Federal dollars as they fall into their coffers.

Mr. President, I want to close with this statement: When we support a movement that looks toward disarmament and the settlement of disputes by arbitration, which means peace in the world, we are following the teachings of the lowly Nazarene: we are following the Scripture, which says, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God": and yet the United States Government by the vote of the Republican House is not permitted to come out on the side of peace so that she can be called a child of God. What will be the verdict of the Senate when this matter which affects the present and future of our country is presented to us? Let us vote on the side of the future peace of the world.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, I present the conference report on the immigration bill, and I ask for its immediate considera-

I might say that as the bill stands it is the bill as it passed the Senate, with some verbal changes. As Senators know, the bill in the form it assumed as it passed the Senate was an amendment to the bill as it passed the House. The House has receded from the changes which it made in its bill, which substantially enlarged and liberalized the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate, notably the provision which exempted from the 3 per cent the subjects of religious persecution, and other exemptions which are contained in the bill as it passed the House, which enlarged the 3 per cent exemptions.

I might say that there is one inconsequential amendment aside from the verbal changes. The Senate conferees did agree to an amendment to the bill as it passed the Senate, which admits children under the age of 18 of American citizens. If they were not admitted it might lead to great hardship. The number of minor children of American citizens who could possibly come in under this provision would be very limited. The Senate conferees did consent to that change in the bill as it passed the Senate. But all the main provisions of the bill as it passed the House, which enlarged the maximum number under the 3 per cent provision, the House receded from and agreed to the bill as it passed the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island about how many children the committee figures will come in under this change?

Mr. COLT. The reports we get from the Commissioner of Immigration are to the effect that the number would be very small, and that they would be brought in only in cases of extreme hardship. Take the case of an alien who has become an American citizen and wants his minor child here, who, of course, was born abroad. This amendment will take that class out and make an exemption of them.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] that a number of instances came to the attention of the conferees-and I was one of the conferees-where American citizens had gone over to get their children. The man having taken out his naturalization papers his wife becomes an American citizen, and the committee thought it would be a great hardship to have the father and mother American citizens and the little children overseas denied the right of entrance. The evidence before the committee showed that the number would not be very great. We felt it was a matter of justice and right.

Mr. COLT. And I might say, especially as the House receded on all the substantial changes.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, then, really the main point of difference between the House and the Senate was on the question of the provision to admit those who had been the victims of religious persecution, the adoption of which might have resulted in the admission of hundreds of thousands in addition to the 3 per cent.

Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The House receded on all those additions to the 3 per cent, except the one proposition of the admission of the children of citizens of America, under 18 years of age?

Mr. COLT. Yes

Mr. HARRISON. And the number will be inconsequential, as I understand it?

Mr. COLT. Yes. Mr. HALE. Mr. President, a question of parliamentary procedure. What is the business now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEWBERRY in the chair). The Senator from Rhode Island has asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the immigration bill.

Mr. HALE. Is not the business before the Senate the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. LODGE. The presentation of a conference report is, of course, a privileged matter at any time. An objection to its consideration can then be interposed.

Mr. HALE. I take it that when the Senator asks for the consideration of the conference report he means to ask that the naval appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. COLT. I had the permission of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], in charge of the naval appropriation bill, to call up the conference report. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the naval appropriation bill, if that Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that, but I ask the Senators who have the immigration bill in charge if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] knows of this report?

Mr. COLT. I do not think he does. Of course, the Senator from Missouri is aware that the bill passed the Senate with only his vote against it. I am not aware whether he knows about the report or not.

Mr. BORAH. The only thing that leads me to ask is that I know his intense opposition to the measure, and I do not know whether he would like to be present or not.

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that the Senator from Missouri is out of the city, in Richmond. I have no information as to when he will return. As I recall, he was the only opponent to the bill when it came to a final vote.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Missouri was at luncheon in the Capitol Building at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CMOOT. He was in attendance on the Finance Committee until about quarter past 12 to-day.

Mr. KING. Col. Halsey advises me that he phoned his office less than 10 minutes ago, and the answer was that the Senator had gone to Richmond. That is the only information I have.

Mr. COLT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report on the immigration bill? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the report.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4075) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as fol-

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That as used in this act—
"The term 'United States' means the United States, and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands; but if any alien leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens.

"The word 'alien' includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The term 'immigration act' means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States'; and the term 'immigration laws' includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens.

"Sec. 2. (a) That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910. This provision shall not apply to the following, and they shall not be counted in reckoning any of the percentage limits provided in this act: (1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees; (2) aliens in continuous transit through the United States; (3) aliens lawfully admitted to the United States who later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory; (4) aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure; (5) aliens from countries immigration from which is regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements relating solely to immigration; (6) aliens from the so-called Asiatic barred zone, as described in section 3 of the immigration act; (7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year immediately preceding the time of their admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands; or (8) aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this act nationality shall be determined by country of birth, treating as separate countries the colonies or dependencies for which separate enumeration was made in the United States census of 1910.

"(c) The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, jointly, shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, prepare a statement showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910, which statement shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act. In case of changes in political boundaries in foreign countries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting (1) in the creation of new countries, the governments of which are recognized by the United States, or (2) in the transfer of territory from one country to another, such transfer being recognized by the United States, such officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910 who were born within the area included in such new countries or in such territory so transferred, and revise the population basis as to each country involved in such change of political boundary. For the purpose of such revision and for the purposes of this act generally aliens born in the area included in any such new country shall be considered as having been born in such country, and aliens born in any territory so transferred shall be considered as having been born in the country to which such territory was transferred.

"(d) When the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year under this act shall have been admitted, all other aliens of such nationality, except as otherwise provided in this act, who may apply for admission during the same fiscal year shall be excluded: Provided, That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number of aliens of such nationality who are admissible in that fiscal year: Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, aliens belonging to any recognized learned profession, or aliens employed as do-mestic servants, may, if otherwise admissible, be admitted, notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of the same nationality admissible in the same month or fiscal year, as the case may be, shall have entered the United States; but aliens of the classes included in this proviso who enter the United States before such maximum number shall have entered shall (unless excluded by subdivision (a) from being counted) be counted in reckoning the percentage limits provided in this act: Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given so far as possible to the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and fiancées, (1) of citizens of the United States, (2) of aliens now in the United States who have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law, or (3) of persons eligible to United States citizenship who served in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, and have been separated from such forces under honorable conditions.

"SEC. 3. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, and from time to time thereafter, prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect. He shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted to the United States between the date this act becomes effective and the end of the current fiscal year, and on June 30 thereafter he shall publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted during the ensuing fiscal year. He shall also publish monthly statements during the time this act remains in force showing the number of aliens of each nationality already admitted during the then current fiscal year and the number who may be admitted under the provisions of this act during the remainder of such year, but when 75 per cent of the maximum number of any nationality admissible during the fiscal year shall have been admitted such statements shall be issued weekly thereafter. All statements shall be made available for general publication and shall be mailed to all transportation companies bringing aliens to the United States who shall request the same and shall file with the Department of Labor the address to which such statements shall be sent. The Secretary of Labor shall also submit such statements to the Secretary of State, who shall transmit the information contained therein to the proper diplomatic and consular officials of the United States, which officials shall make the same available to persons intending to emigrate to the United States and to others who may apply.

"SEC. 4. That the provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

"SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be enforced 15 days after its enactment (except secs. 1 and 3 and subdivisions (b) and (c) of sec. 2, which shall take effect immediately upon the enactment of this act) and shall continue in force until June 30, 1922, and the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted during the remaining period of the current fiscal year, from the date when this act becomes effective to June 30, shall be limited in proportion to the number admissible during the fiscal year 1922."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LEBARON B. COLT, WM. P. DILLINGHAM, WILLIAM H. KING, Managers on the part of the Senate. ALBERT JOHNSON, J. WILL TAYLOR, JOHN E. RAKER, Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report,

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 13, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our gracious Heavenly Father, we bless Thee for Thy holy ministries. While the consciousness of our own existence was lost in sleep Thou wert our guardian angel. We come again asking the sweet sense of Thy presence, as Thy love and wisdom are never exhausted. Pity us in our daily weakness, and help us in our daily labor. Answer all silent cries of those who are burdened and heavy-laden, and turn their tears into jewels and their sighings into prayers. Bless all families that are separated. Be there as well as here, and here as well as there, and may all hearthstones be as true as they are familiar, and as familiar as they are true. Through Jesus Christ our Lord.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUORUM-CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is obvious that there is no quorum present.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be suspended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to suspend further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

FUTURE TRADING IN GRAIN.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The unfinished business of the day is the bill taxing grain futures, on which the previous question was ordered on the third reading. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] demanded the reading of the engrossed bill. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to withdraw it?

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his request.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. Mr. HILL rose

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maryland rise?

Mr. HILL. To offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit. Is he opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland also offers a motion to recommit. Is he opposed to the bill?

Mr. HILL, I am.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Texas a member of the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Maryland a member of the committee?

Mr. HILL. I am not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a motion to recommit with instructions is privileged over a motion to recommit without instructions. My motion is to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. BLANTON. The preferential question was made before the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Regardless of that, the rule is clear. The Chair can entertain a motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. BLANTON. I submit to the rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to recommit the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. On motion of Mr. TINCHER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. YOUNG. H. R. 2435, the emergency tariff bill, be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments disagreed to, and that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the emergency tariff bill be taken from the Speaker's table, all the Senate amendments disagreed to, and the conference asked by the Senate agreed to. Is there objection?

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 90.

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 2435, being a bill entitled "An act imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes," be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, with the Senate amendment thereto, to the end that the Senate amendment be, and hereby is, disagreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendment be, and hereby is, agreed to, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees.

We CAMPRIEL of Kansas, We Speaker the senate of the senate

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution states in plain terms the purpose it has in view. Objection having been made to sending the bill to conference, the only remedy left to the House is to adopt this resolution, send the bill to conference where the differences between the House and the Senate may be compromised and agreed upon, and the legislation finally passed. If I were opposed to the bill, I would oppose sending it to conference. Being in favor of the bill, I am in favor of sending it to conference so that the differences between the House and the Senate may be agreed upon as early as possible. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in the first place I wish to direct attention to the fact that this rule provides for a condition which does not exist. The rule reads that the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendment be and is hereby agreed to. That is not the language of the request of the Senate, as gentlemen will see by examining the Record. They did not ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes. There had been no disagreeing votes. They asked for a conference on the bill and amendment, as I now recollect it. What sort of a situation that presents I leave for the future to determine.

In the next place, I wish to say that the Senate struck out all of Title II of the House bill and has inserted in lieu thereof Titles II, III, IV, and V as a Senate amendment. This Senate amendment deals in part with subjects entirely new, not mentioned in the House bill when it passed the House. Now it is proposed to send the bill to conference instead of to the Committee on Ways and Means. The conferees will meet. They will make up a conference report which will be returned to the House. The House will have to act upon it in advance of the Senate, and gentlemen will be confronted with the proposition of having to vote the conference report up or down as a whole, without the slightest opportunity of giving any independent consideration whatever to these new subjects that have been placed in the bill by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman states that the Senate put new subjects in the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; the dyestuff matter was not in the House bill.

Mr. WALSH. It was placed there by way of tariff legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; but it is a new subject matter. Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that it is extremely bad policy for this body which is charged under the Constitution with initiating revenue legislation to permit the Senate to place upon a House revenue bill entirely new subject matter when that subject has not had independent consideration in the House and send it to conference without giving even an opportunity for amendment. I dare say that there is not now a gentleman on the floor who is able to explain what is meant by some of the features that have been put on the bill in the Senate. Information which they derive they will derive in conference, when they call persons before them to inform them what it means. Gentlemen, that information ought to be obtained in the Committee on Ways and Means. These new subject matters ought to be brought back to the House, and the House ought to have an opportunity to consider them, and House Members should not be placed in a position of having to vote up or down the conference report as a whole without chance of amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman speaks about a number of different subject matters. There is only one, a simple provision extending the existing law to cover six months, and that is not new

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is the dyestuff title?
Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; it is not new legislation; it is simply extending the period of the legislation passed during the

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was not considered in the House in connection with the tariff bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is a perfectly simple matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state to the House that he now understands the other provisions put on by the Senate outside of the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Indubitably. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has no doubt as to the meaning. Does the gentleman intend to explain it to the House while discussing this rule?

Mr. LONGWORTH. When it comes back from conference. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is not a very good form of legislation. This House is charged with the duty, under the Constitution, of originating revenue legislation, and it should have the opportunity of passing upon new matters injected by the Senate under the general rules and not have to take it or reject it in a conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House what attitude was taken by the House when the Underwood tariff bill came back from the Senate and went to conference?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was sent to conference. Mr. STAFFORD. Without having been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. It contained thousands of items in dispute, and was not sent back to the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But there was not injected into the Underwood bill a lot of new subject matters which was not in the bill before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there was a lot of new subject matters put into the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Young].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. Garrett of Tennessee] seems to think that the House ought to have an opportunity to discuss the Senate amendment before it goes to the conferees. I want to remind him that he had an opportunity to-day to have as much time as he wished for the discussion of this matter. 'It was entirely his option to say how much time he wanted for that purpose. I want to say, further—and this is in answer to a number of questions that have been asked to-day—there is no question of bad faith involved in respect to this bill so far as the Finance Committee of the Senate is concerned. It is true that there was an understanding between the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House that it would be highly undesirable to attempt to change Title I of the bill, and that it would not be wise to attempt to add any new items to it. We were all agreed as to that. That understanding has been lived up to by the mem-

There was no understanding bers of the Finance Committee. renched as to the antidumping feature of the bill, or in any other respect except Title I of the bill.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle seem to forget that this is an emergency bill. It is not going to do any good if we keep on considering the bill in the Ways and Means Committee until the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner] is entirely ready and willing that the bill should be reported out and passed. If this bill is going to do any good it ought to be passed now, not six months from now. Gentlemen who have studied this subject understand well the great emergency which exists.

At the time this bill was first discussed at the last session of Congress there was about a two years' supply of wool on hand in the United States. Wool has been coming in very fast ever since. It has been coming by the shipload. The surplus has It has been coming by the shipload. greatly increased. Wool has become a drug on the market, so that it is absolutely impossible to sell it at any of the interior markets, and it is not possible to get a bid even at Boston, the chief market for wool. The same is largely true with respect to frozen meat, which has been coming in in tremendous quantities. That has, of course, affected the price of live stock to such an extent that it is now so low in value bankers throughout the West, who are many of them very greatly in need of the money, can not foreclose and realize enough on their mortgages to make it worth while, even if they had the disposition to do so. Wheat is coming in from Canada at the rate of almost half a million bushels a day.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. YOUNG. I can not, as I have only five minutes. If we wait for 30 days or even 10 days this law will not do us very much good, so far as wheat is concerned. I mention this to show the highly emergent character of the legislation and the need for immediate action.

The time of the gentleman from North Da-The SPEAKER. kota has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the rule submitted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Camp-BELL], according to his explanation, is for the purpose of sending this bill to conference. I deny that that is the object of the rule. The object of this rule is to prevent the House of Representatives from considering the Senate amendment. was surprised when the gentleman from Kansas told the House that the adoption of this rule was the only method by which you could get this bill to conference and get an agreement between the two Houses. The gentleman from Kansas shakes his head, but he did make the statement, and if he permits his statement to stay in the RECORD as he delivered it it will show that that is just what he did say.

Gentlemen of the House, let me show you what you are doing by this rule. You are sending a bill to conference that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the chairman of the committee, knows absolutely nothing about, and that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Young], who is in charge of the bill, knows nothing about. There is not a man on the floor of the House, not a single one—and I challenge him if there is, to rise in his place—who can give an explanation of what the Senate amendment provides. You have an opportunity to consider the bill; you have an opportunity to amend it, if you will, under the rules of the House. You can send it to the Ways and Means Committee and bring it back into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and consider it under the 5-minute rule, and have an opportunity to amend it or perfect it, if you desire. Why do you take that privilege away from yourselves? Why do you deny yourselves the right to legislate intelligently in the House of Representatives, when you can do it just as easily and almost as quickly as you can under this rule? You have a majority of 170. Suppose the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FORDNEY] should let this bill go to the Committee on Ways and Means, as it would under the rules of the House. These are your rules, and they are good rules. Let it go to the Committee on Ways and Means, and within an hour from this moment the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] can report this bill back to the House of Representatives, and to-morrow morning you could go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill, and consider it under the 5-minute rule, and perfect the Senate amendment, if you choose to do so. That is one way to rapidly consider the legislation, and consider it intelligently.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Yes. Mr. GARNER.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How frequently has it happened in the gentleman's experience that a bill goes to conference in any other way except either by unanimous consent or under a rule?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, the gentleman from Ohio talks about how frequently this is done. We have ceased to legislate here in the House of Representatives under the rules of the House,

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman cite me an instance during the eight years when his party was in power where any bill went to conference except by unanimous consent or under a rule?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, we carried our bills to conference either by unanimous consent or by going back to the committee, except in certain instances, but we did it under the rules of the House in all tariff legislation. In the Underwood bill we sent it back, I remarked to the venerable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] this morning something which I think all will recognize as a truism. I said, "Uncle Joe, in the days of yourself and John Dalzell you were pikers compared with what they to-day with reference to special rules." I remember when the gentleman from Illinois occupied the chair and he and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dalzell, would resolve to do so and so and bring in a special rule, but I venture the assertion now that he did not bring in 25 per cent of the number of special rules in order to consider legislation that you do to-day. can you not consider legislation under the general rules of the House? Most of the legislation here is considered either by unanimous consent or under a special rule.

What does this bill do, this sacred bill, in which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said we must not cross a "t' dot an "i" when we were considering it in the House? Some of you gentlemen thought it ought to be amended, but he appealed to you over on that side, and said there was a gentleman's agreement; that the Senate had agreed if we would not amend this bill it would be passed just exactly as we passed it. "I have agreed that we will not amend this bill, and therefore want my Republican colleagues to keep that agreement." You did keep it, and what happened? It does not seem that a gentleman's agreement holds as good in another body as in this. They struck out 10 pages of the Young tariff bill and substituted the Senate's 18 pages. They not only did that, but inserted new matter proposed to extend a law that is an existing law, still on the statute books. Why, the dyestuffs law is still on the statute books, Mr. Longworth, and why do you want to extend it for six months longer when it is already on the statute books?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is completely misinformed. That is not the dye law at all; it has nothing to do with the dye law.

Mr. GARNER. Y understand it is not the dye law, but it is an embargo to be placed on the dye business now existing in the law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; it is a law which authorizes—Mr. GARNER. What law?

Mr. LONGWORTH. In regard to the War Trade Board. Mr. GARNER. The amendment of the Senate abolishes the War Trade Board and transfers its activities to the Treasury Department and prolongs its life six months. The War Trade Board is not dead yet.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It will die on the 1st of July.

Mr. GARNER. It is going to extend its life beyond the 1st Now you propose to extend it for six months and transfer the activities from the War Trade Board to the Treasury Department,
Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman opposed to that provision?

Mr. GARNER. I want to hear some argument in reference The gentleman from Ohio does not want to get any information about the matter; he does not want it to go to the Committee on Ways and Means and send for Treasury officials, send for the board of appraisers, send for members of the Tariff Commission, send for men who know something about this matter and consider it intelligently, and in that way report it back to the House, in order to give some information about the matter. Here is what you are doing: You younger Republican Members do not amount to anything. At least I think you are coming to that conclusion from the expressions of some of you, and probably you do not. You are a cog, however, in this machine. You vote away your right to amend by adopting this rule. You would have the right under the rules of the House to offer an amendment to this if it were considered under the rules of the House. You are going to take that away from yourselves to-day by adopting a special rule, and so you are not going to give yourselves the humble privilege of even offering an amendment to a bill pending in the House of Representatives. Why, you can not expect to get out of the hands of the organization and ever assert yourself in the House of Representatives and impress upon your constituency or the House itself whether you are worthy to sit here or not if you are going to sit dumbly by and permit the organization or permit the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Michigan and a few other Members to tell you just what you shall and shall not do. quicker you begin to assert yourselves in the House of Representatives and assert your rights under the rules of the House the better it will be for you and the country, in my judgment, and for that reason I appeal to you to-day to vote down this rule and consider this bill under the rules of the House and offer amendments, if you think it ought to be amended. Are you willing to say this is perfection? It may be; it may be that after due consideration of the matter we would want to concur in the Senate amendment. Now, if we did, why do you take away from yourselves the right to do it? Mr. Speaker, this is the beginning of fiscal legislation which indicates the policy which the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Michigan propose to follow. I am just wondering if the gentle-man from Michigan, when he brings in his tariff bill, intends to pass it under the rules of the House or under a special rule furnished by the gentleman from Kansas. I see the gentleman from Michigan smile, but I would like to know what is in his mind. However, he declines to respond. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I will tell the gentleman in a minute. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, there has never been a tariff bill sent to conference that I can remember since I have been a Member of this House that did not carry some important new measure to be settled in conference. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] states that this is a new provision in this bill which provides in reference to the licensing board in regard to dyestuff's. Last year this House, after extended debate on the dyestuff bill, known as the Longworth bill, carried a provision almost identical with the one provided for by the Senate in this bill, and if I am fortunate enough to be one of the conferees who take up the consideration of this bill I am going to go over there and stand by the House provision. I believe that the provisions added to this bill by the Senate relating to the antidumping bill are wholly ineffective and in many instances unconstitutional. [Applause.] The gentleman well knows that this question has been before the House and fairly aired. But the gentleman says, "Oh, yes; there are a large number of new Mem-But let me call his attention to the fact that they bers here." are all Republicans. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And they know a good thing when they see it. They have confidence in the conferees. The provision written in this law as to antidumping is in substance the same as the antidumping provision in the act of 1913, known as the Underwood tariff law, which never was intended to be put in operation. There never has been one single instance in which an attempt has been made to enforce its provision, because under the provisions of that law a conspiracy must be proven between the foreign exporter and the importer.

That is impossible, and the men who wrote the law knew it. Gentlemen, this antidumping provision which we added to the bill is absolutely necessary. Only the day before yesterday both Great Britain and Canada adopted such a provision. The reso-lutions had been offered before, and under their law such resolutions become effective the minute they are introduced. They may be changed under the English or Canadian law, and the rates raised or lowered. Great Britain added 331 per cent duty, and Canada in her provision makes a rate not of 663 per cent, as we did to overcome the depreciated currency, but fixed it at 50 per cent. That is much more drastic than the provision in the bill that is now going to conference.

I do not wish to take up much time of the House. Personally I do not agree with the Senate amendment, and for that reason I want the bill to go to conference. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner], one of the best fellows on earth—though nobody but myself knows it [laughter]-knew he was going to object to unanimous consent, He told me so. And the only way to get this bill to conference to-day was by this rule; and, you rascal, you know it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan

has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic].

Mr. McClintic. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I desire to use the five minutes that have been allotted to me for the purpose of making a statement to the House relative to the Record, which I think will be satisfactory to every Member here, and I hope that no one will object.

As many of you know, for several months I have exercised my own prerogative by objecting to certain extensions which were sought for the purpose of printing speeches in the Record not made on the floor of the House. At the time I did this I thought the Record needed some attention, and I wish to say to the Members of the House that the motives which prompted me were of the highest, and that I never at any time sought to show any partiality to either a Democrat or a Republican.

A few days ago the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Young], who has charge of this bill, was generous enough to refer to my work in this connection, using the following language:

Mr. Young. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to do so, I wish to say that I believe we have had the most accurate record of the debates and proceedings during the past few months of any time during the past eight years, and it has been due to the fact that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic] has insisted that the record kept here must be a record of what is actually said and done. I really think it is worth while to have it kept that way. As far as I am concerned, I feel as though the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic] ought to be complimented for taking it upon himself to see that the record of this House is kept in that way.

I appreciate very much his kind statements. say this to the House, that I find it is practically impossible to look after one's duties in connection with the various departments and be present during the consideration of every piece of legislation. I do not wish any Member to ever say that I kept some Representative from having a privilege when another person obtained it at a time when I was not present. So I want to say to the membership of this House that I feel you are to be congratulated for the splendid cooperation you have given me in the past, and I hope that it will not be necessary at any time in the future for me to again interpose an objection to any request that may be made by any Member of this House. plause.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Mr. Speaker, answering the violent objections that have just been made to this rule, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is rather regrettable, I think, that we are forced to invoke a rule to send this bill to conference. We had hoped it would go there in the ordinary way, by unanimous consent. Any other method, any objection to unanimous consent, simply serves to delay this emergency legislation a little longer. We have delayed it too long already, gentlemen of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.] This bill ought to have been passed four months ago, and would have been had it not been for a veto by the then occupant of the White House. It ought to have passed both this House and the Senate a month ago, notwithstanding the veto, had it not been for what I will not call obstructive tactics, but, at any rate, unreasonable delay.

I regret also that my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] should have brought politics into this matter. There is no politics in the only portion of the bill which is still left open to conference. One of the titles was adopted unanimously, practically, in the Senate, and this provision that both the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner] are raising such a hullabaloo about, namely, the extension of the power to prevent the unlimited importation of German dyes, received 13 Democratic votes in the Senate. Among them there was no less a person than the late chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator Simmons, and for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas I will read the remarks of that great Democratic leader upon this point. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons] said with regard to the so-called dye paragraph:

Mr. President, I think it is the sense of this country that we have not yet reached that point in the development of the dye industry in this country where it is able adequately to meet the requirements of preparedness in case of war; so that, as I regard it and as I think it ought to be regarded, this is a mere extension of a provision necessary to the national defense until we can have reasonable time to develop that industry to the point of making it adequate to supply our demands in case of hostilities between this country and some other country in the world. It is important that we are prepared for all eventualities and that we propose to continue that state of preparedness.

I commend that to the attention of gentlemen upon that side of the House. Why, even our late colleague, the Hon. J. Thomas Heflin, voted for this, and yet you bring a question of party politics into it.

This is a very simple proposition. There are two points of difference only between the House and the Senate. The Senate has redrafted the antidumping provision of the law, for which a few years ago every single Democrat in this House voted. It is simply a question of accommodating differences, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and other members of the Ways and Means Committee could delay this thing for weeks by sending for various alleged authorities from the Treasury and other departments in order to do what the conferees can very well do, and what I believe they can do in a very few hours.

So far as the so-called dye provision is concerned, all it does is to extend the present powers of the War Trade Board, which expire either on the passage of the Knox resolution or some similar resolution, declaring peace with Germany, or would expire on the 1st of July because of lack of appropriations. It does not change a particle a law which I believe was passed unanimously in this House, and carried in one of the preparedness bills. And that is all we have to do in conference, either to determine to leave it in our bill or to leave it out. other method than the one we are pursuing to-day, gentlemen, is simply to delay the passage of this emergency legislation. And I submit there is not a man on this side of the House, and there ought not to be a man on that, who will be opposed to sending this bill at once to conference and getting rid of this [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly]. Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] give his attention to this dyestuff and chemical provision, because in my opinion it should be unanimously approved by the Members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, this provision in the emergency tariff bill concerning dyestuffs and chemicals is recognition of the fact that we are on the verge of a new age. We have had the stone age and the iron age and are now in the electrical age. Just ahead is the chemical age, and with an enlightened policy America will be the leader of the world in its accomplishments.

Coal tar is the most important basic material in the chemical world. In my own district for many years countless tons of coal tar from the old-style beehive coke ovens were wasted. Then it was discovered to be one of the most valuable products

Now, in the new ovens it is being conserved and used for a thousand uses. Coal tar is the essence of the forests of by-gone years. It is one of the strategic products for war and peace. It wounds and heals. It supplies both munitions and medicines.

Every ton of coal produces 120 pounds of tar. Out of the tar come 10 crude oils, which are converted into 300 secondary products or "intermediates." Through combination of these chemical elements many thousand products are possible. There are to-day at least a thousand separate dyes produced from coal tar.

The entire business has been dominated by Germany. The man who first made a dye from coal tar was an English chemist. In less than two years Germany had a complete monopoly of its production.

When the war broke out we were importing nine-tenths of our dyes from Germany. Only seven firms and 528 persons were employed in the dye industry in the United States. Cut off from our supply by the war, we suffered greatly. I saw the effect in the publishing business, when the manufacturers of printing ink found it impossible to make a satisfactory ink without the German materials. Many other lines of business

But over and above all was the fact that the dye business and the high-explosive business are the same. From the same coal tar comes picric acid, used in munitions. Within 24 hours it is possible to turn a dye plant into a munitions plant. Germany did that very thing, and, having a monopoly of the dye industry, she had a monopoly of high explosives until American energy and ability overcame all handicaps.

To-day we have 184 concerns engaged in this industry. In my district and elsewhere are young, alert, efficient business men engaged in this new line. They can compete with Du Ponts, but they can not compete with Germany. Without assistance they will be stifled under an avalanche of German goods, made by those who know that control of this industry means to dominate the age of chemistry, with all that means both in peace and war.

I believe this section of the emergency tariff bill to be the best in it. I am glad the Senate added it to the measure as it left the House, and I hope the conferees will agree to it, so that America may be independent of any other country in this most strategic industry. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to tender my congratulations to my friend from Texas [Mr. Garner], who made some remarks on this conference report, on the ease with which he has turned a political somersault during the progress of this legislation. There was a time when the gentleman from Texas !

was enthusiastically in favor of this bill. Now it seems he is equally positive that it should be delayed and not passed.

He says he wants information. Information about what? Does he want information about the antidumping provision, that we have been discussing here for 10 years or more? Does he want information about this license system on dyes, which we discussed for days at a previous session, in which discussions the gentleman, if I remember rightly, took part? No. What the gentleman from Texas wants and what he is trying to do is to delay the passage of this bill, too long delayed already; so long delayed, indeed, that I fear it will not be able to meet the emergency now upon us, when every day increases the urgency and the necessity for its passage. But, gentlemen of the House, we on the Republican side, recognizing its necessity, intend to put it through as rapidly as possible. [Applause on the Republican side. I

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, after the illuminating contributions that have been made to this discussion by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] upon the details of this Senate amendment, it may seem somewhat presumptuous to insist on the House further maintaining its proper dignity and its rights in regard to revenue legislation. But nevertheless there are a few of us, a small band, but a Spartan band [laughter], that still insist upon the maintenance of those rights and the assertion of the dignity of the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Democratic side.

I called attention in the opening of this very vigorous debate to the fact that the Senate had struck out Title II of the House bill and had inserted as one amendment four titles. All that the House had in the bill, other than tariff features, the Senate has materially changed, and then, in addition to changing that, the Senate has added this new dyestuff matter, concerning which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly] talked so eloquently, and concerning which another friend of mine, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess], on a former occasion had a few remarks to make. I do not know how Mr. Fess feels about the matter now. My recollection is that he then denounced the dye proposition as wholly indefensible and outrageous. It may be that it is to prevent the gentleman from Ohio from having the opportunity of exposing what he conceives to be the iniquities of this dye provision as contained in the bill under the 5-minute rule in the House that it has been determined to send this matter to conference and have the conferees buck and gag and tie him up on it as a party proposition and place him in the position where he is bound to vote for that which he denounced as evil in order to secure other provisions of the bill. I say perhaps in view of the great prominence of the gentle-man from Ohio that may be one of the principal reasons why this ruthless, cruel, brutal majority has determined to drive this thing through in this outrageous manner. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that everybody has been impressed with the sincere, high-minded, but persistent opposition to this rule that the debate has thus far evidenced.

However, I congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett on his closing remarks as being the only statement made on that side that approached real debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me in order to allow me to read the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] concerning this bill on a former

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If I had the time I would be glad to yield, but I fear I have not the time, [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I am still anxious to get this bill into conference, and anxious to get it to a final vote in both the House and the Senate.

Before asking for a vote on the resolution, I move to amend by striking out the words "on the disagreeing votes," in lines 10 and 11.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: Page 1, line 10, after the word "Senate," strike out the words "on the disagreeing votes."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Now, it will read: Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

The conference requested by the Senate on said amendment be, and hereby is, agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentle-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What will be the effect of agreeing to the resolution in that form? What will be the power of the conferees?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The power of the conferees will be this, that the bill-

Be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, with the Senate amendment thereto—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know how it will read,

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (reading)- to the end that the Senate amendment be, and hereby is, disagreed to, and the conference requested by the Senate on said amendment be, and hereby is, agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate is the matter upon which the conferees will have to act.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I will read the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] in sending the matter to conference. The motion is-

That the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

That is the form of the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I directed attention to that in the beginning, I believe.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am indebted to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] for calling my attention to the matter that I have just corrected by way of an amendment to the resolution. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the resolution will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 232, nays 98, not voting 100, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 4075, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4075) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That as used in this act-

"The term 'United States' means the United States, and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof except the Canal Zone and the Philippine Islands; but if any alien leaves the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempts to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens.

"The word 'alien' includes any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed nor citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The term 'immigration act' means the act of February 5, 1917, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States'; and the term 'immigration laws' includes such act and all laws, conventions, and treaties of the United States relating to the immigration, exclusion, or expulsion of aliens.

SEC. 2. (a) That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census This provision shall not apply to the following, and they shall not be counted in reckoning any of the percentage limits provided in this act: (1) Government officials, their families, attendants, servants, and employees; (2) aliens in continuous transit through the United States; (3) aliens lawfully admitted to the United States who later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory; (4) aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure; (5) aliens from countries immigration from which is regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements relating solely to immigration; (6) aliens from the so-called Asiatic barred zone, as described in section 3 of the immigration act; (7) aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year immediately preceding the time of their admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands; or (8) aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States.

"(b) For the purposes of this act nationality shall be determined by country of birth, treating as separate countries the colonies or dependencies for which separate enumeration was made in the United States census of 1910.

"(c) The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, jointly, shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, prepare a statement showing the number of persons of the various nationalities resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910, which statement shall be the population basis for the purposes of this act. In case of changes in political boundaries in foreign countries occurring subsequent to 1910 and resulting (1) in the creation of new countries, the governments of which are recognized by the United States, or (2) in the transfer of territory from one country to another, such transfer being recognized by the United States, such officials, jointly, shall estimate the number of persons resident in the United States in 1910 who were born within the area included in such new countries or in such territory so transferred, and revise the population basis as to each country involved in such change of political boundary. For the purpose of such revision and for the purposes of this act generally aliens born in the area included in any such new country shall be considered as having been born in such country, and aliens born in any territory so transferred shall be considered as having been born in the country to which such territory was transferred.

"(d) When the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year under this act shall have been admitted all other aliens of such nationality, except as otherwise provided in this act, who may apply for admission during the same fiscal year, shall be excluded: Provided, That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any month shall not exceed 20 per cent of the total number of aliens of such nationality who are admissible in that fiscal year: Provided further, That aliens returning from a temporary visit abroad, aliens who are professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, aliens belonging to any recognized learned profession, or aliens employed as domestic servants, may, if otherwise admissible, be admitted notwithstanding the maximum number of aliens of the same nationality admissible in the same month or fiscal year, as the case may be, shall have entered the United States; but aliens of the classes included in this proviso who enter the United States before such maximum number shall have entered shall (unless excluded by subdivision (a) from being counted) be counted in reckoning the percentage limits provided in this act: Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given so far as possible to the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and fiancees, (1) of citizens of the United States, (2) of aliens now in the United States who have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law, or (3) of persons eligible to United States citizenship who served in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, and have been separated from such forces under honorable conditions.

"Sec. 3. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, and from time to time thereafter, prescribe rules and regulations necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect. He shall, as soon as feasible after the enactment of this act, publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted to the United States between the date this act becomes effective and the end of the current fiscal year, and on June 30 thereafter he shall publish a statement showing the number of aliens of the various nationalities who may be admitted during the ensuing fiscal year. He shall also publish monthly statements during the time this act remains in force showing the number of aliens of each nationality already admitted during the then current fiscal year and the number who may be admitted under the provisions of this act during the remainder of such year, but when 75 per cent of the maximum number of any nationality admissible during the fiscal year shall have been admitted such statements shall be issued weekly thereafter. All statements shall be made available for general publication and shall be mailed to all transportation companies bringing aliens to the United States who shall request the same and shall file with the Department of Labor the address to which such statements shall be sent. The Secretary of Labor shall also submit such statements to the Secretary of State, who shall transmit the information contained therein to the proper diplomatic and consular officials of the United States, which officials shall make the same available to persons intending to emigrate to the United States and to others who may apply.

"Sec. 4. That the provisions of this act are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of the immigration laws.

"Sec. 5. That this act shall take effect and be enforced 15 days after its enactment (except secs. 1 and 3 and subdivisions (b) and (c) of sec. 2, which shall take effect immediately upon the enactment of this act) and shall continue in force until June 30, 1922, and the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted during the remaining period of the current fiscal year, from the date when this act becomes effective to June 30, shall be limited in proportion to the number admissible during the fiscal year 1922."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4075) to provide for the protection of the citizens of the United States by the temporary suspension of immigration, and for other purposes, subm t the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and submitted in the accompanying conference report.

The Senate amended the House bill by substituting a different text. The action of the conferees brings to the House the original text of H. R. 4075, with three modifications, and a change with reference to the date when the act is to be effective. The changes in the House text may be stated as follows:

(1) The House provision exempting from the 3 per cent limitation aliens residing in the United States who return from a temporary visit abroad is eliminated. This classification is transferred to paragraph (d) of section 2, so that aliens who return from a temporary visit abroad are counted in making up the 3 per cent limit, but may be admitted after such limit is

(2) The provision exempting aliens entitled to readmission under the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces," approved October 19, 1918, is eliminated. Under the resolution of March 3, 1921, aliens coming under the provisions of the act of October 19, 1918, have one year from March 3, 1921, in which to make application to return to the United States, and under this bill will be subject to the percentage restriction.

(3) The following provision of the House bill is eliminated: Aliens who prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or of the Secretary of Labor that they are actually subjects of religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence and are seeking admission to the United States solely to avoid the suffering and hardship involved in such persecution.

(4) Other changes affect the date when the act shall take effect. In lieu of May 10, 1921, as proposed in the House bill, the text of the Senate provision, providing that the act shall take effect 15 days after its enactment, is adopted.

The elimination of the provisions mentioned above makes H. R. 4075 more rigid in its restrictive effect than when it left the House.

ALBERT JOHNSON. J. WILL TAYLOR. JOHN E RAKER Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I do not know that anything need be said in further explanation of the bill as agreed on in conference. The statement just read recites the principal changes and also makes the affirmation that the elimination of two of the provisions of the House bill makes the bill more rigid in restriction than when it left the House. I might say that those who have followed this attempt to restrict immigration in the United States for the last two years, and even those who oppose the effort, undoubtedly have noticed that each time a bill goes through the mill it becomes a little more restrictive, and I am inclined to think that if this conference report is accepted by both branches, and if the bill is signed and becomes a law, by the time the year is up Congress will then be ready to enact something still more re-strictive, and particularly with reference to the Mexican border. It has already developed that on account of this prospective legislation and on account of passport difficulties abroad, more attempts than ever are being made to surreptitiously cross the Mexican border.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Why was it not possible to make restrictions apply to Mexico in this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If we start to provide for a change in the method of handling immigration on the border, we would be obliged to make actual changes in the text of the present immigration laws. The object of this particular bill is to restrict immigration to 3 per cent of the number of aliens who were in the United States in 1910. This bill makes it possible for 355,000 new immigrants to come in legally, and a few in addition under the exemptions. If we are able to hold immigration to that number for a year, the United States will have the whip hand at the ocean ports in regard to immigration. We will be able to control that number of immigrants with some degree of success, and we hope we will then have both men and money for use in the protection of the Mexican border, so that we may shut out surreptitious entries. In other words, if we can get the whip hand at Ellis Island, we will then be able to attend to the situation on the Mexican border.

It is interesting to note that in the last three months the surreptitious entry of Europeans across the Mexican border has number of Europeans caught was 23, and in April the number reached 72, making a total of 119 from European countries, mostly men. They had all come by way of the port of Vera Their nationalities are a matter of interest.

In February of the 24 entries there were 6 Germans, 6 Russians, 5 Austrians, the balance scattered. In March of the 23, 5 were Germans, 7 Spaniards, 5 Poles, balance scattered. April, of the 72 there were 8 Germans, 17 Russians, 8 Poles, 10 Lithuanians, 12 Italians, balance scattered.

Mr. Speaker, the situation on the Mexican border is such that if there is one caught coming in it may be put down as certain many are coming in without being caught. I have a report concerning the situation in Vera Cruz and elsewhere in Mexico that seems to indicate that a full-blown line of smuggling and of fraudulent entry is under way, full blast, in Mexico, for these various people in Europe who, unable to get passports, are now piling up in Mexico intending to come across the border into the United States. I have evidence of the efforts to assist them across the border and to prevent their deportation when they are caught. Part of the Ellis Island situation is now being transferred to the border, and we may look for more of it. I said, it is hoped that this restrictive immigration legislation will relieve immigrant officials elsewhere and permit them to pay some attention to the Mexican border.

Since April 2 five vessels have arrived at Vera Cruz from European ports and have landed more than 500 European im-Apparently Mexico bars none from entry for any cause. But if the moving population of Europe is to be dumped into Mexico, that is Mexico's affair, not ours. It will be our business to prevent such immigrants from crossing the border. It will be our business to shut down on the loose giving of bond for entry, of which I have already some evidence. The situation on the Canadian border is different, owing to our arrangements for our protection with steamship companies landing immigrants at Canadian ports for entry to the United States. We have no such agreements with any steamship lines running to Mexican ports.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the 355,000 which the gentleman mentioned include Germans who may come in?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Forty thousand of them? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Probably 75,000, if that many desire to come and can secure passports.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for two short ques-

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; with pleasure. Mr. MILLER. Under section 4 the provisions of this act are in addition to and not supplemental to the present laws?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.
Mr. MILLER. And it defines what the immigration laws are. What I want to ask the gentleman is, under the treaty or under the law now relating to the exclusion of Asiatic laborers, there is an exemption clause that traders or merchants coming to the country and doing business have a right to come and live here. Does this act in any way affect that class?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It does not. That is why the fifth exemption is in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the clause exempting those fleeing from religious persecution has been dropped. The vote in the Senate was about 4 to 1 against such a clause. I might call attention to the fact that one of the principal changes is in regard to aliens returning from temporary visits abroad. All should bear in mind that aliens legally in the United States and going abroad during this law may return from a temporary visit. The provisions in this bill protect them so that if they return they may be counted within the 3 per cent, but if the 3 per cent is exhausted they may still return without being counted. Each one who returns, within the 3 per cent, will mean one less new immigrant, that is all. At one time we thought we might permit returns of those without counting them at all, but statistics for the last year show that about 120,000 went out and returned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What limitation is put on the time for them to return?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Six months. A temporary visit is held to be six months. To have permitted that possible number or anyone to go out and return without being counted would have been a considerable liberalizing of the restrictive

The provision under the joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of aliens who have been conscripted or who have volunteered for service with the military forces commenced in earnest. In February there were 24 caught of the United States or the cobelligerent forces has been elimether in the act of entry or after the act. In March the inated for the reason that the few now out who are likely to desire to return may come in along with the 3 per cent. The legislation which was enacted last March, which served as an act terminating war activities, terminated that return cobelligerent soldier act. But that act gave one year in which they may return, and they still have that right for nine months from the time this would go into effect. Further, all who went out and fought with the Allies or with the cobelligerent forces have had to date something like two years and a half in which to return, which would seem to be about long enough.

The other change affects the date. The Senate made the bill effective 15 days after its enactment for the small fraction of time remaining from now until the beginning of the calendar year, and then for one year beginning July 1. We have accepted Otherwise the text is that of the House bill 4075

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SABATH. Under the provision which the gentleman has mentioned, namely, the permission to those who served with the cobelligerent armies to return under the resolution that we passed, I think, on March 3, 1921— Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. Sofinson of Washington. 1es.

Mr. SABATH. Granting them the right to return under the provisions of that act, they will no longer have that right if the 3 per cent will have been reached. They can not then return?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They can return, if inside the 3 per cent limit; but it must be perfectly clear to the gentleman that they have had two years and a half in which to get back. The exemption which we gave them at that time in order to let them come back excused them from all the provisions of the immigration laws; it let them be physically defective, contract laborers, stowaways, illiterate, crippled, and so forth. In other words, regardless of their condition, mentally or physically, generously we gave them that time and waived the law; and if any of them have stayed out more than two years and a half I think we may well assume that they do not care now to return to the United States as a privileged class.

Mr. SABATH. Then you nullify the act of March 3, 1921. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not for those who may come within the 3 per cent.

Mr. SABATH. Then the gentleman thinks that those who fought for our country and are still over there should have no right to come back.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Our soldiers, alien and otherwise, are either back or still in the army of occupation. How long would the gentleman like to have a few cobelligerents stay over there and still hold the right to return to the United States? They have had over two years and a half as it is, They may be in the armies of other countries. The time has come for complete allegiance, so far as the United States is concerned, and not for dual allegiance or dual citizenship, or for special privileges for the alien not even within the borders of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the remainder of my time. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me 15

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins, will be yield to me, to submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gernerd] may have the privilege of extending his remarks in the Record upon this

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have the right to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the right to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER],

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the chairman of the committee has called attention to the fact that certain portions of our border are not properly guarded, and that aliens are coming in unlawfully. That is a much more serious matter than is generally understood. The testimony before our committee was that last year some hundred thousand or more had come across the Texas border in that way. Investigation conducted by the committee convinced the committee-that and information coming to me from many sources fully convinces me—that not only people from Mexico and Canada, who are not admissible under our immigration laws, are coming in, but that people of other countries in great numbers are slipping into the United States in that way. Now that we are tightening the restrictions and trying to partially dam the stream, so to speak, the pressure at the weak points will be greater. There will be great numbers of Germans, Russians, Poles, and others coming in. Many Japanese now are coming into California and that portion of the country through both Mexico and Canada. I say these things in the hope of drawing the attention of the Members of the House to this important part of our immigration problem. Any law is futile if it is not enforced. It is effective just to the extent that it is properly enforced. It is idle for us to consume time in enacting restrictive measures and then take no effective steps to enforce them, I take this limited time to call the matter to the attention of the House in the hope that it will receive serious consideration. I think the committee will give it attention. I hope that those who control legislation here will give it such consideration that when these measures looking to better enforcement of the law are brought forward for action they will be adopted.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum].

Mr. LINTHICUM: Mr. Speaker, when this bill was under consideration I read into the Record a telegram from Rabbi Morris S. Lazaron, a distinguished rabbi of the city of Baltimore, advocating the passage of the bill. Since the amendment of the bill by the Senate the rabbi has wired me again and requested that I give this telegram the same publicity as the other. In order to do that I take this opportunity to read the telegram, which is as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., May 4, 1921.

Representative J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

House Office Building, Washington, D. U.:

I note with regret that the immigration bill has passed the Senate minus the mitigating and just provisions for religious and political refugees and the reunion of families, which provisions were contained in the bill when I voiced my approval of it and as it passed the House. The situation, therefore, has changed and I can not in justice let the impression pass that I favor unqualified restrictions. I say this not only as a Jew who suffers in his brethren's sufferings but as an American who is loath to see his country depart from its humanitarian policy of offering a haven to those in dire need. May I ask you to give this statement the same publicity which was given the previous one.

Rabbi MORRIS S. LAZARON.

Personally I am as ever strongly in favor of this bill and the restriction of immigration.

The time is at hand when America must first assimilate those who have already entered our borders, must first find work for those of our own citizenship and see to it that America is first for Americans; that American principles and doctrines must prevail; that the Constitution and those things for which America stands must prevail.

I hope the bill will soon be agreed upon and approved. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER, The gentleman will state it.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Has any time been fixed for debate upon the conference report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington had one hour within which to move the previous question. If he does not move the previous question within that time, the Chair will recognize some one else for another hour.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman intends to move the previous question before the expiration of the

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I trust considerably within the hour. I am yielding the gentleman from California 15 minutes now, and I have some time to yield on this side.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, at the present time might I be permitted to ask the gentleman from Washington one question?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield to me little time? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would it not be better for the gentleman from California to control the remaining part of his 15 minutes by using it and I will reserve the floor?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the conferees judged the sentiment of the House as well as that of the Senate. The bill passed the Senate with only one vote against it. It passed the House with almost a three-fourths vote. When it came down to the two contested questions, that of permitting those who had resided in the United States to come back at their will without any restrictions at all, the con-ferees believed that it was better to take the Senate amendment so as to count the number who had been residents of the United States and gone abroad in the 3 per cent until that limit had been exhausted and then permit them to come in fol-lowing that beyond the limitation. That is some restriction. The Senate conferees felt as though the Senate was very anxious that too much delay with amendments should not be taken up because the country wants a temporary restrictive measure. And I believe that is the attitude of the House. I am speaking of the attitude on this side of the House, and my friend, the chairman, has spoken for the other side, that that is their attitude and they want a temporary restrictive measure at the present time, so we may in the meantime endeavor to modify our immigration laws to meet the demands that are so pressing and that the people over the country desire, to the end that the great number of undesirables—and I say that advisedly from the hearings and from the information—should not be permitted to come to this country. We find from the February and March, 1921, reports that 150 or more criminals tried to get in in the last two months. Some got in and were deported. You find the line running down to about 7,000 in the last two months, which includes those not admissible. You can see the extreme effort that is being made to get into this country by those who do not belong here. The farmers over this country want relief and they want it through this class of legislation. You find it in the farm journals. You find it in the editorials of those who speak from first-hand experience, and they say they do not want a foreign hoe hand, but they want a real American farmer to do their work. The next provision that created some discussion, that I think the Members of the House should know particularly about, has been very clearly presented by the chairman, and just one word on it from myself is all I desire, and that is in regard to religious persecution.

My recollection is it was attempted to amend it in the Senate by allowing the political refugees. That was defeated about 60 to 13 to show the attitude of the people. It was carried here by not a very large vote, but I believe the Members of this body really desire to restrict, and the provision as it was in the bill as it passed the House practically threw the door wide open. There is no definition as to what a refugee fleeing from religious persecution was.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In a moment. So as a matter of fact it might have run into hundreds of thousands of those who claimed they were fleeing from religious persecution. Now, I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MASON. As I understand-and if I am mistaken the gentleman will correct me—no one can come in except they comply with our laws on immigration. This bill did not seek to extend it?

Mr. RAKER. No; this bill did not seek to extend the law which fixed the qualifications for those who desired to come in. In other words, they must not be criminals or be diseased, and various other conditions; but this provision that was in the bill as it passed the House, and as amended without, I believe, due consideration, did change that condition as to those fleeing due consideration, did change that condition as to those fleeing from religious persecution.

Mr. MASON. May I ask, then, under your present bill as you propose it now, taken in connection with the vise laws and the laws of passport of this country, a man who is a political refugee and who seeks an asylum by reason of religious persecution, although he complies with every part of the immigration law, can not come in here without a passport from his king?

Mr. RAKER. He will come within the 3 per cent.

Mr. MASON. But not without a passport.

Mr. RAKER. Then when he comes within the 3 per cent and the 3 per cent has been exhausted he can not enter the United States, and he is in the same position as others, because if we had left the provision as it stood in this bill as it passed the House there would practically be no restriction. Any man could have come if he said he was fleeing from religious persecution. In other words, that he was suffering; so the bill would have been no restrictive bill at all.

Mr. MASON. As I understand it now, living under the present law, if this passes a man who complies in every particular with the law, if he wishes to come here and adopt this form of government and likes it and renounces allegiance-I say if he comes here seeking refuge by reason of persecution for religion or politics, he can not enter here, even though he complied with all the laws, unless he has a passport from the king of his

Mr. RAKER. There are two answers to that, and I will answer the first. If he comes within the 3 per cent during that time he could enter into the United States. After the quota has been filled he could not. Now, going to the next question. Under the law we passed almost unanimously by the House and the Senate and approved by the President a man must have a passport. That is the law now.

Mr. MASON. That is the war law.

Mr. RAKER. No; it was the law after the armistice, but, of course, technically we are at war; but we passed it after the war, so there are two conditions. He must have a passport to come in even within the quota, and when that is exhausted he can not, and if he has no passport he can not enter.

Mr. MASON. In other words, the King of the other country determines for us who is to be allowed to come here?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. No; the American people have come to a realization that they have some control themselves.

Mr. MASON. Then you leave it to the King to say who shall come?

Mr. RAKER. We have some control as to the people who shall enter this country. Now, we are putting some restrictions on as to the number. We are hoping eventually, within the next year, that with the benefit we can get from the American people and those who have given a study of this that we will be able to put on the statute books a law which will permit some better selection of our immigrants than we have at the present time, as well as to provide for their proper distribution, so that the American people will be able to enforce such laws and determine beyond question for themselves who shall be citizens in this country. We want reasonable and proper immigration after we have had time to properly digest and assimilate what we now have with us. The new law should meet our needs and changed conditions. Within the next year we will have such a bill to present to this House.

Mr. MASON. That is what I hoped would be the law now. The following editorial from the Country Gen-Mr. RAKER. tleman, of date March 19, 1921, shows the attitude of the American people on this restriction of immigration question. I insert it as part of my remarks at this time:

it as part of my remarks at this time:

A steamship arriving in New York the other day brought immigrants of 17 different nationalities. None was from the British Isles or the Scandinavian countries or Holland, and of course none from Germany. These newcomers, therefore, were far removed in speech, customs, habits of thought, and appearance from the original stock of this country. Most of them possessed little beyond the scanty sum required for admittance. Virtually all of them immediately betook themselves to the foreign "colonies" that have been established in American crites as Old World carryovers—districts already overcrowded beyond decent and healthful housing capacity, most of them already containing thousands of idle workingmen.

At the time this steamship and others with like cargoes of human flotsam were coming to our shores Congress was conducting hearings on the subject of immigration. It was listening with the usual congressional gravity to the spokesmen of this, that, or another nationality, all pleading that the way of their brethren abroad into the land of promise and plenty might be free and unhampered. One observer noted, with keen perception, that "there were few spokesmen for America present."

It was admitted during the hearings that any action Congress might take at the time would be only temporary; no attempt would be made to arrive at a well-studied and sound immigration program designed to meet the greatest need and the greatest good of the country as a whole.

Yet that is exactly what we are supposed to have Congress for and women who pioneered and developed this country of ours. They wrought it from a wilderness and a prairie into a fair and bounteous land. But they wrought it thus for their children and children's children to possess and enjoy and build upon. To allow these pioneers' children to be dispossessed, through a competition they can not and should not meet, can hardly be described as keeping faith with the fathers

Without doubt conditions in numerous European and Asiatic countries are deplorable. Certain peoples, likewise without doubt, are having to suffer unjust oppression and mistreatment. No person with ordinary human feelings can fail to sympathize with these unfortunate ones. But that sympathy is overdone if allowed to take the form of an unlimited ticket of admission to this country. Sentiment ever has been an unreliable substitute for good sense.

A great and revered American saw the danger of a people divided in speech and aims and beset by conflicting allegiances when he spoke out against the converting of this country into "a polyglot boarding house." He clearly discerned that the greatest service Americans could perform for mankind was the maintenance of a nation united in purpose and ideals and with an ever-rising standard of individual welfare.

As long as such a nation exists it will be a stimulus to the peoples

As long as such a nation exists it will be a stimulus to the peoples of other lands to make their own Governments freer and more beneficent. But if we wreck our Nation by receiving an indigestible mass of foreigners, it will be neither a hope nor a haven.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I was not in when the gentleman from Washington presented his conference report and made his motion, and I have been able to make only a very hasty reading of this report.

As I understand—and I will ask the gentleman if my understanding is correct-in making up the maximum under the 3 per cent limitation, alien children under the age of 18, of citizens of the United States, are not to be included?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That provision, which was placed in the House bill on the floor, is retained in the bill, The only thing that keeps the children of American citizens -and this refers to naturalized American citizens-is that the children are abroad and have not put a foot on our soil.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I notice on page 3 this proviso:

Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given, so far as possible, to the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and flancées of citizens of the United

Is that to apply when the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted in any fiscal year shall have been reached? Is that the idea?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. That proviso is a matter of expressing a preference for the selection up to 3 per cent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, Mr. Speaker, it conflicts absolutely with the exception on page 2, in the last two lines of subparagraph (8), which says that-

Aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States-shall not be considered at all in making up the computation of

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; they are merely preferences within the 3 per cent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, then there is a contradiction, if that is the interpretation the gentleman from Washington puts upon it. Paragraph (a) of section 2, on page 2. says:

That the number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted under the immigration laws to the United States in any fiscal year shall be limited to 3 per cent of the number of foreign-born persons of such nationality resident in the United States as determined by the United States census of 1910.

And then comes this language:

This provision shall not apply to the following, and they shall not be counted in reckoning any of the percentage limits provided in this act:

* * (8) Aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States.

That language takes entirely out of the 3 per cent limitation the alien children of citizens of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And then follows that when the maximum number of any nationality shall be reached others shall be admitted and not counted. Then come the preferences. Now, while children are clearly exempted, they are still named in the preferences. It can not make any difference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On the contrary, I think it can. Until the maximum number of aliens of any nationality who may be admitted has been reached this question of a preference arises.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There is no preference. After that quota is full those who come in are those particularly exempted, and who are named as ministers, actors, lecturers, admitted notwithstanding the maximum number has been admitted and counted. Those particular limited classes are permitted without a count.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But by the proviso which I read you give to an official the power to exclude children of citizens. You say in the proviso that children of citizens of the United States may be preferentially treated. You talk in the proviso as if it was a matter of privilege instead of a matter of human right. And yet in subparagraph (8), of (a), in section 2, you expressly exempt aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, there is an attempt here in proposing preferential treatment for minor children of citizens of the United States not to recognize the fact that a man who is a naturalized citizen has a right to have his minor children with him in this country.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In one moment.

A man who is born a citizen of the United States has the right to have his minor children under his own rooftree. But here is a provision which the House struck out of the original House bill, which in effect permits a representative of the United States Government in a foreign country to say that the minor children of a citizen of the United States may under certain circumstances be excluded. In other words, it is optional with him to vise or not to vise their passports. The law ought without any qualification to provide that minor children-if free from contagious disease and otherwise admissible under the immigration laws of the United States-of citizens of the United States shall be allowed to enter, not that they shall have mere preferential treatment. An alien citizen has all the rights under the Constitution of the United States that you have who are "native and to the manner born."

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield. Mr. RAKER. Is it not just a little misunderstanding on the gentleman's part? Under the general law the children of a native-born citizen of the United States can come to this country wherever he is.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This provision applies to the children of citizens naturalized, living in a foreign country, and those children are not citizens until they enter the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to have two minutes to answer that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Siegel].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I agree most heartily with what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] has said regarding the urgent necessity of providing a sufficient force on the Texas The entire committee has agreed to that proposition before, and has urged not only a proper force on the Mexican border but also on the Canadian border. But this committee of ours has no power to appropriate. We can recommend, we can urge, we can beg, we can beseech for the proper force, but that is about all that we can do. The troubles described by the gentleman are pretty well known to us. We went into that fully last year, and the Record is full of details showing that thousands and thousands of people crossed both borders without medical examination or any other kind of examination, and are now in Texas and other Southern States, and also in Northern But the responsibility does not rest with our com-States. mittee.

I heard what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] said. He is correct in his interpretation, because what is being adopted here is the Senate bill. The Senate bill did not originally have the provision about aliens under the age of 18 or children of citizens of the United States as an excepted class, and therefore the proviso was inserted to the effect that preference shall be given not only to the children but also to the wives of American citizens by naturalization, who themselves singers, nurses, and professors, and so forth. They may be are American citizens by virtue of the naturalization law. There can be no question about that. A simple reading of the language establishes my contention.

For the first time in the history of the country we are providing here that no person, no matter how good his character may be, seeking to come here from abroad, suffering from re-ligious persecution, under the terms of our bill as passed here, would have had to establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that he was coming here solely to escape religious persecution.

Yet under the terms of this bill as it is presented now to-day such a person can not enter the United States. The same applies so far as political refugees are concerned, and that occurs the moment your 3 per cent is reached, even though he is fit, able, and capable of becoming a full American citizen in the broadest sense of the term. The American consul on the other side says, "You are of the type we want in America, but I can not give you a passport because 3 per cent is about to be reached or has been reached."

We are controlling immigration in two ways now. The Labor Department does not control it. The State Department con-trols it. That department determines how many people shall obtain their visés on the other side, and its officials each month in advance know how many visés will be granted in the coming month on the other side.

There can be no dispute about that, because I put the figures in the Record when this bill was up last month, showing how in certain countries they had granted 245,000 visés during the year 1920 because we had a number of consulates there; the same is true of England, where we granted 89,000, and yet in another country where there had been the greatest kind of suffering as a result of the war, a country where, as Theodore Roosevelt said, the people had undergone more suffering than any other people on the face of the earth, there was granted only 44,000 visés in the entire year.

Mr. RAKER. But notwithstanding that visé there were denied admission during the last year 7,274, and those included persons afflicted with insanity and paupers and professional beggars, and those having tuberculosis, and so forth.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will admit that 7,000 were excluded, but that included those who were being deported, those whose cases were being held up here for quite a time. The Secretary of Labor and his staff are doing all they can to enforce the law strictly. I agree with them in the enforcement of the law, because that is why it is on the statute books. The gentleman's statement simply confirms what I have contended during the entire year. We should have the proper officials who desire to enforce the law, and then we will get it enforced. But that does not do away with this fact, that it is the consular officers on the other side who do determine who shall come here. Any person looking into this question thoroughly knows that to be the fact.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mason] is right when he says no person can come here except by the will of the Government of the particular country on the other side where he resides, because no person can enter the United States without first obtaining a passport visé from our consul, and if the Government on the other side does not desire that person to leave that country, he can not leave it without a passport.

My friend from California [Mr. RAKER], who is always very much excited in regard to immigration at all times and places, whether he is in either Washington, California, New York, or elsewhere, was horrified when I said we should use the 1920 census as a basis for our calculations. It must astonish the gentleman that it should be proposed that the 1920 census should be used. That would have shown less than 355,000 people coming into the United States. The total of foreignborn was 13,703,987, which includes Canada and Mexico. You had approximately one million and some odd thousand from Canada, 13,000 from Newfoundland, 16,000 from Mexico, and some thousands from the South American countries. had taken the census of 1920 as a basis, we would have been fairer and squarer than we are by simply saying we will adopt the census of 1910. My friend from California thinks he is always right and never wrong. In this respect he is absolutely wrong, because the figures tell the other story, and I hope he will concede it this trip. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill did not have the approval of the conferees in the fullest sense of the term, but it is the only kind of legislation which, in the excitement, hysteria, and turmoil of the time, they feel they can possibly put through. The bill does not do justice, and in their hearts and souls they know it does not. Mr. BEGG. To whom is the injustice done by this bill? Mr. SIEGEL. Injustice is done to thousands of American boys who fought on the other side, who will not be able to bring over to this country either their parents or their small brothers

Mr. BEGG. Does not this bill place them in the specially preferred class?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no, for this reason: You limit the number to approximately 23,000 from Poland, when there are 55,000 requests from boys who fought for us in the World War, and by your attempted preference you force the American consuls on the other side to try to make a choice and a discrimination between soldier boys who fought for us. This is not justice, and the American people will soon say so, for they want to be fair and humane to all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I agree with the gentleman from California that there is a certain demand for this legislation, but it is due to the fact that a prejudice has been created by the professional restrictionists among people who have not studied the immigration question. I do not agree with the gentleman, however, that the farmers of this country desire this legislation, or that they are clamoring for restric-tions. Just the opposite is true, because last year and even this year we have had many gentlemen here from Texas, Colorado, California, and other States, requesting, demanding, and insisting that relief be granted them, and that we should suspend the literacy test, and that we should not further restrict immigration, so that they could get enough labor to enable them properly to work and take care of their farms.

Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to believe that if all of the gentlemen had studied this bill as carefully as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] has, they would hesitate a long, long while before they would cast their votes for this conference report. Somehow or other no one seems to realize and appreciate how far-reaching this bill is. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] tried to the best of his ability within the seven minutes that he had to point out that you are willfully and deliberately legislating against American citizens, and that you give preference to many aliens and permit them to come but you draw the line against the American citizen. If the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the chairman of the committee [Mr. Johnson of Washington] have copies of the bill before them, I wish they would turn to page 2 of the report, where they will observe that we exempt from the operation of the 3 per cent, in the first place, Government officials, and so on; in the next place, aliens who are in continuous transit through the United States; third, aliens lawfully admitted to the United States who later go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory; fourth, aliens visiting the United States as tourists or temporarily for business or pleasure; fifth, aliens from countries immigration from which is regulated in accordance with treaties or agreements relating solely to immigration.

These classes you exempt from the 3 per cent, which means that you exempt the Japanese and the Chinese. They can come in, notwithstanding the 3 per cent, because you deliberately exempt them.

Mr. MASON. They can come in.
Mr. SABATH. Yes; they can come in. There is no limitation in this bill. Sixth, you admit aliens from the so-called Asiatic barred zone. Who are they that they shall be exempted? Seventh, aliens who have resided continuously for at least one year immediately preceding the time of their admission to the United States in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of Cuba, the Republic of Mexico, countries of Central or South America, or adjacent islands. You also exempt from the operation of the 3 per cent those who desire to come from Canada; yes, and from Mexico. But you say that the wives, the brothers, the sisters, the fathers, and the children of American citizens can not come in after the 3 per cent has been reached.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Washington. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman stopped at the end of 7 and did not read 8, and 8 permits the entrance of aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States

Mr. SABATH. Oh, the children under 18. I stand corrected as to that. But here on page 3 you provide further that in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given, so far as possible, to the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and financées of citizens of the United States, of aliens now in the United States who have applied for citizenship in the manner provided by law, or of persons eligible to United States citizenship who served in the military or naval forces of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. You say they shall have preference; that is, if they will make their applications within that time and before the 3 per cent limit is reached. But when the 3 per cent limit has been reached none of these people can come, while the first class that I have designated can come, notwithstanding the fact that the 3 per cent limit has been reached. Now, that is manifestly unjust and unfair. I am sure that if you gentlemen would study the bill as carefully as I and as the

Mr. Speaker, it has been stated by the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Johnson], and by others that this is only a temporary measure and that within six months the committee will be ready with a permanent immigration bill, which will be more stringent than this meas-May I inquire how much further the gentleman from Washington and the other members of the committee contemplate going? Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am thoroughly familiar with the view of some of the gentlemen of the committee and I realize what their aims are and that they would not hesitate a moment to close permanently and completely our doors to immigration and build, if possible, a Chinese wall gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Coopen] has studied it, and who has pointed out these defects in the bill, I know, in justice to yourselves, to these deserving men, and to our country, you around our country.

could not vote for this bill.

It is to them that I wish to state that I firmly believe that this great Nation of ours will never tolerate any such foothardy proposition. On the contrary, in lieu of them bringing in a more stringent bill than this they will be compelled by public opinion, long before this act expires, to repeal it and to bring in a fair and humane immigration bill, because the American people will shortly realize that Congress and others clamoring for this legislation have been imposed upon by false and misleading reports, and in place of having millions unemployed the country will clamor for labor, not only the farmer in the West and in the South but the manufacturer, the mill owner, and many industries all over the United States will be appealing to us for relief.

But I realize that it matters not what I may say or how defective this bill is. Owing to the prejudice that now exists, this measure will become a law. But nevertheless I feel it my duty to point out to you the erroneous and unjustifiable provisions of Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is familiar with the immigration law?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; in a measure. Mr. RAKER, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the child of an American-born citizen or the child of a naturalized citizen who has resided in this country can come to this country irrespective of this bill or any legislation?

Mr. SABATH. Then why do you put the provisions in this bill?

Mr. RAKER. For the reason that under section 5 of the immigration act of March 2, 1907, it provides:

SEC. 5. That a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the parent: Provided, That such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

Mr. SABATH. In the United States there are thousands of these cases—children of American citizens who do not reside as yet in the United States, but who desire to come and reside bere, but who had no chance or opportunity as yet to come to the United States. It is for that reason I say it is a mistake that you do not exempt from the operation of this law the children of American naturalized citizens. The provision that the gentleman has read shows that my contention is correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this bill will preclude the reunion of families. During the war there were thousands of now American citizens who became American citizens during the war while serving in our Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who as yet have been unable to send for their wives or children who are still over there. They are clamoring day after day, appealing to the Department of State and the Immigration Department to secure visés for them so that they may come. I give you my word as a man that I have at least 100 applications of American citizens who served our country during the war who are appealing to me and pleading that I aid them in securing visés for their families to enable them to bring them here. This bill makes it absolutely impossible for any of them to come if the 3 per cent limit is reached before the applications which they have filed are acted upon. It is for that reason that I believe the conference report should be defeated.

Mr. Speaker, some well-inclined men who feel as I do, that we make good our promises to our boys whom we encouraged to enlist and fight for our country, inquire why have they not brought their wives and children over to this country before this time To them I wish to say, because they had no opportunity of doing so. A great majority of the 400,000 aliens who served our country during the war in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps volunteered, and the balance refused to claim exemption from service, resided in the United States only a few short years, coming here during the years 1910 to 1914, and due to economic conditions in 1913 and 1914 they were unable to send for their wives and children and were vented from doing so after the outbreak of the war in 1914, Two hundred and fifty-six thousand of these aliens serving in our armed forces during the war became naturalized citizens. Very few of these 400,000 were officers, and consequently they had very little left from their pay as privates. Many of them after being released from the service were unable to secure immediate employment, and consequently have been unable to send for their wives and children, saying nothing about their parents and younger brothers and sisters, and even those who found opportunity to accumulate sufficient sums to send for them have been unable in many instances to secure passports from the country of their birth, and in many other instances where passports have been obtained they have been unable to secure the vise of the passports by our consular representatives. Those are the reasons why there are still so many of the wives and children of our service men waiting to be reunited with their fathers and their husbands, which this bill makes impossible.

My colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mason] has inquired whether it will be possible, under the provisions of this bill, to admit political or religious refugees. As I stated before, under the House bill those who could prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer and to the Secretary of Labor that they are actually subjects of religious persecution of the country of their last permanent residence and are seeking admission to the United States solely to avoid the suffering or hardship included in such persecution could come. But the conferees have struck out this provision, and for the first time in the history of our Nation we are going to refuse a haven of refuge to the unfortunate peoples who are persecuted, tortured, and massacred because they believe in worshiping God in accordance with the teachings of their fathers and a class of people who at all times look to this great country of ours for refuge.

Oh, gentlemen, if a similar law were enacted in the seventeenth, eighteenth, or nineteenth centuries, the Huguenots and the Pilgrim Fathers would have been debarred from the shores of this land. Yes, I regret, my colleagues, that they can not come, nor can the political refugee come under the provisions of this bill, or even under our present and still enforced wartime legislation, which has conveniently been extended in the interest, as it appears to me, to the remaining rulers of Europe, as under the passport regulations, even without this legislation, anyone guilty of less majesty would naturally be refused a passport, and without the sanction of the king no passport would be issued him, and without a passport he can not enter the United States.

The House bill had one other reasonable provision which exempted from the 3 per cent resident aliens of the United States who returned from a temporary visit abroad; but that provision has been eliminated and they therefore will be counted in the 3 per cent limit. So the bill is the same harsh measure that passed the Senate in the Sixty-sixth Congress and which was properly pocket vetoed by President Wilson.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude I can not help but state to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] and to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Johnson], who are so fearful of the Mexican immigration, why have you exempted Mexico from the operation of this bill? Do you consider Mexican labor more reliable than the European labor? Personally I am of the opinion that you can not justly entertain that belief because nearly all of those who have pleaded for relief and for the suspension of the literacy test to secure Mexican labor claimed they could not secure Europe labor. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has also laid great stress on the fact that over 7.000 immigrants have been deported or debarred in the last 60 days, which again proves what I have maintained at all times, that if the present immigration laws were efficiently administered immigration could be reduced and that no undesirables or trouble makers could possibly enter our gates, and there could be no possible excuse for this hasty, ill-considered, discriminatory, and un-American legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for time for the purpose of again pointing out what I think is a clear contradiction in the terms of this conference report. On page 2 it is provided in exception 8 that "aliens under the age of 18 who are children of citizens of the United States" shall not be counted. That is, alien children. I have a constituent, a naturalized citizen, who has a wife and daughters, one 10 and one 14 years of age, in Poland. The mother ded from exposure, wandering about in the Ukraine. They can not come to this country, although he has been a citizen for four years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why can not be come?
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Wait a moment. By the proviso on page 3 it is—

Provided further, That in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given, so far as possible, to the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, children under 18 years of age, and flancees of citizens of the United States.

That is, not only alien minor children but all minor children of citizens of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A child born over the seas is not a citizen of the United States. If the gentleman will get that in his mind, it will make things as clear as the skies.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I see no clearing up when one section provides an absolute exemption, and says that the law shall not apply to alien children under 18 years of age of citizens of the United States, and the next section provides—that in the enforcement of this act preference shall be given, so far as possible, to children under 18 years of age of citizens of the United States.

One section provides an absolute right, the other only preferential treatment "so far as possible."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of no quorum. The Chair will count. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and as many as are in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, when their names are called, say "aye," and those opposed "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 276, nays 33, answered "present" 1, not voting 120, as follows:

Hon. Samuel Shortrides,
Senator from California, Washington, D. C.

Honorable Sir: At a regular meeting of the San Bernardino Central Labor Council, February 8, 1921, the following was adopted:
"We, your committee appointed to review the memorial submitted by the American Legion, beg leave to submit our unanimous favorable report as follows:

"1. Adequate appropriations for bureaus for caring for disabled exservice men.

"2. Appropriations to build and maintain the necessary hospitals.
"3. Passage of the Rogers-Capper bill providing for consolidations of the Bureaus of War Risk Insurance, the Federal Board for Vocational Education and Training, and the rehabilitation section of the Public Health Service.
"We also recommend that if the characteristic council.

Education and Training, and the renabilitation section of Health Service.

"We also recommend that if the above report of your committee is adopted that copy be forwarded to the local press, copy to the Congressmen and Senators representing this district, copy to the American Legion and copy spread on the minutes of this council."

Knowing that you, our newly elected Senator from California, are a believer in fair play and justice to our brave boys who gave their all on the battlefields of France, and also knowing that we, the San Bernardino Central Labor Council, representing 70 per cent of the population of this city, also believe in these ideals that you will not hesitate to use your power and influence to bring out to a successful consummation these propositions outlined above.

EXPORT OF MEATS TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, on the 15th of July, 1919, the Senate adopted a resolution requiring the Federal Trade Commission to furnish to it certain documents relating to our export trade in meats from the United States to Great Britain, The commission, in pursuance of that resolution, forwarded to the Senate copies of all the documents. Thereafter, upon the request of the Senate, the commission furnished the originals of certain of the communications and papers. I think that the information has never been used by anyone. It has never been consulted so far as I know.

I move that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to return the original papers forwarded by the Federal Trade Commission to the commission, keeping the copies that were originally furnished by the commission. The motion was agreed to.

COMPARISON OF WHOLESALE FOOD PRICES.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have received a brief letter accompanied by statements as to the wholesale prices of April, 1920, compared with the same of April, 1921. The letter deals also with excessive passenger fares on railroads. I ask that the letter and the statement, which are brief, be printed in the RECORD.

The letter and statement were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONWAY, ARK., May 9, 1921.

Senator Joe T. Robinson, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Please accept many thanks for the interest in behalf of the traveling salesmen. I am in hopes that you will be successful in passing your bill. The excessive railroad rates and exorbitant hotel rates have certainly put the traveling men up against a real proposition. A great many of the traveling men are off the road to-day because they can not pay the excessive traveling expenses. This expense in marketing our product is tacked onto the cost which the conpense in marketing our product is tacked onto the cost which the consumer has to pay

I am writing to Mr. H. E. Rex, Des Moines, Iowa, secretary of the International Confederation of Traveling Men's Associations, calling his attention to your bill and urging him to use his influence.

I am inclosing you a copy of some data I have prepared showing a comparison of food products April, 1920 and 1921, which shows a decline of 40 per cent. However, the hotels have given us no reduction in rates.

cline of 40 per cent. However, the hotels in rates.

Conditions are very bad in the State; excessive rains, weather continues cold, the farming interest is very much delayed, and unless we can get more favorable weather a further reduction in cotton acreage will be made.

Again thanking you and with best wishes, I beg to remain,

Yours, very fruly,

E. F. Edwards.

Since the majority of the hotels and cafés buy at wholesale prices, and for that reason the wholesale price only is given, from the best information gathered in comparison with the markets in April, 1920, and in April, 1921, these prices are believed to be approximately correct.

RELIEF OF DISABLED EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have also received a resolution adopted by the American Legion of Helena, Ark., urging the passage of five distinct measures of legislation of interest to ex-service men. The resolution is brief, and I ask that it be printed in the BECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution for relief of the disabled.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
RICHARD L. KITCHENS POST, No. 41,
Helena, Ark., May 11, 1921.

Whereas as a part of the great body of American public opinion which compelled and supported the entrance of this Nation into the World War for democracy and freedom against autocracy and oppression, we feel solemnly and in duty bound to accept along with the victory our troops so handsomely won the obligation to render to our soldiers, sallors, and marines injured and disabled in the service every aid, comfort, and restitution which through hospital care, financial support, and vocational rehabilitation a grateful nation can give; and Whereas, now more than two years after the conclusion of the war, there remains much to be done in providing adequate hospitalization, compensation, and vocational training for our disabled; and Whereas the American Legion, representing the great bulk of the disabled, as well as all exservice men and women, is, after careful analysis and study, suggesting and supporting a program of relief for the disabled which commends itself to us as most conservative and reasonable; and Whereas with deep consciousness of our debt to the disabled we wish to join our voices with the voice of the American Legion in requesting that the legislation proposed be given earnest consideration by the National Congress: Therefore be it

*Resolved*, That we hereby indorse the program of legislation asked by the American Legion of the Sixty-seventh Congress in the interest of the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of America, and urge upon our Representative from this district and our Senators from this State the speedy enactment of the five bills involved, including—

1. Legislation consolidating the three ex-service bureaus.

2. Appropriations for a permanent hospital building program.

3. Legislation decentralizing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

4. Legislation to further extend the benefits of vocational training and providing vocational training with pay for all disabled men with disabilities of 10 per cent or more traceable to the service.

5. Legislation providing privilege of retirement with pay for disabled emergency officers of the World War.

RICHARD L. KITCHENS POST, NO. 41, AMERICAN LEGION, L. J. WILKES, Jr., Post Commander.

THOS. H. JACKS, Adjutant.

FIRENCHT RATES ON PERISHABLE PRODUCTS.

FREIGHT RATES ON PERISHABLE PRODUCTS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD a letter from the vice president of the Southern Railroad Co. in regard to freight rates on watermelons and other perishable products.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM,
OFFICE OF VICE PRESIDENT,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1921.

Hon. William J. Harris, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Asking that you pass this advice to your colleagues who accompanied you in recent visit to my office, I beg to report that an informal conference between representatives of the watermelon growers and representatives of the carriers was had in Macon, Ga., on April 26:

From the report which I have of this conference I am led to believe that while there was some division of opinion as to the effect of the increased transportation charge on the ability of the watermelon producer to market his crop it was probably the feeling of the majority, if not all, that the transportation charge was not an important factor in the situation.

In order that you may see at a glance what the last advance in freight charges represent, using an average load of 1,000 melons at an average weight of 27 pounds each, I invite your attention to the following tabulation. Using Albany, Ga., as a representative shipping point, the advance per melon is as follows:

Cents.

Cents. 4.2 4.8 4.9 4.9 4.8 4.7 2.8 Baltimere, Md.
Philadelphia, Pa.
New York, N. Y.
Buffale, N. Y.
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Chicago, Ili
Cincinnati, Ohio

The citrus producers in Florida and on the Pacific coast and the Georgia peach growers long since learned that they could not get fair returns on their crops by handling through commission houses in the markets of consumption and accepting whatever return the commission man rendered. They, therefore, formed associations and created selling agencies which have produced much more satisfactory results. The distribution under this plan is more intelligent and guitting the market is avoided with its consequent depression of prices.

The interested carriers wish me to say to you that they do not feel that the circumstances warrant reduction in the melon rates.

Yours, very truly,

L. GREEN, Vice President.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, some time ago I conferred with the Interstate Commerce Commission and officials of the Southern Railway about the matter of high freight rates on watermelons and other perishable products raised in Georgia to attempt to assist in saving this business from ruin. The rates are high. The grower gets very little, and he may be discouraged to such an extent that the railroads will lose this business if it ceases to be profitable to the producer. The letter from the vice president of the Southern Railway shows the amount of profiteering going on on the part of the commission merchant and retailer in the eastern, northern, and western markets. I have taken up that phase with the Federal Trade Commission in an effort to secure further information.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1737) for the relief of Con Murphy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 50)

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1479) granting the consent of Congress to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, and I submit a report (No. 49) thereon. unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill,

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

mittee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Point of Rocks, in the county of Frederick, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows

By Mr. FLETCHER (by request):

A bill (S. 1789) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to issue, or cause to be issued, an honorable discharge to James A. Glass (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 1790) to place national guardsmen who entered World War otherwise than through the draft on equal basis as to longevity and continuous service pay with national guards-men who were drafted; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted an amendment providing that an appropriation of $25,000 be made for a historical pictorial record of the American Fleet in foreign waters, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment directing the War Department to cancel and abandon the claim of $18,583.44 for United States property issued to the National Guard of Texas, which was lost, damaged, and destroyed during and immediately after the storm and flood at Corpus Christi, Tex., and surrounding country in September, 1919, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

PARTICIPATION OF UNITED STATES IN EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present a Senate resolution which I ask to have read and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 78) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate information regarding the following points:

1. What negotiations, if any, were had with the representatives of foreign nations, individually or collectively, as a basis for the acceptance by the President of the United States of the invitation extended through the British ambassador to appoint representatives of the United States to meet with the supreme council, the conference of ambassadors, and the Reparations Commission?

2. What instructions, if any, have been given to the representatives of the United States Government who have been designated by the President to sit with the aforesaid conferences and commissions?

3. Whether the ambassador of the United States to Great Britain was authorized by the President or by the State Department to issue the following statement upon his arrival in Southampton, as reported in the cable dispatches dated May 10, to American newspapers:

"I am glad to have this opportunity of expressing at the outset the message of good will, cheer, and hope which my President has commissioned me to convey to your King. We must realize that if we are to grapple successfully with the great problems of the present and the future we must pass from recollection to action. You have more than our sympathy, for there never was a time when America felt so keenly the moral obligations she owes to the mother country."

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I call up Senate resolution No. 73 and ask for its immediate consideration. I should like to have the resolution laid before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the Senator's request.

Mr. HARRISON. I have asked that Senate resolution No. 73 be laid before the Senate for immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator move to take the resolution from the calendar?

Mr. HARRISON. The resolution is not on the calendar; it is on the table.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not prepared to discuss the resolution this morning, but I make the motion that it be referred to the Committee on Rules. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution No. 73, which will be read. The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 73), which had been submitted by Mr. Harrison on the 9th instant, as follows:

been submitted by Mr. Harrison on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That clause 3 of Rule XXXVII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended so as to read as follows:

"3. Unless, by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present, it is agreed to consider a treaty in executive session, all treaties shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in open executive session."

Resolved further, That clause 2 of Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended so as to read as follows:

"2. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations in executive session concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated, also all votes upon any such nomination, shall be kept secret. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret."

Resolved further, That Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be further amended by adding at the end thereof a new clause, as follows:

"2. Unless by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senates by the senates the senate be further amended by adding at the end thereof a new clause as follows:

"7. Unless, by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present, it is agreed to consider a nomination made by the President in executive session, all nominations shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in open executive session."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President— Mr. HARRISON. I thought I had the floor, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules,

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

*Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the Chair to ask whether there was any objection to the resolution being considered by the Senate. If that request requires unanimous consent, I object.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that the resolution which has been lying on the table comes over from a previous day, and therefore does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this resolution-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request does not require unanimous consent. The resolution is on the table, and the Senator from Mississippi may move to take it from the table and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, has the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] been put?

Mr. HARRISON. The motion is for the immediate consideration of the resolution. I understand, however, there is a motion pending, which was made by the Senator from Massachusetts, to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules. That is the That is the parliamentary status, I understand.

Mr. LODGE. That will be the status when the resolution shall have been taken up, of course, but the resolution has not as yet been formally taken up.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that Senate resolution No. 73 be taken from the table and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi. [Putting the question.]

noes seem to have it. The noes have it. The motion is lost.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to speak on my motion for one moment.

Mr. LODGE. It is not open to debate at this hour, certainly, on a motion to take up the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRISON. The parliamentary status, as I understand, is this: I did not yield to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] a moment ago to make his motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules, but I understood that that would be the procedure which he would follow. I would just as soon argue both motions at the same time.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that the resolution has come over from a preceding day and that in the regular order of business it has been laid before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not come over from a preceding day, but was on the table.

Mr. NORRIS. Was it not a resolution that went over under

Mr. LODGE. It requires a motion to take up the resolution, if I understand the situation.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, it would merely delay matters if on a vote of the Senate at this time under that kind of procedure the noes should carry and the motion to take up the resolution should be defeated. I should renew the motion and secure its consideration at some time, so that the motion to refer might be considered. Of course, the Senate will save no time by pressing the proposition that a vote has now been taken and that the Senate has refused to take up the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that no motion is necessary to take up the resolution of the Senator from Mississippi. The ruling of the Chair uniformly in the past has been that a resolution which went over until the following day could be called up as a matter of right by the Senator proposing it.

Mr. LODGE. This is not of that character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is not that kind of a resolution. It was presented and allowed to lie on the table at the request of the Senator from Mississippi, and it requires a motion to take it from the table.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Mississippi asked that the resolution lie on the table, and it has been there for a week.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is not necessary that it should come over from the preceding day. If the Chair will simply turn to the rules, page 10, and read the foot note, he will see the following:

On motion by Mr. Hoar:
Ordered, That until otherwise ordered, the Chair shall proceed with the call for resolutions to be newly offered before laying before the Senate resolutions which came over—

Not from the preceding day, butfrom a former day.

It has uniformly been the practice here—and I am certain that all the precedents will bear me out in the statement-that any Senator submitting a resolution and asking that it lie on the table may call it up on the succeeding day or on some day following during the morning hours, if he secures recognition, and proceed to the discussion of it. The instances of that sort of proceeding in the Senate are without number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in addition to that, it may be said that for some time the practice prevailed in the Senate that the Vice President would lay a resolution coming over from the preceding day before the Senate without a request on the part of its proponent; but some time since the former Vice President [Mr. Marshall] ruled that he would not lay such resolutions before the Senate unless the author of the resolution asked that it be done, and since that time it has been the invariable practice of the Senate, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, to lay such a resolution before the Senate as a matter of right when the proponent so requested.

Mr. President, the history of this motion, as I Mr. BORAH. recall it, is that the Senator from Mississippi submitted the resolution and asked that it lie on the table subject to call. When the next day came the Senator from Mississippi in his place stated that owing to the absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who was not able to be present and who desired to be heard, he would let it go over. Under süch circumstances it would be a matter of bad faith and bad practice to state that it had not come over from the preceding day, even if that were the rule. I venture to say, Mr. President, that for the 14 years I have been here the precedents have been universally to the effect that when a resolution is allowed to lie on the table subject to call either the Chair lays it before the Senate or the Senator who submitted it may call it up at any time, and it then comes automatically before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to know just what is the status. Does the Chair hold that a motion is now pending for the immediate consideration of the resolution, or does the Chair hold that the resolution is up now for the consideration of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi made a motion to take his resolution from the table for immediate consideration. That motion was put by the Chair, and the motion was lost

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Chair hold, then, that the resolution is not now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is on the table. Mr. HARRISON. I call up Senate resolution 73, and ask the Chair to lay it before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a motion to take up the resolu-tion has been made and voted down.

Mr. HARRISON. I have made a request now, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. It is the same subject matter. Mr. HARRISON. Well, if the Senator from Massachusetts thinks that the Senate will save any time by not allowing some expression in reference to this matter, then well and good; but I can assure the Senator that there will be no time saved upon the part of the Senate in preventing the Senate from expressing itself on the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have not the least desire to prevent the resolution from coming up, and I have not objected at all. I was only trying to proceed in what seemed to me the proper parliamentary way. I supposed the resolution would come up without objection. I have no objection at all to its coming up. Let it come up. I know it is going to come up, and the motion is going to be voted on which I have made to refer it to the Committee on Rules, and it is a matter of indifference to me when that is done. I should just as soon have it done now as at any other time.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought those were the views of the Senator.

I ask unanimous consent that Senate resolution No. 73 be laid before the Senate for present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I now renew my motion that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for the motion to be made. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. LODGE. That is all-simply that the motion may be

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there is nothing complicated about this resolution. It merely proposes to change the Standing Rules of the Senate in three particulars. One is to abolish closed and secret executive sessions of the Senate in the consideration of treaties. Another is to abolish secret executive sessions of the Senate touching presidential nominations. The third change that is proposed is that when, in the judgment of the Senate, either nominations or treaties should be considered in closed executive session, by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members of the Senate present, and voting for a closed executive session they may then be considered in that way.

The secret executive session is one of the relics of antiquity that still remains in the United States Congress. a time in the consideration of all matters by the United States Senate when the proceedings were in secrecy. I think for the first three sessions of the Senate the doors were closed to all visitors, in legislative as well as in executive matters. No eye from the galleries or elsewhere could scan the Senators in the deliberation and consideration of great legislative or executive questions. Of course, that lasted only a very short time. It was done away with because secrecy was repugnant to the American people. They did not believe that these doors should be closed, that the public should be kept from these galleries, and the American people should not know what was going on behind closed doors.

This country has gradually developed along many lines. Especially has it progressed in the manner of electing men to public office, and in the consideration of public questions. There was a time, and it was not long since, when a few political leaders who termed themselves "bosses" could meet in public places, in the courthouses and at the capitols throughout the country, determine upon a program of electing certain men to office and fix a procedure touching the enactment of certain legislation, and it went through without hitch and without de-lay; but that time has gone. It is hardly more than a recollection now.

As I heard the expression contained in the resolution just presented by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA Fol-LETTE], quoting the remarks of a now very distinguished representative of the American Government in Great Britain, he quoted that representative as having said that he came to them at the Court of St. James without recollections of the past and only looking at the present. And so the day has passed when political leaders met at these places, termed themselves "bosses," and fixed a program that went through in the selection of their hirelings. The change came about because the sentiment of the American people was aroused. Public officials are now elected through primaries. That custom has become so general that we have almost reached the time when our presidential nominees are selected in primaries. Of course, as the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] knows, sometimes the voice of the people is throttled even after they have had elections for presidential nominees. There are times when a presidential candidate has received the majority of the votes of the State in the selection of delegates to the national convention, but when the delegates get there they do not vote accordingly; and that brings to my mind the fact that now, as far as newspaper reports go, a person has been presented to this body for confirmation who, as the papers say, if they are correct—I do not know—disregarded the instructions of the electorate of his State, and when he got to the Chicago convention he did not vote accordingly.

But while there have been miscarriages of justice, some violations of instructions, after the people have expressed them-selves at the ballot, the sentiment has gradually developed until to-day almost all presidential nominees are declared by preference of the electors of the various States; and the time will come, Mr. President, when every State will adopt the policy of sending its delegates to the national convention with instructions, according to the popular will of the people, to nominate candidates for President.

So we are progressing in the right way. The tendency of the times is not toward secrecy, but is toward openness in dealing with the selection of public officials and the consideration of legislative matters.

Mr. President, at times there may be some argument against the consideration of a treaty in the open. There may be some argument in favor of the proposition that at certain times some treaties should be considered in secrecy. I do not, however, admit the contention, but there is more argument for that than there is for the proposition that all treaties should be considered in secrecy. I can not imagine any treaty ever presented to any legislative body that carried with it greater significance and more vital import to the people, that was filled with more delicate possibilities, that involved more questions of the very greatest importance to more people and to more nations, than did the treaty of Versailles; and yet the distinguished leader of the other side presented a motion that the treaty of Versailles be considered in open executive session of the Senate. It received the unanimous support of the Republican side of the Chamber, as well as of this side, and so that treaty was considered in the open. Every debate, every expression touching it, was recorded in the Congressional Record. Every vote taken was transmitted to the people, and the public knew as much about our action as they could possibly know where a matter was considered in the open; and I am sure that if we had the same thing to go over again there is not a Senator here who would defend the proposition of considering the treaty of Versailles anew in secret session.

The same procedure was advanced when the very important treaty with Colombia was presented to the Senate. Upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, backed by the other side of the aisle and reinforced by the votes of this side, we considered in open executive session the treaty between the United States and Colombia. I am quite sure that no harm was done by that. If it was wise in those two instances to consider those treaties in the open, and others that I might enumerate, then I can not imagine any treaty that would come up that should not be considered by the Senate in open session.

But, Mr. President, as strongly as some might believe that treaties should be considered in closed session, certainly there is no argument in this day and time of our advanced political thought for the consideration of nominations for public office behind closed doors. The people have a right to know the character of men that are being thrust upon them in high official positions. There can not be any argument advanced by any Senator against the assertion that the folks back home have a right to know how you vote on the confirmation of presidential Why, we know that in this country for a long time the opinion has prevailed among the people that we close these doors, we exclude from this Chamber everybody but Senators and three or four trusted and confidential employees, and that we traffic here through senatorial courtesy to confirm political nominees. I do not say that that is done, but I say the prevailing sentiment in America is that men have been confirmed through senatorial courtesy and for political purchases without consideration of their trae willing. poses, without sufficient consideration of their true qualifica-What we ought to do is to try to remove that impression in the country. We ought to deal with the people in an open, frank, and candid way. We should so conduct ourselves as to elicit their confidence. It can not be done when secrecy shrouds

It has been argued, and with a great deal of force, that even though we clothe ourselves in official seclusion, even though we bar the doors and place men outside to keep everybody beyond hearing distance, so that our deliberations shall not reach the ears of the public, so that our votes shall not be known by the people back home, somehow or other it trickles out and gets to them.

It does in some kind of way get out very often, and that is one of the main reasons why we should throw open the doors and abolish these secret sessions of the Senate, especially in dealing with presidential nominations. The exact truth, all of the truth, all of the facts, hardly ever escape the executive sessions of the Senate. Some newspaper correspondent gathers his impression from some person; I will not say some Senator, because I can not imagine that a Senator would violate his oath and violate the rules of the Senate and run the risk of the penalties that are imposed in the rules of this body by telling things that happen in the executive sessions of the Senate; and knowing the character of the employees of the Senate, I can not believe they would tell it; but somehow or other it gets out, and very often it does not get out in its true light, and it works injury oftentimes upon some particular nominee. It hardly ever works good to any particular person whose name is up for

So, Mr. President, the best way to cure the evil and to relieve the suspicion in the minds of the people against this body and to really elevate the procedure of the Senate and the character of presidential appointees is to throw the searchlight of publicity on our proceedings and let frankness and candidness exist in our deliberations and in all our official actions. The way to accomplish that is to change the rule as I have proposed and abolish the old order of things—secrecy and seclusion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that just a few days ago, when the nomination for Internal Revenue Commissioner came in and it was considered by the Senate in so-called secret executive session, the next morning a minute newspaper account appeared in many papers as to what had occurred in the Senate the evening before.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and the accounts were garbled, from the reading of which no one could come to a correct judgment. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has full sway in the matter of the collection of taxes in this country, exercises his judgment in adjusting claims before that office, in settling various disputes which constantly arise, gives his opinion as to what is the law on questions arising in connection with the tax laws, has tens of thousands of agents throughout the country working under him, and the commissioner of prohibition, I might say, is appointed by him.

The decisions of the various agents under him must find lodg-ment at last in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. So it may be that great injustice has been done him by the things which have trickled out touching his nomination. But I say this to you, that he will never be able to over-come what has gone to the people respecting him. There will always be some suspicion in the minds of a great many people in America that he should not have been nominated by the President nor confirmed by the Senate. And even though the Senate might try to rectify the impression, and a majority should express themselves as favorable to his confirmation, there will always be some people in the country who will suspect that there was something wrong touching the nomination, and that he is not a fit man for the place.

The hearing before the Committee on Finance which is now considering that nomination has been in secrecy. ation here was and will be in secrecy. If it had been in the open, if the speeches for and against had been in the open, if everybody had known everything touching the matter, if the public had been taken in and given all the facts, then the people could have formed a correct opinion on the nomination and suspicion would not have attached throughout. So the suggestion the Senator from Tennessee has made illustrates most forcibly that, so far as presidential nominations are concerned, at least, executive sessions of the Senate should be abolished and these doors should be thrown wide open,

In my opinion, Mr. President, it would cause a very high class of men to be nominated for office, because the appointing power would know that the searchlight would be thrown upon them, that every official act of the nominee, all of their training and qualifications, would be analyzed and dissected, and that it would be done openly and aboveboard. The result would be that those in authority would give the matter consideration for a long time before appointments were made.

I read in this morning's paper an article headed as follows: Renominates man Spencer opposed—Harding explains selection of C. C. Madison in letter to the Senator.

There was a nomination which came here, and I knew nothing about it except what I read in the morning Post, and I see in this article that Senator Spencer had held up this appointment for the whole of the last session of Congress. I do not know what argument he used against him; I do not know whether he said he was a man unfitted to be district attorney for the western district of Missouri or not. I do not know all the facts. If I did know, I would not be at liberty to tell my constituents about it. No one will ever know. But the facts are that he held up the appointment of C. C. Madison as attorney in the western district of Missouri for quite a long time, and at this session of Congress the President, as appears in the paper, wrote a letter to Senator Spencer and requested him not to oppose the nomination further. That is a personal matter. Then, in answer to that, I read the following in the paper:

Senator Spencers, replying, said he "cordially recognized" the President's unquestioned right to "make such a personal appointment," and agreed to interpose no objection in the Senate to the confirmation, "though my judgment, as you know," he added, "differs entirely from yours as to this particular appointment."

The American people will never know in what respect Senator Spencer's views differed from the President's touching this appointment. They will never know whether this man is thoroughly qualified for this work, and what there is against his nomination that influenced Senator Spencer for weeks and for months to hold it up in the Senate at the last session and prevent the nomination from being confirmed.

So, Mr. President, it is in order that we may deal openly, fully, freely, frankly, and candidly with these matters that these rules should be changed, abolishing executive sessions, and letting the consideration of presidential nominations and treaties be in the open.

Why, sirs, if one of my constituents should ask me how I voted on the confirmation of some nominee in executive session, under the rules of the Senate I would be subject to a severe penalty if I should tell him. Is that right? Can anyone defend the proposition that such matters as that are not of such concern to my constituents that I am not at liberty to tell him? If I refuse to give the information, I am suspected of wrongdoing; if I give it, I violate the solemn rules of this august body.

Under my resolution if two-thirds of the Senators should, in their judgment, believe that a nomination should be considered secretly, or that a treaty should be considered in executive session, then they could adopt a motion to that effect and it would be so considered.

One other thought, Mr. President, and then I am through.
The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has made a motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Rules. Mr. President, there is no doubt that that would be the orderly procedure to be taken by the Senate. It was the procedure which only a few weeks ago Senators on this side of the Chamber pointed out, and employed every reasonable argument to per-suade Senators on the other side of the aisle to follow, in the matter of changing the rules. But with all the force that was employed, with all the logic and eloquence then expended, we could not get the other side of the aisle to come to our way of thinking.

You will recall the facts, Mr. President, and I am sure Senators will. It was over the organization of this body. At the last session of the Senate we had agreed that a certain number of Senators should compose the committees. We had reduced the number on many committees.

According to the suggestion of the leadership on the other side of the aisle, the rules had been accordingly amended. It had been done in an orderly fashion, on a recommendation of the Committee on Rules; but at the beginning of this session, without precedent, the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] offered a resolution to change the rules of the Senate, increasing the membership of the committees by one or two, in some instances. We pleaded with the Senator from Connecticut, we pleaded with the Senator from Massachusetts, and other Senators on that side of the aisle, to allow that resolution to go in an orderly way to the Rules Committee, and be considered by them. But we were told, in very emphatic language, "That the steam roller was prepared"; "that the machinery was oiled"; and that they were going to "run roughshod over us"—that it could not go to the Rules Committee, but must be acted on by the Senate.

So it seems to me that it is a strong acrobatic performance the Senator from Massachusetts is now displaying, in asking that this resolution, proposing a change of the rules, which would give openness in expression of Senators and openness and candidness in the consideration of treaties and nominations, should now be sent to the Committee on Rules.

No one on the other side of the aisle, and no one on this side, will be deceived by the motion the leader of the majority has made. The Senator is opposed to the change proposed, and what he wants to do is to give the resolution a decent burial—that is what the adoption of his motion would accomplish. Why send it to the Rules Committee? We would never be able to get it out of there. That is where it would remain, because, unfortunately, while that committee is composed of some of the most estimable and able Senators in this body, I fear they think on this question as the Senator from Massachusetts does, and there is not as much progressive spirit among the Republicans who serve on that committee as among those on some other committees of the Senate.

So I submit that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts should not prevail, and those who vote for it will vote just as they would vote on the direct question of the adoption or rejection of this resolution. A vote to send this resolution to the Committee on Rules is a vote against open sessions of the Senate in dealing with nominations and the consideration of treaties, and I sincerely trust that every friend of this idea for open sessions of the Senate in the consideration of nominations and treaties will oppose the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, so that we can come to a direct vote on the question of the change of the rules to accomplish the purposes we have in mind.

change of the rules to accomplish the purposes we have in mind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall vote against the motion to send this proposed amendment to the Committee on Rules, because I believe in meeting every proposition with which I am faced, unless there is some very good reason to the contrary, directly, instead of meeting it indirectly.

Having said that, it is with great pain and reluctance that I say I am not in agreement with my colleague concerning his resolution itself. I shall not vote for its adoption, and in saying that, Mr. President, I feel almost as if I were having a curtain lecture difference with my wife, because there are no two people in the world closer to one another than my colleague and I, politically, personally, socially, and in every other way.

He has proven himself worthy of his position as a Senator from the great State of Mississippi, and he is improving every day in his worthiness. In other words, his worthiness is in-The time will come when he can see and his friends can see that he is thoroughly fit, par excellence, for the position of a Senator from a State whose Senators, while they have not been superior to the Senators from every other State, have been to a full extent equal to them, beginning with old George Poindexter, who dared to beard Andrew Jackson in his den, continuing through the time of Jefferson Davis and James Z. George, and Albert Gallatin Brown to Edward Cary Walthall. who was pronounced by the late colleague of the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, to be par excellence the gentleman of the United States Senate, and of whom Senator Hoar said that "If I had to select one who would be a typical Senator of the United States, I would select Edward Cary Walthall."

But, Mr. President, there must be common sense in dealing with great public questions. I would not have so much objection to submitting treaties after they get to the Senate to an open discussion. Indeed, modern thought has gone so far that a great many people are demanding that even the preliminary conversations leading to the negotiation of a treaty shall be public. A great many envious enemies of the late President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, have gone so far as to say that he advocated that sort of thing, when as a matter of fact he never did. He advocated "open covenants openly arrived at," but not openly conversed about while people were trying to arrive at an agreement. It is stupid and foolish to imagine that great nations can talk honestly and sincerely across the board to one another, through their prime ministers and their ambassadors and their other official representatives, when every accidental or incidental word uttered while a man is "thinking out loud" and trying to arrive at an agreed conclusion is going to the press for the next morning. You can not carry on international business that way.

But when a treaty has reached the stage where it has been passed upon by the men who are consulting with one another beforehand and "thinking out loud" as friends seeking an agreement with one another; where it has passed not only that stage but the second stage, which is the stage of negotiation, and has come to the Senate of the United States upon the question whether it shall be ratified or not, I would not have very much objection to its being discussed with the galleries full, although it is a fact in American history, of not very recent growth, though recently much magnified, that the galleries now and then are filled with persons who voice some European desire or some European hate in order to try to influence the Senate of the United States while it is discussing an international question. I need not go into details about that. Every man who is honest here knows that that has occurred, and he also knows that some few weak backboned brethren have been affected by it.

Mr. President, while I would not, with my warm and personal affection, stand against my colleague, or rather would not get up on the floor and stand against him in argument, if this question were confined simply to the public discussion of treaties, although I would vote against him, I feel called upon to say a few words concerning the absolute impolicy, if not immorality, of the discussion of the confirmation of appointments in open session. I remember since I have been a member of this body that at one time under a Democratic administration the appointment of a man to a high position in the Diplomatic Service was opposed in the Senate upon the ground that he had accepted "hush money" from certain interests in the Orient. I was one of the men who believed the charge and one of the men who voiced it and defeated his nomination. I found out years afterwards that the charge was not true and that I had made a mistake. I remember another case under a Republican administration where there was voiced upon this floor a charge against a man that he had been extremely loose in his associations with the gentler sex. In one case the nomination was defeated and in the other case it was not. In the first case the charge was not true and in the second case it happended that it was true. But when Senators are considering the competency and honesty and worthiness of an appointee why should there go out to the entire country sensational things that would cover with shame his wife or children? There is no common sense in it.

Now, Mr. President, furthermore—and I am going to hurt the feelings of some uplifters, I suppose, though I do not much care if I do, because I have found out that the uplifters' chief aim in life is to lift themselves up—I do not believe that any ordinary private business could be run upon the theory—not the practice, thank God—of civil service which the Federal Government is professing to believe in and carry out.

I would not accept a position as the head of any industry or any enterprise where I could not feel reasonably well assured that my employees were personally loyal to me. I believe that the President of the United States has a right to have men in office under him who are personally and politically loyal to him.

I believe that there are just two exceptions to that rule, and those exceptions are not laid down by me, but were laid down years ago by Thomas Jefferson, the father of American Democracy. Those exceptions are cases of dishonesty or of incompetency.

No President has a right to put a dishonest man or an incompetent man in office, and no Senator has a right to vote for one even when put into office by a President of his own party. But as a rule I shall vote for the nominees of the President of the United States for executive offices unless some real good reason is given to me to oppose them, a reason not only good but going to either the moral character or the mental competency or the physical fitness of the appointee. I have pursued that course under two Democratic administrations and under two or three Republican administrations, and I shall continue to pursue it. But if in case of every little appointment to every little executive office in the United States—and I have forgotten how many there are—if in connection with all of them every word that every Senator can utter confidentially to another Senator as a witness, even as an honest witness concerning a man's character and standing and reputation, is to go abroad through the galleries and the press to the entire world, sometimes shaming the wife and children of that man, so far as I am concerned I am against it. I do not believe in it.

I can tell you how we can get along much better. Stop this infernal foolishness of senatorial courtesy. I met in the Senate one day a Democratic Senator just going out of the Chamber. He said, "John, I should like to have you vote against the confirmation of a certain man whose name has been sent in for an office in my State." I said, "Why? Is he incompetent or dishonest?" He said, "I do not know anything about him in that respect." Then, remembering this absurdity of senatorial courtesy, I said, "Is he personally persona non grata to you, personally obnoxious?" He said, "I do not know anything about him. I never heard of him before in my life until his name was sent in by President Wilson, but I was not consulted about his appointment." He was a Democratic Senator, too. I said, "My dear boy, unless you can get up and say in the open Senate, according to the traditional formula, that this gentleman 'is personally obnoxious,' I shall vote for him." Four days afterwards that Senator rose in his place in this Chamber and solemnly assured the Senate that "the nominee was personally obnoxious" to him, and the nominee was defeated.

I once went before a subcommittee of a committee of this body to attempt to get a nomination through, and I was solemnly informed by a Senator, a member of the subcommittee, that "if a Senator rose in his place and said that some one was personally obnoxious there was no right to go behind his saying it." I had undertaken to prove that the man could not be really "personally obnoxious," because he had been supporting the Senator up to a short time prior to that, and that the Senator had written him five or six very complimentary and flattering letters before they had parted company politically. But I was informed that they could not hear these facts because the Senator, in his august personality and his august officialness, if not officiousness, had risen or was prepared to rise in his place and say that the nominee was personally obnoxious.

the nominee was personally obnoxious.

Mr. President, before I would rise in a secret session of the Senate of the United States to vent my private spleen or to voice my private enmity or to express my sense of another man's personal enmity to me and defeat his nomination in that way without being able and willing to give some public reason for his defeat, I would resign my seat in this august body.

Get rid of this "courtesy of the Senate." The Senate has a right to pass upon appointments. The Constitution secures it

Get rid of this "courtesy of the Senate." The Senate has a right to pass upon appointments. The Constitution secures it that right, and I suppose that being a constitutionally guaranteed right, it is a right in a sense "in discretion," but in sound morals and ethics it is not a right in discretion, except "in judicial discretion."

The reason for the opposition to a man's appointment to public office to aid the Executive in executing the laws ought to be a public reason, that is, a reason founded upon the character of the appointee, his fitness or his unfitness morally, mentally, or physically, but it ought not to flow out of the personal feeling of a Senator. I can understand very well why it should flow out of his political feelings if the man were from the opposite party, for I myself would insist that the man to be appointed to office should be personally and politically in allegiance to the party in power; but to say that he should be personally and politically in allegiance to an individual Senator is carrying that just a little too far.

But, Mr. President, going back to the original subject of discussion between my colleague and myself, I say that we can not afford to discuss in public the private character of men whose names are sent to this body, nor to read communications about them of the truth of which we ourselves must frequently profess ignorance, but by their reading "give the benefit of the doubt" to the accuser.

I have heard charges read where the Senator submitting them said he was "not at liberty" to give the name of the writer. Moreover, the Senator might be right if he knew and trusted the writer and the latter had written confidentially. I say, that we can not afford to discuss in public the private character of men whose names are sent to this body. One reply is that "the press gets it, anyhow."

Well, if the press does, in the first place, it gets it dishonestly, by dishonesty upon the part of the reporter or upon the part of some Senator; and the very fact that it gets it dishonestly makes the news burdened with suspicion, so that it does not carry the weight of evidence with it.

I have witnessed many instances upon this floor where things were said about men that in the old duelling days would have demanded "personal satisfaction," and yet they were true things and ought to have been said, and the nominations ought to have been defeated. But why cover a man's kith and kin with it? Why make it a part of the criminal sensational news of the country?

Mr. President, one more word and I am done. I have not as much sympathy, as have a great many other people, with the appetite for making everything a matter of public news. I have no patience at all with the American reporter who wants to come to me and have a conversation about my daughter's marriage or about what sort of dress she wore at the last reception or ball. Newspaper men ought to confine themselves and their news to public affairs when dealing with public men in public discussion. They are, moreover, entirely too prone to publish everything that looks a little "off color." If they would endeavor half as much to fill their columns with the deeds of nobility and altruism and unselfishness that are going on every day in America, and which are equally sensational if to be exceptional is to be sensational, as they are disposed in their endeavors to fill their columns with notice of every crime and degradation and degeneration of humanity, humanity would be much better off; for, Mr. President, the major part of the make-up of each one of us is quite psychological, and so long as the newspapers do not publish in flaming headlines the deeds of a man who has sent bread to somebody who was starving, or sent clothing to somebody who was naked, or rendered moral or social help to somebody who was tempted, and still continue at the same time to make flaming headlines of every miserable New York plutocratic banker who has had a quarrel with his equally disreputable and prostitute wife, the psychological effect of newspapers upon me and other people is not very good.

I do not believe that newspapers are entitled to have first notice of everything that happens in the world, not even of my baby's birth. Newspapers have their proper function, and their proper function is to get and disseminate the sort of news that informs and improves and helps humanity. Just so far as they fall below that standard they fall below their God-appointed task. A newspaper has no right to have a representative in the galleries of the Senate, sitting there to hear the confidential testimony of the Senator from Idaho about a man from Idaho who has been appointed to an office.

So, Mr. President, I hope, first, that the motion to send this proposed amendment to the rules to the Committee on Rules will be voted down; and I hope, second, that the proposed amendment itself will also be voted down.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Mississippi spoke about the "confidential testimony" of a Senator concerning an appointment. That is the kernel of the whole controversy. How can a Senator have any confidential communication concerning the qualifications of a man for a public office? The public alone is interested in his capacity and his qualifications, and it seems to me that I am not permitted to have any confidential communications, that they must necessarily be public because they relate to a public matter—to the capacity of the nominee to serve in a public position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I agree with the Senator from Idaho about that, but there are Senators who take a different view of it. I have never had anything to say about any human being in the Senate of the United States which I had not previously published, and I do not think any Senator ought to have; but that is when the question concerns him and does not concern his family and can not hurt his family. However, the case is different when that sort of question is raised; and there are frequently such cases. If I were off in the cloakroom confidentially with the Senator from Idaho now, I think I could remind him of a case as to which he would agree with me that it was advisable the details were not made public. The charge was perfectly true and the matter was one, so far as the appointee was concerned, that needed not to be absolutely secret; but it was a different question so far as the man's family was concerned; and the man was defeated upon this floor for office and he ought to have been defeated.

But, Mr. President, there is this reason also; I have noticed, as the Senator has noticed, that men never talk to one another quite as frankly, quite as sincerely, and quite as honestly, quite as much man to man and heart to heart, when they are talking in the presence of galleries and newspaper reporters as when they are simply expressing opinions of the most honest sort privately. The Senator knows that as well as I do.

Mr. BORAH. The difficulty that I have in agreeing with the Senator-and I have very great respect for his opinion-is this: For instance, here is a man who is a candidate for public office. It is true he secures it by appointment instead of election, but, nevertheless, the qualifications which fit him for the office are the same as the qualifications that he ought to have if he were running for office and asking for the general suffrage of the people.

The Senator from Mississippi is a candidate from his State and he undergoes the test of criticism. I do the same, and every other Senator here does likewise; but a man comes here for confirmation after he has been appointed to an office of equal moment, to wit, a Federal judgeship or an internal revenue collector, who has to do with the finances of the United States either in a direct or an indirect way. What possible reason is there for not testing him from the public standpoint in a public discussion, the same as the capacity of the Senator from Mississippi is tested when he is a candidate for the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the answer is very easy. The answer is that the test is not the same; the test is not a full one; the test is not a sufficiently long-continued one. When I go before the people of my State and run for office or the Senator from Idaho goes before the people of his State we are there in the limelight for months, and not only has every enemy a chance to say everything he chooses, but we have a chance to reply. When the question of a man's fitness for executive office is taken up publicly in the presence of the galleries and the press, if so taken up by routine procedure here, that opportunity for thorough analysis and thorough investigation does not exist.

I have called the Senator's attention or the attention of the Senate-I think the Senator from Idaho was in his seat at the time—to a case which I remembered afterwards with very much regret, where I myself had partially led the fight against and had secured the defeat of an appointee upon the ground that he had received hush money from the Orient. . I afterwards discovered, or thought I did, that I was mistaken, after the man had suffered all the damage possible by defeat of his nomination.

If that had been an open election, there would have been months of it, and I would have changed my own mind before the election took place. If it had been discussed in open ses-sion before the galleries, what I had said, which I thought to be absolutely true, would have hurt that man's wife and his children, but, as it happened, it did not hurt anybody but him, and that politically; he was simply defeated; that was all.

Mr. BORAH. They undoubtedly learned why he was defeated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know with certainty; but, so far as I know, they did not. They always believed that he was defeated by the personal animosity of certain Senators who had not been treated very politely when they were in the Orient, I believe. But, however that may be, when the question comes to testing me and testing the Senator from Idaho before our constituents we are fair objects to be shot at from the tops of our heads to the soles of our shoes; we have neither public nor private character; it is just the character of Borah or WIL-LIAMS; but whenever a man is to be shot at haphazard by privileged people holding official position, and all that is said against him is to go out to the world without a long opportunity for him to make sufficient reply, much damage is apt to be done incidentally.

Mr. BORAH. But if a man comes before the Senate for confirmation under a nomination he has back of him a very strong following. He has his friends here; he has the appointing power back of him; he has every opportunity in the world to counteract any false charge. While a Senator may make a charge, the appointee has an opportunity through his friends to meet the charge. However, I look at the question a little differently from the Senator. There is another side to the proposition. We know that when these doors are closed and we sit here as a club inside of closed doors

Mr. WILLIAMS. "Club" is a good word.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is what we are—a great deal passes through here without any scrutiny at all concerning the most vital matters which affect the interests of the people. I recall two instances, in one of which I have always believed a Federal judge was confirmed who ought never to have been confirmed, and never would have been confirmed if there had been an open test of his appointment and confirmation, and now he is there for

Mr. WILLIAMS. All of his time, anyhow.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is, all of his time. There is no way to get him out. I have not any doubt at all but that if a public debate had taken place upon that, he would have been defeated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, that may be true now and then; but it is still true that the test which, as the Senator says, is applied to elective officers and, as might be argued, ought to be applied to executive officers, from the very nature of the case can not be applied here. While the Senator is right in saying that a man, when his name is sent here, has behind him the Executive and the Executive influence, and has behind him his friends, if he has such upon the floor, it may be also true now and then that he has behind him some vindictive enemy who is willing to drive a poniard into his breast. The Senator is right again when he says that the poniard may not be necessarily and perhaps successfully driven; in the majority of cases in the Senate it is not. Senators make allowance for their colleagues' vindictiveness; but if the attempt to drive the poniard went out to the press and to the galleries and everybody else in the world, that man could not possibly escape for all the balance of his life the hurt that had been made by it.

I have known several cases of that sort. The Senator has, too, I doubt not.

But above all things the Executive has a right, unless there is great reason to the contrary, to appoint to executive office as his subordinates and his assistants in executive power and authority men who are politically and personally loyal to him; and there is no right to torture that into a question of personal and political loyalty to a Senator. Above all things, the Senator ought to help me to get rid of what we call "the courtesy of the Senate.'

Mr. BORAH. I did not know we had any. Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; we have it—well, not real courtesy, but the courtesy of inimicality toward private people recommended for office without the previous sanction of a Senator who may be, and often is, the bitter personal enemy of the appointee, for no better reason than that the appointee has never admired the Senator as "a statesman."

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. NORRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball], who is absent. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HITCHCOCK (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Kellogg]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY (when the name of Mr. Walsh of Massachusetts was called). The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr.

WALSH] is unavoidably absent on official business.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandfree] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). First transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania

[Mr. Penrose] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed], upon this motion I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. Page] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] and will vote. I vote "yea." vote. I vote "yea.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. Underwood] is absent on account of a death in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Mc-CORMICK]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. Fernald]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Warson] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Edge] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen].

The result was announced-yeas 42, nays 26, as follows:

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF PROHIBITION LAW.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this morning I introduced a bill (S. 1804) to protect the interest of innocent third persons in property which is used in the unlawful conveyance of goods or commodities by which I propose to amend section 3450 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and I desire to give the reasons why I advocate an amendment of the law.

This section has been the law since 1866. It provides that the vehicles employed in the transportation of liquor shall be forfeited.

I am heartily in favor of prohibition and of its enforcement. At the time that law was passed the means of transportation were very crude. Parties, as a general rule, owned their own conveyances. There was not so much variety in the means of conveying commodities from one section to another.

But in these times, since the invention of the automobile, and since it has become very useful and is here to stay, I feel that this law should be amended. I am not a great advocate of the promiscuous use of automobiles. I feel that possibly double the number are sold that ought to be sold; in other words, that a great many people buy them who can not afford them. However, it is now an established mode of transportation.

It has been brought to my attention that, under the present law, innocent owners of vehicles often suffer, and that innocent creditors often suffer. For instance, if a dealer, or one owning a machine, should sell it on part credit, taking a mortgage, and For instance, if a dealer, or one owning having that mortgage recorded, and later that vehicle should be employed in transporting whisky, it would be forfeited, and there is no way for the innocent creditor to establish his right.

The object of my amendment is to correct that situation. I do not want it understood for one moment that I want it made any easier for parties to engage in this nefarious traffic. I would favor a more rigid regulation, if it were possible to secure it. But in behalf of innocent people and in behalf of trade, I feel that we should amend this law.

Just the other day a case was brought to my attention where a dealer sold a car and took a mortgage for $1,000, the balance of the purchase money; the car was used in transporting whisky, it was seized, and there was no chance for the holder of the mortgage to recover.

My amendment places the burden of proof upon the innocent owner or the innocent creditor to establish his right, and to show to the court that he did not participate in the unlawful use, that he did not connive at it, was not interested in it, or anything of that kind.

I feel that we should be willing to submit these matters to our courts, and where a state of facts exists whereby the innocent owner or the innocent creditor had done all that could be expected of him under the law his rights should be protected.

Mr. President, I want to make this statement, because I do not want it understood that I desire the bars let down at all. As I said, I would vote for a stricter enforcement of the prohibition law if that could be accomplished.

I do not know that my amendment is perfect, but I am in hopes the Judiciary Committee will improve on it, perhaps, if necessary, and will report out something whereby innocent owners and creditors can be protected.

Recently the United States Supreme Court decided a case similar to the one I cited, and they found that there was no relief for the innocent creditor.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words with reference to the Panama Canal.

Since 1898 when the interest of the Nation was centered upon the progress of the Oregon during its historic trip from the Pacific to the Atlantic the Panama Canal has been associated with the Navy.

Last month I accompanied a party of Congressmen to Panama. The purpose of our trip was to become acquainted with the surroundings and to investigate the operation of the canal. Permit me to say in the beginning that the primary reason for the canal is to transfer ships from the ocean upon one side of the Isthmus to the ocean upon the other side.

In 1920 an average of 7\(^2\) ships per day was put through the canal, and to accomplish this task of transferring the 73 ships per day we maintain at the Isthmus a force of 17,500 civil employees, guarded by an Army and Navy.

The distance from deep water to deep water is 50 miles; of this distance perhaps 10 miles is canal proper, 30 miles lakes created by the dams, and 10 miles of channel through the swamps and shallow water upon either side.

Alongside of the canal from ocean to ocean is a jitney railroad used for local purposes. In the building of this railroad there is said to have been expended $150,000 per mile. The total cost of the canal, as we know, was about $400,000,000. The interest upon same at a 3 per cent basis would be $12,000,000 per year; at 4 per cent, $16,000,000; at 5 per cent, $20,000,000 per year. In addition we have just given Colombia $25,000,000, and as part of the operating expenses we pay the Republic of Panama $250,000 per year as rental, we having paid them $10,000,000 at the beginning of the enterprise. From a plague spot of yellow fever and death, the genius and energy of Gen. Gorgas has changed the Canal Zone to one of the healthiest and most sanitary spots on earth.

During the construction of the canal we maintained at the Isthmus a force of about 6,000 or 7,000 white American citizens and 35,000 black West India natives of Jamaica and Barbados.

The canal was opened for regular traffic about January, 1915, six and one-half years ago, and now, in order to put the 73 ships per day through the canal it seems necessary to keep in Government employ at the Isthmus 4,000 white Americans and 14,000 colored West Indians. The wage paid the colored men is about one-third to two-fifths the wage paid the white men.

The city of Cristobal, upon the Atlantic side, has a population of perhaps 30,000, and Panama, upon the Pacific, 50,000. Although both these cities are in the Canal Zone, they are Panaman territory, and the United States is only responsible for health conditions and order. "Responsible" is hardly the right word. Under the treaty the United States can maintain order and health if the authorities of Panama are unable to do so.

Gen. Gorgas expended some $7,000,000 at the inception of the work in providing these foreign centers of population with sewers, waterworks, paving, and so forth. It was absolutely necessary to create sanitary conditions or the canal could not have been built.

Naturally back in 1900 to 1905 the health reports from Panama were not conducive to white men from the United States going there to work. In order to get white men to go there from the United States the following inducements were

First. Free transportation, in the first instance, and passage for vacations at $20 per man (since increased to $30). Second. Two months' vacation each year at full pay.

Third. Free house rent.

Fourth. Free hospitals and free medical attendance.

Fifth, Privilege to purchase supplies at Government commissary at cost plus 10 per cent.

Sixth. Prevailing rates of wages in the United States with one-fourth additional added.

These inducements or privileges are still maintained. The wage rate is fixed by the governor, or some man representing him, and two employees, members of the American Federation

The following are some of the wages paid:

Bricklayers, $1.54 per hour. That means that for an 8-hour day the bricklayer gets $12.32, and that added together for a month would make something more than $300 per month.

Carpenters, $1.33 per hour. Electricians, $1.26 per hour.
Marble setters, $1.44 per hour.
Metal lathers, $1.44 per hour.
Painters, $1.27 per hour.
Plasterers, $1.52 per hour. Plumbers, $1.45 per hour.

These men all get free rent, free medical attendance; free water, light, some of the heavy furniture, free care of lawns, free cartage if necessary to move, 60 days each year of vacation with full pay, a $30 rate to the United States for vacations. Where there is not room upon Government vessels the Government makes up the difference between $30 and the rate of $79 on United Fruit Co, vessels, and the actual amount paid by the Government in the month of June in the year 1919 was $19,000 for this one item alone.

I was told that it cost the Government $400 per year, or $33 per month, to keep the houses in repair, and that the total for this upkeep and trimming of lawns was about $800,000 last

This beautifying work is well done and the communities of Ancon and Balboa are wonderful beauty spots.

Gatun Lake, as you know, is 85 feet above the level of the ocean. The 7g vessels per day are handled on each side by three locks each averaging a lift of 283 feet. The daily report for March 16, 1921, shows 893 men on the monthly pay roll for lock operation alone. In the locks at Sault Ste. Marie, where during the senson an endless stream of vessels go through, they are handled by their own power. At Panama it is thought best to move them through the locks with electric mules.

There is 1 motorman to an engine or mule. To put through the 7% ships per day 108 motormen are kept upon the pay roll.

The route of the old Panama Railroad is under the lake. There is no through business for a railroad, but for the convenience of the population in Cristobal and Panama and the canal employees a single-track railroad was built alongside the canal at a cost of $150,000 per mile—some say it cost $220,000 per mile. Three regular passenger trains per day and one freight and mixed train are operated, and perhaps additional service that might in a month amount to one other train. The distance is 50 miles, or, say, a total train movement per day of, say, 500 miles. In addition, naturally, there are some work trains and yard switching connected with 50 miles of road. Railroad trainmen contracts in the States are based upon 100 miles as being a day's work for a crew. Five hundred miles of train movement per day at Panama would look as if it would take five crews, but in March, 1921, there were 29 engineers and 29 conductors upon the monthly pay roll.

As part of the original cost of construction there was erected upon the Atlantic and Pacific side coal-handling plants said to be the most perfect in the world.

March 16, 1921, 1,020 employees were on the pay roll of the coaling stations alone.

In 1920 an average of 3 tons per day per man was handled. One of their steam shovels or clams will handle a ton in a Part of the overflow water from Gatun Lake is turned into electric power to operate the locks and to farnish power and light for the houses and shops. The private electric company furnishing power and light for Panama and Cristobal have asked to buy the dump power or wasted power that the canal can not use, offering 2 mills a kilowatt hour for same, but no contract has been made and the surplus water runs to waste.

There is a joint committee at the Isthmus to settle claims. against the Government. In 12 months-1918 to 1919-it cost $65,000 for the expenses of the committee, and they made settlements to the amount of $90,000.

We own at Cristobal one of the finest cold-storage plants in the world. We are in the cattle business at Panama; cattle are bought in the United States or Colombia. If you have cattle you must have a ranch, so we improved 4,000 acres of the land we owned at a cost of $1,323,000, or $331 per acre-nice ranch. We invested $221,000 in a dairy and cows, and in 1918-19 lost the interest on the money and $34,000 additional in its operation. In March, 1921, Government milk was seiling at 32 cents a quart, and across the street, in Panama, at 22 cents a quart. We invested $190,000 in a chicken farm and lost $46,000 in one year's operation. Government chickens are selling at 45 cents to 60 cents a pound, and eggs from 60 cents to 70 cents per dozen.

The local street-car company buys its cast-iron brake shoes in the States delivered at Panama for $1 each. The Government shops offered to make them for $5 each—16 pounds of cast

One of the higher Army officers at the Isthmus told me he had three joints of stovepipe made at the Balboa shops, pipe that at that time could be bought in a stove shop up here at 30 cents a joint. His cost $4.50.

In closing I wish to state that all the employees from the governor down were extremely courteous and gave the Members of Congress every opportunity for investigation.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNary in the chair). The question is on the committee amendment on page 35, line 7, in the item for "Fuel and transportation," where it is proposed to strike out "$17,500,000" and to insert in lien thereof.

"$25,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. After a conversation I had with the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], I would like to have this amendment go over. I will say to the Senator from Washington that at present I do not observe any other amendment which I desire to have passed over, but I would like to have this one go over; because it has been debated and I know it would be very difficult to get a vote on it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 35, after line 15, to add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the United States Shipping Board shall not require payment from the Navy Department for the charter hire of vessels furnished or to be furnished from July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1922, inclusive, for the use of that department when such vessels are owned by the United States Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for construction and repair of vessels from "$22,500.000" to "$29,400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 16, to insert: The statutory limit of $300,000 for repairs and changes to capital ships of the Navy as provided in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, approved August 29, 1916, is hereby changed to $500,000.

Mr. BORAH. Upon that amendment I make the point of order that it changes existing law, and is general legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not think the point of order is well taken, as it is a limitation upon the appropriations contained in the bill for repairs upon vessels, which is a well-recognized exception to the general rule as to legislation on appropriation bills. It fixes the conditions and terms under which the money appropriated for repairs shall be expended, and for that reason it is obvious, it seems to me, that the point of order is not well taken. It is a limitation upon the appropri-

It occurs to me that it is not a limitation, but is an increase of the appropriation; and that it changes existing law there can be no doubt, because it reads:

The statutory limit of $300,000 for repairs and changes to capital ships of the Navy as provided in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, approved August 29, 1916, is hereby changed to $500,000.

It is a change of existing law, and also increases the appropriation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not increase the appropriation, Mr. President. The effect of it is simply to fix a condition or a limitation upon the manner as to how the money appropriated shall be expended, though it is true that the limitation is fixed at a rate different from that fixed before. It does not change the amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and it is sustained.

The next amendment was, in the items for Bureau of Engineering, on page 38, after line 8, to insert "including not to exceed $2,500 for the purchase of land necessary for radio shore stations"; and on page 39, line 4, to increase the total appropriation for Bureau of Engineering from "$20,500,000" to "$28,-000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 4, to insert:

Submarine engines: For the renewal of engines of submarines L-1, L-2, L-3, L-4, L-9, L-10, L-11, and M-1, to be available until expended, $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for Naval Academy, on page 39, line 24, to increase the salary of the secretary of the Naval Academy from "$2,750" to "$3,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this amendment proposes to increase the salary of the Secretary of the Naval Academy from $2,750 to $3,000, an increase of $250?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct. The circumstances under which the amendment was reported by the committee are that the present incumbent of the position has held the place for 20 years. He is a very valuable man and has under him a force of clerks, mechanics, and laborers, some of whom receive a higher salary than he does. This man keeps all of the records of the midshipmen and makes up all the returns. He is a civilian and lives at Annapolis and has no emoluments of any character or description except his pay, and it was regarded by the committee as a mere act of justice and entirely reasonable to make this slight increase in his pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Jones of Washington in The question is on agreeing to the committee the chair). amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 7, to increase the total of the appropriations in the paragraph from "$161,350" to "$161,600," and in line 9, to increase the total pay of professors and others, Naval Academy, from "$546,350" to "$546,600."

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was, in the items for commissary department, on page 41, line 10, to strike out "$238,415.99" and insert "$390,415.99."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 16, to increase the total of the appropriations for civil establishment, Naval Academy, from "$1,035,395.83" to "$1,187,645.83."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 13, to change the total appropriation for Naval Academy from "$2,273,595.83" to $2,425,845.83.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 44, line 18, to increase the appropriation for pay of enlisted men of the Marine Corps from "$11,550,300.75" to "$13,620,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for pay of the Marine Corps from "$17,533.891.90" to "$19,603,591.14."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 9, to increase the appropriation for provisions, Marine Corps, from "$3,958,950" to "$5,672,402."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 12, to increase the appropriation for clothing, Marine Corps, from "$1,000,000" to $2,250,000.1

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 18, to increase the appropriation for fuel, Marine Corps, from "$590,000" to $1,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 11, to increase the appropriation for military stores, Marine Corps, from "$500,000" to "$757,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 17, to increase the appropriation for transportation and recruiting, Marine Corps, from "$750,000" to "$946,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 6, to increase the appropriation for forage, Marine Corps, from "$100,000" to "$120,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 9, after the word "advertising," to strike out "washing and cleaning bed linen, towels, and articles of regulation clothing in use by enlisted men" and inserting "washing bed linen, towels, and other articles of Government property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for contingent expenses, Marine Corps, from $2,000,000" to "$3,185,200."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington to allow that amendment and the one following, beginning in line 5, page 51, increasing the appropriation from $9,348,950 to $14,381,002 to go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted. The amendment following, in line 13, should also go over, and, in the absence of objection, that order will be made.

Mr. BORAH. That amendment should also go over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, at the top of page 52, to insert:

Increase of the Navy: The construction of two airplane carriers of the most modern type and equipment and most advantageous size is hereby authorized at a limit of cost of $26,000,000 each, including hull, machinery, armor and armament, and the sum of $15,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward their construction. The authorization for 12 destroyers heretofore granted is hereby revoked.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the amendment just stated and the one following, beginning on line 8, page 52, and ending on line 16, may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks that the two amendments be passed over. Without objection, that order will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 53, after line 14, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 2. That hereafter no enlisted man in the Navy shall be paid a reenlistment gratuity, or any proportionate part thereof, in excess of an amount equal to one month's pay for each year of service in the last expiring enlistment of such enlisted man.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 19, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 3. That hereafter such moneys as may be appropriated under the Bureau of Yards and Docks for public works, exclusive of repairs and preservation, shall be available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 23, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 4. That during the fiscal year 1922 the ration for officers and enlisted men of the Navy entitled thereto shall be commuted at the rate of 60 cents per diem; and the commuted value of the ration for midshipmen shall be $1.08 per diem; and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital shall be credited at the rate of $1 per ration to the naval hospital fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 4, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 5. That section 1481 of the Revised Statutes shall apply to all branches of the naval service: Provided, That hereafter no officer shall be retired under the provisions of said section who has not at the time of retirement attained the permanent rank of captain in the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 9, to insert the following additional section:

Sec. 6 That as consideration for a suitable site and requisite rights, privileges, and easements for a receiving and distant-control radio station in Porto Rico the Secretary et the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to exchange or lease for such period as he may deem proper my land under naval control in Porto Rico not otherwise required for naval purposes: Provided, That in time of war or national emergency, if necessary, the Navy Department shall have without cost free and unlimited use of any land so exchanged or leased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 19, to insert

the following additional section:

SEC. 7. That officers of the Navy who have been or hereafter may be promoted or appointed to the grades or ranks of permanent commander, captain, or rear admiral shall take rank and precedence in their respective grades or ranks ahead of officers holding temporary appointments therein: Provided, That from May 22, 1917, until the date of the approval of this act officers of the Navy shall take rank and precedence from the date of their original commission in the rank or grade, whether permanent or temporary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 2, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer to the Fleet Naval Reserve at any time within his discretion any enlisted man of the naval service with 16 or more years' naval service: Provided, That men so transferred with less than 20 years' service shall receive the retainer pay now prescribed by law for transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve of 10 years' naval service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 9, to insert the additional section:

SEC 9. That section 8 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1920, is hereby suspended until January 1, 1923, in its application to persons honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard between April 6, 1917, and January 1, 1920; Provided, That persons convicted of a felony or a crime involving moral turpitude are excepted from the operation of the suspension herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 19, to insert the following additional section:

the following additional section:

Sec. 10. That the last paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1920, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That all officers of the Naval Reserve Force and temporary officers of the Navy who have heretofore incurred or may hereafter incurphysical disability in line of duty shall be eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Navy who have incurred physical disability in line of duty: Provided, however, That application for such retirement shall be filed with the Secretary of the Navy not inter than June 30, 1922."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 7, to insert the following additional section:

the following additional section:

SEC. 11. That in all cases where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the President that a commissioned or warrant officer or an enlisted man with the charge of descrition now standing against him on the rolls and records of the Navy or Marine Corps has served honerably in the war with the German Government, either in the military forces of the Allies or in other branches of the military, service of the United States, the President is horeby authorized, in his discretion, to cause an entry to be made on said rolls and records of the Navy or Marine Corps, relieving said officer or enlisted man of all of the disabilities which he had heretofore or would hereafter suffer by virtue of said charge of describin thus appearing against him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 20, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 12. That the benefits provided in the act of June 4, 1920, for beneficiaries of officers dying in the service shall apply in the cases of all officers who died on active duty between November 11, 1918, and June 4, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 24, to insert the following additional section:

Sec. 13. That the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to filow in the settlement of the accounts of disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps payments made by them for civilian outfits furnished enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps upon discharge for bad conduct, undestrability, or inaptitude since November 13, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 5, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 14. That the paragraph in the act approved March 3, 1921, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, providing for temporary employees in the office of the Solicitor for the Navy Department, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"For temporary employees in the office of the Solicitor for the Navy Department, $20,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed horeunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: One at $6,000, one at $2,400, one at $2,250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 16, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 15. That any suit at law or in equity now pending or hereafter brought in any State court on account of any contract for services or materials for the performance of any contract, or any part of the work contemplated by any contract, made by or for the Navy Department during the period of the war with Germany, and for which services or materials that the department might be held bound to reimburse its contractor in the amount determined in such suit, may be removed by the defendant therein to the district court of the United States for the proper district if so requested by the Secretary of the Navy, and if the United States thereafter assumes the defense of such suits as the real party in interest, the procedure therein and the defense thereaf shall be subject to the rules of court and the law applicable to the defense of suits against the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the effect of that amendment? It was read so rapidly that it was difficult to comprehend its meaning. I do not understand the following provision in the amendment:

And for which services or materials that the department might be held bound to reimburse its contractor in the amount determined in such sult, may be removed by the defendant therein to the district court of the United States for the proper district if so requested by the Secretary of the Navy, and if the United States thereafter assumes the defense of such suits as the real party in interest, the procedure therein and the defense thereof shall be subject to the rules of court and the law applicable to the defense of suits against the United States.

Would not that be true in any event?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be true, undoubtedly, if the United States enters the case as a party. I do know that the concluding lines which the Senator has read are necessary. The language as a whole was adopted by the committee from a lill which was reported favorably by the House Committee on Naval Affairs. The purpose of the amendment is to enable the United States to protect its interest in the first instance in suits which are brought on account of Government business against contractors and to enable the United States to enter its appearance and defend the suits.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate by discussing the amendment now, and shall not object to its being agreed to, with the understanding that in case anything should occur we may reconsider it later. I do not ask that it go over, but that it may be reconsidered in the event that seems desirable. The amendment has been called to my attention by some Senator, but I do not recall at the moment by whom.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have been informed that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] was interested in the I have no objection to reopening it in case any Senmatter.

ator should care to do so.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenboot] called my attention to this amendment and suggested that he thought it was not necessary to include the last clause, beginning with line 1, on page 58. I think he would be entirely satisfied if there were left out all after the word "Navy," the third word in line 1.

Mr. BORAH. We can reconsider it if necessary,

Mr. POINDEXTER. It can be reconsidered if that is desired. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 58, after line 5, to insert the following additional section :

Section:

Sec. 16. That there is hereby created and established in the Department of the Navy a bureau of aeronautics, which shall be charged with matters pertaining to naval aeronautics as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and all of the duties of said bureau shall be performed under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and its orders shall be considered as emanating from him and shall lave full force and effect as such.

There shall be a chief of the bureau of aeronautics, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the officers of the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, for a period of four years, and who shall, while holding such position, have the corresponding rank and receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the Department of the Navy.

An officer of the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps may be detailed as assistant chief of the bureau of aeronautics, and such officer shall receive the highest pay of his grade, and, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the chief of the bureau, shall, until otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179 of the Revised Statutes, perform the duties of such chief until his successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

There shall be a chief clerk at a salary of $2.250 per annum. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer to the bureau of aeronautics such number of the civilian, technical, clerical, and messenger personnel, together with such records, equipment, and facilities now assigned for aeronautic work under the various bureaus of the Department of the Navy or Marine Corps as in his judgment may be necessary. The unexpended and unobligated portion of all moneys heretofore appropriated for any bureau of the Department of the Navy or Marine Corps as in his judgment may be necessary. The unexpended and unobligated portion of all moneys heretofo

The number of officers and culisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps detailed to duty in aircraft and involving actual flying, and to duties in connection with aircraft, shall bereafter be in accordance with the requirements of naval aviation as determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I request that section 16 be passed over for the present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, and without objection, section 16 will be passed over. Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to take this occasion, so long as section 16 has been referred to, to state its purpose. It is not designed to create any new service in the Navy Department; it is simply to coordinate and unite the various services connected with aviation that already exist in the Navy Department and to put them all under one head; instead of having it as now a section, as it is called, of the Bureau of Operations, to make it a bureau itself under a bureau chief, who, of course, will be a naval officer. I apprehend that the effect will be not only to improve the Air Service of the Navy but to reduce expenditures. It does not extend outside of the Navy Department; it simply relates to the Air Service in the Navy Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, section 16 will be passed over. The Chair is informed that there was one amendment inadvertently omitted, which will now be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, at the beginning of line 8, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "seven," so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for maintenance of more than seven heavier than air stations on the coasts of the continental United States.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the reading of the bill and the consideration of all the committee amendments except those which have been passed over.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 16, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 16, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou dost know us altogether. Thou knowest our downsitting and our uprising and understandeth our thought afar off. We therefore ask that the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts may be acceptable in Thy sight, O God, our strength and our Redeemer, And thus may we live for Thy glory. We ask in Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. Curtis and by manimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. WALSH of Massachuseits. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Warson], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr.

DILLINGHAM] are engaged in a hearing before the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

INVITATION TO QUANTICO, VA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, which was read, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 13, 1921.

Washington, May 13, 1921.

Hon. Calvin Coolidge,

Yice President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mn. Vice President: The Marine Corps east coast base is located near Washington, on the Potomac River, at Quantico, Va. It was there that its overseas regiments were trained during the war and where its expeditionary forces are now stationed. I am anxious to have the Members of the Senate visit Quantico so that they may have an opportunity to observe the work of the Marine Corps.

I am therefore writing to request you to extend to the Members of the Senate an invitation to go to Quantico on Thursday, May the 19th. The President has kindly placed the U. S. S. Mayflover at our disposal and that vessel will get underway at the Washington Navy Yard at 8 a. m. on the above-mentioned date. The Senators will be provided dinner and supper at Quantico and the Mayflower will return with them to Washington in the evening, arriving probably not earlier than 11 p m. However, Quantico is on the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad, and there will be a number of trains available for those desiring to return at an earlier hour.

Arrangements will be made to issue individual nontransferable cards to the Senators who desire to accept this invitation. These cards should be presented at the navy yard gate and at the gangway of the Mayflower.

Trusting that a large delegation will be able to make the trip and should be presented at the navy yard and Mayfolper.

Trusting that a large delegation will be able to make the trip and with best wishes to you, I am, as always,
Wery sincerely, yours,

EDWIN DENBY.

Secretary of the Navy. The same invitation for the same day is being extended to the Members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. OVERMAN

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the date?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thursday, May 19. The communication will lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation for the recognition of the Irish republic, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented a petition of the Ukrainian-American Citizens' Club, and sundry citizens, of Boston, Mass., relative to the case of East Galicia, praying for the recognition by the United States of the West Ukrainian Republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions of the Federation of Women's Clubs, of Pittsburg; the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, of Pittsburg; and the Lions' Club, of Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rago. Duquoin, Basil, Adams, and Belmont, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution of Henry J. Sweeney Post, No. 2, the American Legion, of Manchester, N. H., favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KING presented a petition of Emil Gathmann and George A. Durnin, of Baltimore, Md., and Olga Gathmann Foley, of Washington, D. C., praying that they be allowed to furnish free of cost to the Government, for use at a proposed test of airplane versus battleship, one unloaded bomb having a capacity of approximately 2 tons of trinitrotoluol (T. N. T.), etc., which was proximately 2 tons of trimitrotomol (1. N. T.), etc., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a resolution of Bee County Post, No. 274, American Legion, of Beeville, Tex., protesting against the United States concluding a separate peace with Germany; also any movement looking to disarmament or the curtailment of appropriations for maintenance of the Army and Navy and the Air Service Department, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations,

AMERICAN GLOVE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I present a communication from the California Glove Co., which contains an impor-tant statement of facts and thoughtful suggestions in regard to the American glove manufacturing industry. Attached to the letter there is a tabulated statement showing the comparative items of expense of manufacture, namely, the expense or cost of manufacture in America and in the competing foreign country. The communication may be helpful in framing a tariff bill designed to protect and encourage the American industries, including this very important one. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the communication and panying statement were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

CALIFORNIA GLOVE Co., Napa, Calif., May 5, 1921.

California Glove Co., Napa, Calif., May 5, 1921.

Hon. Samuel M. Shorthdee,

The Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We should like to bring to your attention the imperative necessity of affording tariff protection to the kid and light leather-glove manufacturers of the United States. The present crisis in this industry can only be met by tariff regulation, and we urge you to do all in your power to have a duty on leather gloves of 50 per cent ad valorem on United States valuation included in the bill now before Congress.

Prior to the war imports of ladies' leather gloves amounted to a yearly average of $5,000,000, and the duty assessed thereon gave the Government approximately $3,200,000.

In 1920 imports increased to about $13,250,000 and the duty had shrunk to such an extent that the Government received approximately $1,660,000, a revenue loss of about $2,000,000.

Allow us also to draw your attention to the inclosed comparative schedule of wages paid by the glove manufacturers in France and the United States. You will readily see that direct competition with foreign manufacturers is impossible.

We have been building a business in street, dress, motor, and sporting gloves, which will be utterly ruined unless the influx of the cheaper European merchandise is checked. We can not ask our operators to adopt a lower standard of living, nor could we, were they willing, as the California minimum wage law would not permit them to.

You will feel more interested in its matter, perhaps, when we tell you that California ranks fourth among the States in the production of gloves, and we sincerely hope you will do whatever lies in your power to assist this growing industry.

California Glove Co., R. Raymond, President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment providing that no battleship, battle cruiser, scout cruiser, torpedo-boat destroyer, submarine, or airplane carrier herein appropriated for shall be employed in any manner to coerce or compel the collection of any pecuniary claim of any kind, class, or nature, of any individual, firm, or corporation, or to enforce any claim of right to any grant or concession for or on behalf of any private poration of the United States, incitizen, copartnership, or tended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

OH, PROSPECTING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES (S. DOC. NO. 11).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which was read as follows:

To the Senate:

I beg to refer to the Senate's resolution of March 10, 1920, requesting the President, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the Senate-

"First, as to what restrictions, if any, are imposed, either directly or indirectly, by France, Great Britain, Holland, Japan, or any other foreign country, or the dependencies thereof, upon the citizens of the United States in the matter of prospecting for petroleum or in the acquisition and development of lands containing the same within the territory subject to the jurisdiction and influence of such countries.

"Second, if such restrictions exist, what steps have been taken by the Government of the United States to secure their removal and equality of treatment in respect of citizens of the United States.

"Third, if any restrictions are imposed by the Government of Mexico upon citizens of the United States in regard to the acquisition or development of petroleum-bearing lands within its jurisdiction which are not imposed upon nationals of other foreign countries.

Fourth, if any such discriminating restrictions are imposed by the Government of Mexico upon citizens of the United States, what steps have been taken by the Government to secure removal of such restrictions and the equality of treatment in respect to citizens of the United States."

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, fornishing information requested by the resolution, supplementary to that embodied in a report submitted May 14, 1920, as far as such information can be supplied compatibly with the public

WARREN G. HARDING.

(Enclosure: Report by the Secretary of State.)

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 16, 1931.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the message, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed for the use of Senators

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message, with the accompanying papers, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (8, 656) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of the Navy was announced as first in order, Mr. PITTMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go

EXCHANGE OF GOVERNMENT LANDS IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 1021) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the bill be read.

The reading clerk read the bill, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration as follows:

mittee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration as follows:

**Re it enacted, ctc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, when in his opinion the public good demands it, to exchange any land or any interest in land owned by the United States now or hereafter set apart for military purposes in the Territory of Hawali, or any interest therein of equal value located in that Territory and selected by the Secretary of War, and thereafter to set apart for military purposes the lands or interest therein so acquired: **Provided,** That the Attorney General of the United States shall first pass upon and approve the title to the privately owned lands or interest therein to be acquired by the United States before any exchange of lands shall be made under the provisions of this act.

**Sec. 2.* That the value of the lands or interests to be so exchanged shall be determined by three appraisers, one of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, one by the owner of the private property, and the third shall be chosen by the two appraisers so appointed, when approved by the military commander of the Hawaiian Department, may be paid out of the current appropriations for contingencies of the Army.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs how ex-tensive would be the power granted by this bill if passed? The power appears to be entirely unlimited. How much land does the Government of the United States own for military purposes in the Hawalian Islands?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I came into the Chamber just as the Senator was asking his question, but I may say that the War Department in making the request upon Congress for the authority proposed to be conferred by the bill did not state the acreage involved. The extent of the acreage, as I understand, is uncertain and would depend upon changing conditions and the negotiations which could be made with private owners in exchanging land which the Government does not need for any purpose for land which the Government would like very much to have.

I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the report of the committee on the bill which will be found in the Senator's calendar file. This bill, I may say, passed the Senate at the last session. A similar bill has been reintroduced, again examined by the Committee on Military Affairs, and has again been reported favorably. I will read a portion of the report on the bill, which states:

Owing to changes in the plans for defense of these islands, brought about principally by the changes in methods of warfare during the past five years, it is necessary that additional tracts of land be obtained in the near inture. In time of peace private land can be taken only by condemnation, and as it can be condemned or purchased only by special authority of Congress a total of delays and an increase in values frequently necessitates an additional appropriation owing to the advance in price between the time of the request for the appropriation and the condemnation judgment.

The information from the department is that it is possible that the department will want to acquire several tracts, most of which are comparatively small in acreage. To do that ordinarily would require condemnation proceedings, which in turn would require a special act of Congress authorizing the condemnation proceedings, and an examination by Congress of the maps and surveys of every single tract involved, necessitating of course, as I read from the report a moment ago, long delay. In the meantime the department would not be able to exchange the lands for anything like the favorable terms on which it is hoped it can exchange them under general authority such as is contained in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I fully approve the policy of the bill. If the Government owns lands which have been set apart for military purposes in the Hawallan Islands that do not seem to be particularly suited to military purposes or for which there is no immediate need, and there are lands which are held in private ownership which ought to be acquired for military purposes, it would undoubtedly be advisable to give some authority to the Secretary of War to make the ex-change, but under this bill there is no limitation whatever, Any land which is held in the Hawaiian Islands for military purposes, no matter what may be its extent, may be exchanged for other lands now held in private ownership. It seems to me that the proposed grant is far too comprehensive; that it ought to be limited in some way or other, so that everything which we have there may not be granted away or an unlimited area acquired for military purposes.

Then, too, the difference is to be paid out of moneys to be appropriated. We have not any kind of an idea about how much money will be required.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is not contemplated that there shall be any payment of money; there is merely to be an exchange of land. Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but the difference in value is to be paid.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in the event that the Government requires more private lands than it can exchange for the present held lands

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So there is proposed to be conferred general authority to acquire any quantity of land, the difference in value to be paid outright. That is to say, the Government may exchange 5 acres of land now within a small military reservation for 5 000 acres of land held in private ownership, the two tracts will be appraised, and the difference will be paid to the owner of the private property. There is no limit to the amount which can thus be acquired?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the last sentence in the bill which provides:

The expense necessary to effect the appraisements herein anthorized, when approved by the military commander of the Hawalian Department, may be paid out of the current appropriations for contingencies of the may b

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The payments are limited only by the appropriation made for all contingent purposes of the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The appropriations for contingencies in the Army amount to about $50,000 altogether. It is a very triffing sum, out of which the Secretary of War has to meet all emergencies which may come up of every kind and char-

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is another consideration which does not affect the question of the unlimited power to make the exchange. I think that the bill ought to be recommitted with instructions to limit the authority in some man-

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will recall that in the Committee on Military Affairs I raised almost the identical questions that have been suggested by the Senator from Montana. After a consideration of the subject, however, and in view of the necessary limitations upon the practical application of the power conferred under this bill, I reached the conclusion that it was in the interest of good administration to report and pass the

There are a number of cases where it is desired to make ex-change of land now held for military purposes for privately owned land. If the policy which it is desired to follow is carried out without legislation it would require a very long time to secure the land needed by condemnation proceedings, and it would probably cost more to do it in that way than it would to permit the exchange under the bill.

The measure is fairly safeguarded by requiring that the President shall make the exchange. If we do not give the general authority proposed to be conferred by the bill it will be necessary in each particular case for the President to come to Congress for the power to make the exchange, which, of course, would occasion very great delay and in many instances prevent the exchange on terms satisfactory to the Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Does this bill contemplate that, in addition to parting with land which the Government owns in order to obtain other land which it requires, it shall pay money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it does not.

Mr. KING. . Then, why not adopt an amendment providing that no exchange hereby authorized shall require the payment of any money by the United States?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not see any objection to such an amendment, because that is the effect of the bill in any event. The only expenditure that can occur under this bill, as I recall, is that of the fund for contingent expenses of the Army there may be paid the expenses of appraising the lands which are to be acquired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill requires that the lands which are acquired by the Government by exchange shall be appraised by three persons, one to be selected by the President, another to be selected by the person owning the land, and those two to select the third appraiser, and the expenses of appraisal are to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Army, which, as stated by the Senator from New York, is a very small fund.

I have no objection to such an amendment as that suggested by the Senator from Utah; I do not see the necessity of it; but I take it that, if the Senator from Utah thinks it is necessary, the Senator from New York will probably consent to such an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection whatsoever. I may say to the Senator from Utah, however, that this bill does not authorize the payment of any money for land, and therefore money could not be paid. The bill merely authorizes an money could not be paid. exchange of lands.

Mr. ROBINSON. Nor does it authorize contracts for the payment of money

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question? Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. Mr. NORRIS. Does it authorize the conveying of land that the Government now owns?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is the purpose, to authorize the Government to exchange land that it does not need for land that it does need, the Attorney General to pass upon the title and appraisement to be made under authority of the Secretary of War.

Mr. NORRIS. What land has the Government there that it does not need?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps I can get that from the The report does not give the metes and bounds of the lands that the Government does not need, nor does it give any description of them. The department merely states that it has lands which it does not need, and that there are other lands which it does need, and it would like to make the exchange.

I will read again, as I did a moment ago:

Owing to changes in the plans for defense of these islands, brought about principally by the changes in methods of warfare during the past five years, it is necessary that additional tracts of land be obtained amount that is fit for agricultural purposes is very small. It in the near future. In time of peace private land can be taken only by condemnation, and as it can be condemned or purchased only by special authority of Congress a total of delays and an increase in values frequently necessitates an additional appropriation owing to the advance in price between the time of the request for the appropriation and the condemnation judgment,

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the Senator read that. Mr. WADSWORTH. Further on, the report says:

In isolated instances it may be possible that the military authorities would desire an addition of land of no greater value than $5,000, but in practically all instances where additional lands are desired the value is so great that the above acts would be of no help in obtaining the same.

Referring to some acts cited in the report.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator give us any information about the land that it is contemplated will be disposed of, and how we happened to get it, and for what purpose we got it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Government acquired it at the time Hawaii was annexed to the United States and has had it ever since.

Hr. NORRIS. It was Government land then? Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; it was part of the Crown lands of the original Hawaiian Government,

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know to what sort of milli-tary use the new lands are to be put?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For fortification purposes and for the protection of military structures now owned and operated by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. These Crown lands are subject to entry, are they not, under some law similar to our homestead law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are the property of the United States Government to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand they are, but a good many of them are agricultural lands located in various places in the islands?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not give the Senator an accurate description of them. I have never seen them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that large acreages now owned by the Government are subject to the operation of existing laws affecting the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume they are like our public lands here: some of them are valuable, and some of them are of no particular value.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. But they are subject to entry by the people of Hawaii for homestead purposes?

Mr. SMOOT. They are. Mr. NORRIS. And it is that land that it is intended to trade for other land that the Government wants for military pur-

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not certain whether the land which the Government wants to trade, which it now possesses, is valuable for agricultural purposes or not. I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably some of it is and some of it is not. Mr. WADSWORTH. Very likely; and probably a great deal of the land which the Government owns now and has held for military purposes, and which it does not need and wants to trade, is also good for agricultural purposes. It is merely a readjustment of ownership. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New York that I think most of the land the Government desires that is in private ownership is on the island of Oahu. That is the island in which Honolulu is situated, and most of our defenses are located on that island. More than likely the land that they desire to trade for land located on the island of Oahu is land located in some of the other islands. They have very little public land left in the island of Oahu; but in the islands of Hawaii, Molokai, Maui, and Kauai the Government still owns great quantities of public lands.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to have more information than we have in regard to this land before we pass a bill that will permit the War Department to trade it off. It may be that it is necessary to do what they contemplate doing; but I notice from the report, indefinite as it is, that it says this exchange is desired because of changes in the methods of defense brought to the attention of the authorities by operations in the recent war. It may be entirely proper. but I think we ought to know definitely where the land is that we are going to trade off, what kind of land it is, and see that we are not getting rid of land that we ought to retain for home-stead purposes. I always feel, on general principles, that the Government ought not to dispose of its property unless there affirmatively appears a good and sufficient reason for it.

Mr. President, only a very small portion of the land in the Hawaiian Islands is fit for cultivation. I have forgotten now is a very mountainous country, as we all know, and that which is fit for cultivation, as a rule, is very valuable land. There is not much of it. The islands themselves are small, and when the uninhabitable portions and the mountainous portions are taken from the good land there is not very much left. If we are going to utilize all of the good land there for the purpose of building sufficient defenses to defend the bad land, we had better let it go and let somebody get it that can put it to

It may be that next year the War Department will experience another change; the military defense will be on a different basis, and the land that we get now will have to be traded off for some other land that is more valuable for military purposes. The danger is that we shall get all the good lands in the Hawaiian Islands turned over to the Government for military purposes and have nothing left to cultivate.

It seems to me that before we take a step of this kind and give this blanket authority for the trading of land without any knowledge as to where it is, or what kind of land it is, or what its value may become, we ought to have some definite information in regard to it.

I do not know enough about it to oppose the bill. It may be something that is necessary; but we are giving authority here that is almost unlimited as to the public lands of the Hawaiian Islands. It strikes me that we ought to get more definite information as to the facts before we are asked to legislate on

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator that the committee, in examining this bill at the last session and this session, made up its mind that it was a good business proposition from the Government standpoint. It is true that the committee did not require of the department an exact description of the lands contemplated in these exchanges; but, if the Senator desires, for one I am entirely willing that the bill may go over, and I will ask the department to send us whatever maps or surveys they have showing the contemplated exchanges. I can not say to the Senator whether it is agricultural land or not.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I do not want to be put in the position of objecting to the legislation, because I do not know enough about it; but I will ask that the bill go over for the present, and ask the chairman of the committee to get that information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the bill is disposed of I want to say a further word.

On further reflection, I am disposed to question the wisdom of the principle, even, of this measure. We have never pursued any such policy whatever with reference to military reserved. vations within the United States. Everybody recognizes that when land is set apart for a military reservation it is altogether likely to acquire some special value, so that in our own country when land once set apart for military purposes is no longer desired for that purpose it does not fall into the general body of the public lands, to be disposed of in accordance with general law, but a specific act is passed concerning the disposition of such abandoned military reservations. We never authorized the Secretary of War to exchange those lands no longer needed for military purposes for other lands within the United States which might be desired by the Secretary of War for those purposes. If it is necessary to establish another military reservation anywhere and to acquire lands, either by purchase or by exchange, a special act of Congress is passed authorizing the acquisition either by purchase or by exchange.

Why should we pursue a different policy with reference to the Hawaiian Islands? If we have some land there which is no longer necessary for military purposes, why should it not be disposed of? If we need some other land there for military purposes, and we can acquire that land by the exchange of lands which we now own but which are not necessary for military purposes, why not do the same thing with respect to that that we do with respect to military reservations within the United States-introduce a special act authorizing the exchange of such lands as we have for the lands to be acquired?

Then an inquiry can be made with respect to the character of the lands which are to be exchanged, just the same as we do here with respect to the lands to be acquired.

I see no reason for applying one principle within the United States and quite a different one within the Hawaiian Islands. believe that it would be altogether better, if lands in the Hawaiian Islands are to be acquired for military purposes, to introduce a bill for the acquisition of such particular lands; and if it seems desirable to exchange for them lands that we already own, it can be so provided in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if we can not take up this bill at some future time. I do not want to be continually objecting to the consideration of the bill. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall come up. There are some very interesting amendments offered to the bill, applying to Members of Congress the same rule that the Senator wants to apply to Federal judges, and the matter might require some debate.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President-

Mr. KELLOGG. I object to the bill being considered,

Mr. DIAL. I am not ready to take up the bill to-day. At an early date I shall move to take it up, and hope to dispose of it, possibly after the military bill is disposed of. I have no objection to its going over now.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator what is meant in the bill by a "high misdemeanor"? The term "high misdemeanor" is used.

Mr. DIAL. That is the term commonly used for very serious offenses

Mr. KENYON. The Constitution uses the term "high crimes and misdemeanors," but I have been wondering just what was intended in this bill by the term "high misdemeanor." Is it any different from an ordinary misdemeanor under the Federal statutes?

Mr. DIAL. That is mentioned in the Constitution. We will take up that matter when we get to it, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KING. I object to the consideration of that bill. I thought it related to poor defendants.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill will be passed over.

ORION MATHEWS.

The bill (S. 725) for the relief of Orion Mathews was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The bill was read, as follows:

Bo it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, Orion Mathews, late of Battery D, Second Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private from said battery and regiment on the 22d day of March, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Montana if this is the bill to which attention was called a few minutes ago?

Mr. MYERS. It is.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the report of the committee may be read.

The report submitted by Mr. Myers on the 4th instant was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 725) for the relief of Orion Mathews, having had the same under consideration, report thereon with the recommendation that the bill do (8, 125) for the rener of thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill was referred to the War Department for information and report, and in a communication addressed to the Secretary of War by The Adjutant General the following notation appears:

"The records of this office show that Owen Mathews, name also borne as Orion Mathews, enlisted May 18, 1861, at New York, to serve three years, and was assigned as a private to Company E. Third United States Artillery; that he was transferred August 26, 1861, to Company D. Second United States Artillery; and that he was honorably discharged as a private February 23, 1864, by reason of expiration of term of service. He reenlisted on the same day to serve three years and was assigned as a private to the same organization, and he deserted March 22, 1865, at Pleasant Valley, Md. Nothing has been found of record to show that he thereafter returned to military control or reported his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the military anthorities of the United States."

The purpose of this bill is to correct the military record of Mr. Mathews. The records of the War Department show that he enlisted May 18, 1861, at New York, and was assigned to Battery E. Third United States Artillery. He was honorably discharged February 23, 1864, at Brandy Station, Va. He reenlisted in the same battery the same day for a period of three years and is reported as having deserted March 22, 1865. Thus it will be seen his first service taken in connection with his second covered a period of nearly four years. The committee is further informed that Mr. Mathews served in 40 or more battles. He was wounded at Antietam and also lost a thumb in a subsequent engagement. His name appears upon the honor roll of his company, and set opposite thereto appears also the fact that he was injured at Antietam.

In view of his long and faithful service and the fact that he only is reported as having left his regiment just before the immediate close of the war, the committee is of the opinion that the relief contemplated by the bill should be granted.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to have the Senator from Montana make an explanation, but the fact nevertheless appears, as far as the report shows, that this man deserted. After giving honorable service he reenlisted. His country was further in need of his services. Knowing what the obligations and the hardships incident to military service were, he reenlisted, and, following that reenlistment, he deserted. Unless there is some further explanation I shall feel constrained to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there are some peculiar features about this case, and some which particularly commend it to favorable consideration. In the first place, the soldier enlisted for three years, served his country for three years, and at the expiration of the term of his enlistment he was automatically mustered out. Then he reenlisted almost immediately for three years more. He had an excellent record. He participated in a large number of battles, and received benerable mention for his honorable mention for his honorable mention for his honorable mention. honorable mention for his bravery and faithful service.

There are some affidavits in the case which show that the reason why he disappeared from his company on the 22d of March, 1865, a short time b fore the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox, was that in Maryland in some way he became separated from his company, in some maneuvers, or retreat. I think he was sick for a short time, and when his company moved its location he was not able to follow it. As I remember the circumstances, he was at a private farmhouse, and remained there sick, I think, until after the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox on the 5th of April, 10 days or 2 weeks later, and then, thinking the war was all over, according to my recollection, he simply went home, and did not think he had to report again. It was a matter of ignorance on his part largely, and he just did not report, thinking the war was over, which, of course, technically left him a deserter, because he was unaccounted for. This is my recollection of the affidavits. I do not know why they were not included in the

This bill has passed the Senate several times, but, through lack of opportunity, has never yet been gotten up in the House. The Senator from Utah objected to one of my bills, just preceding this one, as to which I make no comment, but this is so particularly meritorious that I think he ought to let one of the two go through. Those are the facts of the case, and I am well informed as to them; a similar bill has passed the Senate several times, and I would like to have it pass the Senate once more. Therefore I hope the Senator will not object at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I had introduced this bill myself I should object to it. I shall avail myself of the opportunity to-day to examine the record, and if I find that it is as the Senator states-and I have no doubt he states it as he recalls it-I shall join with the Senator in asking for its consideration. I ask that it may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

REUBEN R. HUNTER.

The bill (S. 906) for the relief of Reuben R. Hunter was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to award and pay to Reuben R. Hunter, of Deming, N. Mex., who suffered a total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes as a result of voluntarily fighting a forest fire on Government land in the vicinity of Cloudcroft, Otero County, N. Mex., in May, 1904, in an effort to protect valuable standing timber and other property of the United States, compensation at the rate of $66.67 per month from September 7, 1916, for the period and in the manner provided by the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, for the payment of compensation for permanent disability of a civil employee resulting from personal injury sustained while engaged in the performance of his duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President I desire to offer an amendment

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill so as to make a direct appropriation of $5,000 to Reuben R. Hunter. I will state the amendment, and then read the bill as it would be when amended. My amendment is to strike out, in line 3 and 4, the words "United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to award and pay," and all after the words "United States," on line 10, page 1, and insert "Secretary of the Treasury," and to substitute "$5,000" for the allowance proposed, so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Reuben R. Hunter, of Deming, N. Mex., who suffered a total and permanent loss of sight in both eyes as a result of voluntarily fighting a forest fire on Government land in the vicinity of Cloudcroft, Otero County, N. Mex., in May, 1904, in an effort to protect valuable standing timber and other property of the United States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator state the reason why he suggests the change?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator why I think the change ought to be made. In all such bills in the past the beneficiaries have been paid a lump sum. Last Monday we passed two bills appropriating the exact amount provided for in my proposed The cases, I will say to the Senator, were exceedingly distressing. It seems to me that if we undertake now to recognize the payment of what virtually is a pens on, provided for under the laws to-day as pensions and insurance to the soldiers of the recent war, we will find, when the applications come for service pensions for the war veterans—and they will be coming-I will say to the Senator this class of people will make claim that they have been treated the same as soldiers during the time of the war, and they will want pensions. I do not think that would be the proper course to pursue; and therefore I very much prefer to have a direct appropriation

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, when I introduced the bill at the last Congress for the relief of Mr. Hunter I provided for the appropriation of a lump sum of $10,000. The matter was gone into very carefully by the Committee on Claims, of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Spencer] was then the chairman, as he is now; and after much consideration the committee decided that it would be better not to make a lump-sum appropriation, but to allow a pension, and I think, while it is not called a pension in the bill, it is that in

I may say to the Senator from Utah that since last Monday, when we were discussing this matter, both on the floor of the Senate and in private conversation, I have been studying the situation a great deal, and I believe it is better for the Government, and it is only justice to the claimant, to put it in the form recommended by the committee.

This young man was serving the Government in putting out a forest fire. There was vast value in money saved to the Government through the efforts to put out that fire. This young man suffered the total loss of both eyes. I saw him last fall when I was home, and I say to the Senate that a more pitiful spectacle I have seldom seen. He is a young man, about 24 or 25 years of age, totally blind; he is dependent; he has no resources on which he can rely for his support; and he is, in effect, a charge upon the community.

I submit that it is better for him to have this monthly allowance for his keep than to have a lump sum appropriated, because he would not be able to use that sum in building up a business for his permanent support. The committee reached the conclusion that cases of this sort should be put upon precisely the same basis as those who are in the direct service of the Government, and it is the purpose of the bill, really, to give this man, who volunteered his services to save the property of the Government, the same advantage and the same relief which he would have obtained had he been in the actual employ of the

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire of the Senator from New Mexico whether it would not be possible to give this man the advantages of vocational training in some way or other?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure that would be of very great benefit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As the Senator knows, the blind victims of the war are being taken care of in that manner, and are being put in the way of earning their own living. Would it not be still better that provision should be made for his training vocationally than either to give him a pension or to make a lump-sum appropriation for him?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course, I think that would be a very great benefit to him; but there has been no suggestion of that sort made hitherto, and the matter has come up in this form. I think that question might very well be considered later and under other circumstances, because under the present law those who have suffered an injury in the service of the Government not only get the training to which the Senator from Montana has referred but they get this allowance afterwards.

I think it would be very proper for me to introduce a supplemental bill permitting this man to have the same training that is provided for those who were injured in the war, but that would not interfere in the slightest with the provision here, because this provision does not exceed that which is allowed to those people who have lost their sight, even though they get the additional advantage of vocational training at the hands of the Government.

I think that is a matter which should be considered later. For the suggestion, I thank the Senator from Montana, but it seems to me the bill ought to be passed now. This young man has suffered the injury, and I submit that a lump-sum appropriation of $5,000 is no compensation for the injury and does not adequately express the feeling which our country should have for those people who have suffered such injuries in the voluntary service of their country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, only a week ago to-day there was a bill before the Senate in which we granted $5,000 that was so far above the case now before the Senate as to the real suffering and actual conditions existing that they are not to be compared. In fact, in the case a week ago, as I said, one would hardly know that the person was a human being. He is suffering all the time and nothing can be done for him. He will not live very long, I suppose, and the Senate voted to give him $5,000.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President-

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Will the Senator yield for a

I yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I presume the fair and correct basis is not for the Government to get rid of its obligation to pay a certain sum of money and then forget it. The correct basis is to fairly compensate the man for the injury which he received in the Government employ so that as long as that injury lasts he shall get continued compensation. If we give this man $5,000 it may well happen that within six months it will be gone and the man who has been injured in the Government service will have nothing left for his support. The policy of the Compensation Bureau is to give a monthly sum that he can not squander, that he can not lose, that provides for his injury. absolutely what the commission recommended in this case, that $66.67 shall be sent him every month. It seems to me from the Government side of the case the action of the committee in accepting that recommendation is a wise one.

Mr. SMOOT. We undertook to do that in the insurance of soldiers who were in the war. We passed a provision that they should have $57.50 a month based on $10,000 insurance. I believe it will not be long before that law will be repealed. There have been bills introduced in the House and at the last session there was a bill introduced in the Senate to repeal that law and to pay a lump sum to the beneficiaries. I think I have receired thousands of letters asking that they be paid a lump sum. I did not think it was proper to pay a lump sum. I think if a lump sum should be paid it would not take very long for the beneficiaries, being young and healthy, to spend it.

Here is a man who has lost his sight. I do not know whether he has any family or not, but if he has one with $5,000 he could buy himself a farm, and his family could take care of him; he could live on the farm and do something himself. It was for that reason, together with the other reasons stated, when we passed a bill here only a week ago giving a lump sum that I suggested to the Senator from New Mexico that we make this change.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I recall in discussing the matter with the Senator from Utah that in the case he had in mind for the relief of the individual to whom he referred by making a lump-sum appropriation of $5,000, on last Monday, ferer was not expected to live a great while. I think the Senator from Utah made that statement. That is quite a different case from the one under discussion. If there had been an injury instead of a total loss of sight, then a lump sum might be proper. In that case the unfortunate individual probably can not live long, and I think a lump-sum appropriation might very well be made there.

But here is a young man otherwise in good health who will undoubtedly live a number of years. We do not give lump sum appropriations for the relief of those who are disabled in the Government service. We prefer, and I think it is the wisest policy, to pension them, allowing them a monthly allowance. Why there should be any distinction here, I must say to the Senator from Utah, I can not see. It seems to me we are doing a just and wise thing to put this individual on the same basis that we have put all those who were in the public service, because he met with his misfortune in the public service.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken when he says we pay insurance in monthly installments to all the ex-soldiers. is true as to the original term insurance that was taken out during the war, but Congress, the Senator will remember, has changed that so that wherever the term insurance has been transferred into regular insurance, and that was done under the law, they are paid the lump sum the same as all the insurance companies pay. I objected to it at the time, but it was carried, and I think carried improperly, too. However, that is the case as it exists to-day.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. This man is not a farmer. He was working as a miner, earning about $3.50 a day. By occupation he is a broom maker. He never had $5,000 in his life, and the chances are more than even that if he were given $5,000 he would be cheated out of it within a year and be a charge on the community. Why put $5,000 into the man's hands when, with a wisdom that is greater than our own, he says, "Pay me $66.67 a month in order that I may live on, weakened as I am by this injury received in the Government service "? Why is not that the right thing to do?

Mr. SMOOT. I am rather inclined to think that is a very good thing, but I think all ought to be treated alike. I believe if we are going to carry it out in one case we had better carry it out generally and have all cases exactly the same. Therefore, if there is any question about it, I shall withdraw my amendment and let the bill pass, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only complying with what I think ought to apply to all the veterans of the war. I think the Senator from New Mexico voted against me when I tried to apply that to the insurance when it was transferred to term insurance.

I thank the Senator from Utah Mr. JONES of New Mexico.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Utah has withdrawn his amendment. It seems to me this is one of the most deserving cases that I ever heard of. It is obviously to the interest of the man to give him monthly payments. He certainly deserves it. He is carrying a lifelong injury, under which he may have to suffer for many years. I sincerely hope the bill will pass in its present form.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF ARMS AND EQUIPMENT.

The bill (S. 1574) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange with foreign nations desiring same samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over. I do not know what it means.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will go over. FEDERAL LIVE-STOCK COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 659) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that is a bill of such nature that we could not expect to consider it under the call of the calendar; but I want to state while we are passing over the bill that as soon as the appropriation bills are out of the waythe present unfinished business and the Army appropriation bill, if that is ready to follow-I shall, under instructions of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, ask the Senate to take up this bill and dispose of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

STOLEN MOTOR VEHICLES.

The bill (S. 1060) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement before the bill goes over.

Mr. KING. I will reserve my objection until the Senator makes his statement.

Mr. NELSON. The bill involves simply an amendment of the law. We passed an act approved November 29, 1919, in reference to the transportation of stolen automobiles in interstate commerce. I will read the part of the section that it is proposed to amend:

That whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce a motor vehicle, knowing the same to have been stolen—

I will say that the first section of the law defines what a motor vehicle is; it includes trucks and all kinds of motorsknowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine-

And so forth.

The only amendment proposed to be made in the law is to put in the word "embezzlement," so as to include not only cases where the automobile is stolen, but as well cases of embezzle-The distinction is very well put by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Moore v. The United States (160 U. S., 269), where the court says:

Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom such property has been intrusted or into whose hands it has lawfully come. It differs from larceny in the fact that the original taking of the property was lawful or with the consent of the owner, while in the case of larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking.

This bill simply proposes to amend the law so as to cover those cases where a man may have hired an automobile or may have come into possession of an automobile and afterwards concluded to embezzle it. I think it is a proper amendment to the law, and when he understands it I do not think the Senator from Utah will object to it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not support the measure of which this bill is amendatory. I felt that the bill was unnecessary; but my principal objection was founded upon the thought that we were strengthening a policy which sought to devolve upon the General Government the enforcement of duties and obligations which belong to the States. Under the inter-state commerce clause of the Constitution we are building up a penal code which embraces offenses defined and punished by the States and which seeks to take over the police powers of the States. We are to live under the Federal Government, not under State governments. The Federal Government under this expanding authority and this new creed will protect our lives and our property and provide all legislation which heretofore it was felt the sovereign States should enact.

We have in every State statutes against larceny and embezzlement. If there is a felonious taking and carrying away of personal property, whether an automobile or any other form of personal property, the State statutes provide punishment.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. KING. Yes. Mr. NELSON. This bill only proposes to cover cases arising in interstate commerce. It simply relates to the transporta-tion of embezzled property in interstate commerce, not in State commerce.

Mr. KING. I grant that; but the Senator from Minnesota knows that there must be a venue law, there must be some place where the offense is committed, and the embezzlement must be established in a Federal court, the same as in a State court. It is nevertheless embezzlement now, even though the offender flees into another State. If a person commits a trespass and steals an automobile he is punishable under State statutes though he flees beyond the boundaries of the State in which the larceny was committed. The asportation may be in one State, but it is still a crime though refuge is taken in another State. Some States have laws which make the taking "continuous" for the purpose of establishing venue, so that the offender might be punished in one or more States for the larceny of the same property. So, also, if a person lawfully in possession of a motor vehicle takes it into another State and then disposes of it and converts the proceeds derived from the sale to his own use, he could be punished under the State laws. "Interstate embezzlement" is State embezzlement, and is punishable in every State of the Union.

I grant that this measure may be regarded as a proper complement to the bill passed some time ago making it a Federal offense to take from one State into another a motor vehicle which had been stolen. There are persuasive arguments in favor of the Federal Government punishing the larceny of motor vehicles where they are taken from one Commonwealth to another, and it is not illogical that if it takes cognizance of the larceny of such vehicles it should likewise punish where they are "embezzled."

But there are strong objections to legislation of this character; I do not attempt to present them or to discuss the questions necessarily involved in their consideration. I believe that the tendency, strongly manifest now, is to have the Federal Government assume burdens and responsibilities resting upon the States; this I regard as most unfortunate and dangerous to the future of this Republic. We must not lose sight of the fact that the Federal Government is subject to express limitations and that its power results from specific grants. framers of our Constitution never intended that the Federal Government should enact a criminal code to meet the general and common delinquencies of the people. It was not intended that larceny and robbery and embezzlement and other acts or omissions which the legislatures of the various States have denominated offenses should pass under the cognizance of Congress and be included in a Federal penal code. Of course, it was understood that in the exercise of its undoubted authority the General Government would not only be justified but, indeed, compelled to enact penal statutes. Counterfeiting is properly the subject of Federal cognizance. Many acts and omissions readily suggest themselves as being the subjects of Federal consideration. But I want to protest against the persistent efforts to project the Federal Government into the domain of the States. The Federal Government is not only by its paternalistic and bureaucratic policies assuming duties and responsibilities which indubitably belong to the States, but it is enacting legislation which imposes upon it the responsibility of maintaining law and order and carrying out police and municipal rules and regulations.

In other words, the General Government is becoming an overlord. It is dominating the States; it controls the construction of their roads and their highways; it determines their health relugations and their methods of sanitation; it floods the lands with its officials and agents and employees, whose activities carry them into the lives and habits and manners of millions of people, and whose authority is asserted to not only shape the policies of States, counties, and municipal subdivisions, but also the very lives, habits, and conduct of the people. As "all roads led to Rome" in more than a physical sense, so in our country to-day "all paths lead to Washington." With the Federal officials here and the thousands who get their inspiration from bureaucracy here, carrying to the people throughout the land the message of paternalism, there is constituted an active, never sleeping, aggressive, and vigilant army engaged in weakening the States and conducting effective and powerful propa-ganda for the aggrandizement of the National Government and the strengthening of its authority, and particularly the executive branches thereof. If we may separate what might be denominated the criminal from the civil powers of the Government, I think it may be said that the Federal Government, having achieved remarkable success in the conquest of the States along civil lines, is addressing itself with undoubted success toward conquest in the field of criminal jurisprudence. Acts and omissions which have heretofore constituted State offenses are transferred to the category of Federal offenses. Criminal statutes are passed by Congress and regulations formulated by executive officials the violation of which is made an offense, and thousands and tens of thousands of Federal agents find profitable employment throughout the land in enforcing these criminal laws and punitive regulations. States discover that matters of which they formerly took cognizance the Federal Government now seeks control; that acts which they have in the past punished as offenses the Federal Government is now taking jurisdiction over and penal statutes are enacted by it. Every State has statutes against larceny and robbery; they have provided comprehensive penal codes for the protection of life and property and for the punishment of those who commit offenses. They punish for the larceny of automobiles or for the embezzlement of property. I am not willing to confess that life and property are unsafe under the protection of our Commonwealths or that they are incompetent to deal with those questions relating to the domestic welfare of Many States have prohibition statutes and yet by reason of the activity of the Federal Government in dealing with the question of prohibition there is perhaps a lessening of the vigilance of the State officials in the enforcement of State statutes relating to this matter. And that is to be expected if the Federal Government assumes control over subjects which the States have in the past considered within their domain, and this results in a growing disposition upon the part of the States to permit the Federal Government to control the entire matter. And if this feeling is strengthened that Congress can pass criminal statutes relating to the protection of life and property there will be constant appeals to Congress to assume control there-There is a law now pending to make it an offense to rob a Federal reserve or a farm loan bank, and this notwithstanding the fact that States have ample provisions to punish for robbery. I invite the attention of Senators to the fact that we are transferring from the States to the Federal Government the responsibilities which belong to the States. We are weakening the States, sapping their vitality and vigor, destroying the faith and confidence of the people in their own Commonwealths and in their own capacity for self-government. We are constantly investigating matters within the States, of a purely local and domestic character, and we are destroying those boundaries between the States and the Federal Government the preservation of which is essential if this Republic is preserved.

We hear the slogan often, "Back to the farm!" We should have devised another slogan, "Back to the States!" There should be a revival of State pride and State authority and an awakening of the people to the imperative necessity of preserving those rights which they have reserved to themselves. Where a duty clearly rests upon the Federal Government it should assume it without hesitation and discharge it with fidelity. But it should strengthen the States rather than weaken them. It should neither invade the States nor should it enter what has been denominated the "twilight zone." There weaken them. are matters national in character sufficiently important to engage the attention of the Federal Government; it should not intrench upon the States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection to the consideration is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 4 of an act entitled "An act to punish the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919, be, and hereby are, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce a motor vehicle, knowing the same to have been stolen or embezzled, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.

"Sec. 4. That whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, sell, or dispose of any motor vehicle, moving as, or which is a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen or embezzled, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL POST ROADS.

The bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.
The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will go over. Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill for a sufficient length of time to allow the Secretary to read the report which was made on the bill? It is a short report, and I think the bill is of importance and is entitled to consideration

Mr. LODGE. Certainly it is a measure of importance. My objection was due to the fact that the bill is of so much importance that I could not see how we could possibly dispose of it in the 40 minutes remaining of the morning hour.

Mr. PHIPPS. This bill is precisely similar to the bill which was favorably reported at the last session, and I have heard no objection to it.

Mr. LODGE. I withdraw my objection to the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I reserve the right to object to the bill after the report is read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will still be open to objection. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the report (No. 40) submitted by Mr. PHIPPS on the 11th instant, as follows:

The Secretary read the report (No. 40) submitted by Mr. Phipps on the 11th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1972) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The purpose of section 1 of this bill is to amend next to the last sentence of the first paragraph of section 6 of the original Federal aid act, approved July 11, 1916, to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, except that, in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects shall not exceed such 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, plus a percentage of such total estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of such State."

By this additional language the cooperation now required from the States in the building of post roads would be reduced in those States in which the unappropriated public lands belonging to the Federal Government exceed 5 per cent, in the proportion which the area of such public lands in the State bears to the total area of unappropriated public lands for the states which contain large areas of unappropriated public lands in Indian reservations, to avail themselves of their allotments by appropriating a smaller amount of Federal and allotted to any State but enables the States which contain large areas of unappropriated public lands in Indian reservations, to avail themselves of their allot

Ing yearly a greater percentage of their average wealth than are those States in which there is greater concentration of wealth and higher land values.

4. Already several of these States are facing the possibility of losing some portion of their possible allotments from the Federal funds because of the obligations placed upon them to maintain all Federal-aid roads, which seriously affects their ability to meet through State revenues the allotments which have been made.

The clause extending the benefits of this provision only to those States whose area contains more than 5 per cent of public land is intended merely to simplify administration, as there are many States in which the area of public land is negligible but which, nevertheless, would have to be taken into consideration were not some such limit imposed.

would have to be taken into consideration were not some supposed.

Section 2 of the bill is applicable to all States and amends the existing law so that any sums apportioned to any State may be available for expenditure in that State until two years after the close of the fiscal year for which they were allotted instead of one year, as at present provided. This amendment to the original act lessens the possibility of a State losing a part of its allotment of funds because of inability to meet the Federal appropriation.

Section 3 of the bill is necessary in order to carry out fully the provisions of section 1. It merely provides that the present limit of $20,000 per mile which may be contributed by the Federal Government should be increased in those States in which the percentage of participation required of the State is decreased under the terms of section 1 of the bill.

This proposed legislation has had the approval of the Bureau of Publical in terms.

pation required of the State is decreased under the terms of section 1 of the bill.

This proposed legislation has had the approval of the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture. This bill is identical in terms and language to Senate bill 4899, which was reported favorably during the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress and went to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have understood from the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads [Mr. Townsend] that his committee was making an investigation of the subject of Federal aid in the construction of highways, and that he would be prepared to report a bill in the near future dealing in a comprehensive way with the entire subject. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that there is a resolution now pending before the committee which calls for an investiga-tion concerning the expenditure of Government funds in connection with road construction, the method of operation, whether economies have been observed, and whether the overhead has not been too great. The information which has come to me from various sources indicates that there has been waste and inefficiency in the construction of roads; that the prodigal expenditures have brought inadequate returns; that there has not been proper cooperation between the Federal Government and the States; that there has been an attempt to standardize where standardization would mean an increased cost without securing any commensurate benefits.

It seems to me that if the committee is dealing with the subject generally and is making an investigation or proposes to make an investigation we might with propriety defer action on highway legislation until the whole subject is brought before us in a general measure. I offer no objection to the pending bill; indeed, if I understand its purpose, I am in favor of it. We have so much piecemeal legislation that I have often felt that it would be far better if we reported general and complete measures instead of bills dealing with some minor or partial phase of a question only. Slight legislative attacks, instead of a general and comprehensive one, do not always prove best for the country. May I inquire of the Senator from Michigan if the committee of which he is chairman proposes to report soon?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is at present considering the very questions to which the Senator has referred. We are holding daily hearings on a bill which is before that committee. We have invited to appear before the committee those who have expressed a desire to be heard, and others who have not, representing every possible phase of highway improvement.

I will say to the Senator that the resolution which the Senator has introduced and has had referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has not received consideration by our committee up to the present time, largely for the reason that the committee have had no time to consider it, and, furthermore, it was in the process of considering the question generally.

In reference to what the Senator says about this bill being postponed, I desire to state that it has no reference to the future beyond the present appropriation. We are carrying a similar provision in the bill which we now have before us; but this bill is for the purpose of apportioning to particular road projects the money already appropriated by Congress in existing law, so that it will not involve any change in that matter, whatever consideration we may have of the resolution offered by the Senator from Utah.

I think there can be no possible objection to the passage of the bill now before the Senate, and it seems to me but an equitable arrangement to be made with those States which are denied the privilege of taxation because of containing so large an amount of public lands; and, I repeat, it applies simply to the appropriation already made. I do not believe there is any objection at all to the bill itself.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. KING. I have not objected.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator may be opposed to the bill after he has heard it presented; but I wish to call his attention to the fact that there is an emergency existing with regard to the passage of this bill, if it is to be passed at all, and therefore it should at least be considered.

On the 1st day of July a new fiscal year begins in all of the States, or practically all of them. The Government under the good roads act, as it is called, allotted to each one of the States its proportionate part of a fund which must be expended under the law. In allotting that money the bill provided that the Government could not put up over 50 per cent of the fund as against a similar amount put up by the State. That was done in contemplation of equal cooperation on the part of the Federal Government and the State governments and was very fair in the States where the property is in the hands of the citizens of the State, and therefore subject to taxation by the State. Now, as to public-land States, we find ourselves in this fix—and I shall only take one State as an illustration.

In the State of Nevada the State is required at this time to put up dollar for dollar with the Federal Government, whereas as a matter of fact only 7 per cent of the total land area of that State is subject to taxation by the State. Therefore the principle under which there was to be equal cooperation between the State and the Federal Government does not apply in a State like the State of Nevada.

The principal object of the bill that has been reported is to take care of that particular inequity. There is, we will say, $6,000,000 allotted for cooperation in the building of roads in the State of Nevada. That money is all going to be spent by the Federal Government in the building of roads in that State. This amendment in no way affects that appropriation. It does not increase it or decrease it. It simply provides that in the expenditure of that $6,000,000 the State cooperation shall be in the same proportion that the taxable lands of the State bear to the total land area of the State.

That seems to be a very reasonable proposition. The Government owns the other land. If you do not do that, what is the position? The position is that the Federal Government desires to spend $6,000,000 in building roads across the State of Nevada. It has already approved, through its Federal road board, the building of three great trans-State highways across that State, connecting with similar highways in Utah and California.

Those roads can not be built under present law unless the State puts up dollar for dollar with the Federal Government. It is physically impossible for the State of Nevada, with its small area of taxable property, to meet that $6,000,000 demand in any period of time.

Over 90 per cent of those roads that are laid out across that State are to-day on land owned by the Federal Government. Over 90 per cent of the travel across those roads is by citizens of other States than the State of Nevada. I am taking that State simply as an illustration of what this amendment means; that is all. Other Western States are in exactly the same fix. The report of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Phipps] has shown that.

Mind you, this is not a new act. The House of Representatives, which is composed of, we will say, 85 or 90 per cent of men living in the East and in the populous centers, has approved this principle; and I say to you that when the House of Representatives approves a policy solely for the benefit of public-land States, it must have compelling equity back of it.

At the last session of Congress a bill was passed through the House of Representatives known as the Sells bill. It had for its purpose exactly what the pending bill has, namely, that in those States where the Government owned large portions of the public land the participation of the State should be reduced in the proportion that the area of private lands bears to the unappropriated Federal Government lands.

That bill came over to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Subsequently to that time, as the report of the committee shows, the committee at the last session reported out a bill known as S. 4899. It was identical with this bill.

In another case I call your attention to the fact that just at the end of last session, when it appeared impossible to act on anything but appropriation bills, I offered an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill attempting to accomplish exactly what this bill accomplishes. I shall not read that amendment. I simply ask leave to put it in so that it may be observed by the House if the matter comes before them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

Except that in any State in which the percentage of total land area to which the title of the United States is unqualified or exempt under the Constitution or laws of the United States from taxation by or under the authority of such State exceeds 10 per cent of the total area of the land in the State, the Secretary of Agriculture shall reduce the ratio of cooperation on the part of the State the percentage that the area of the said land to which the United States has unqualified title, together with the land area so exempt from taxation in the State, is to the total area of all lands in the State.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mind you, this matter was discussed at the end of the last session by the Senators in this body. The amendment that I then offered was more favorable to the western public-land States than is the one provided in the bill now offered, and vet I understand why the Senator from Colorado and the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads adopted the form that has been favorably reported. It is a compromise. It had received the approval of the Agricultural Department, but what I want to call attention to is this:

At the last session, in discussing the amendment that I offered to the Post Offices and Post Roads appropriation bill, which was then opposed by the chairman of the committee and I think solely on the ground that he did not desire it attached to an appropriation bill, it became necessary before the Senate could vote upon that amendment to set aside the rules of the Senate, and that required a two-thirds vote. I failed to get a two-thirds vote of the Senate, but a majority of the Senators voted even to set aside the rules of this body so that they might adopt that amendment; so it seems to me that we should act on this bill immediately. I know that if such an amendment is not acted on before the 1st day of July, the State of Nevada will not be able to enter into any new contracts for building roads, and road building will cease in the State of Nevada at a time of the year when road builders should be working to the very highest possible extent and at a period when there are thousands of idle laborers who could be advantageously employed on this Government work.

I have used the State of Nevada only as an illustration. The bill applies to all the public-land States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill. I do not propose to discuss its merits. I shall only express my approval of it and hope it will pass this body. There are some amendments which I should like to suggest to it, but owing to the parliamentary status of the bill I shall not propose them at this time. I therefore simply request that the bill pass as reported by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] was called out of the Chamber.

Mr. PHIPPS. He offered no objection to the bill.

Mr. KENYON. He wanted to get some correspondence from the governor of his State about it. That is the situation. I have no objection myself, but he asked me to protect him in the matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very certain that he must have referred to some other bill, such as the general road bill, which I have introduced. I do not think there is any objection to this bill.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest that we let it go over until the Senator from Wisconsin comes in.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have only a short time before the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. KENYON. If that is not done, I shall object to it, because he has asked me to protect him in the matter. If the Senator can wait until he comes in, I shall not object.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let the bill go over temporarily. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STANFIELD in the chair) Without objection, the bill will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. PHIPPS subsequently said: I ask that the Senate again take up for consideration Senate bill 1072.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS.

The bill (S. 1360) authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal, provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition, was announced as next in order.
Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CODE.

The bill (H. R. 4586) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting the code of law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same are hereby, amended as follows:

Strike out section $33a and insert in lieu thereof:
"Src. $33a. Whoever, being in possession of personal property received upon a written and conditional contract of sale, with intent to defraud, sells, conveys, conceals, or aids in concealing the same, or removes the same from the District of Columbia without the consent of the vendor, before performance of the conditions precedent to acquiring the title thereto, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than 90 days."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMINE O. KERLEE.

The bill (S. 494) for the relief of Benjamine O. Kerlee was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to Benjamine O. Kerlee the sum of $51,200, for injuries received while employed in the service of the Grenment as a workman in the Kaniksu National Forest in the State of Idaho during the year 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOOL LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 990) to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia required for a school site, and for other purposes, was next in order on the calendar, and was read as follows:

was next in order on the calendar, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby authorized to sell at public or private sale, at a price not less than the true value of the abutting property based on the assessment, all that part of the subdivision of Granby acquired by the commissioners of primary schools of Washington County by deed from George H. Baer and wife dated the 25th day of June in the year 1869, excepting that part of said land lying within the lines of Twentieth and Jackson Streets as recorded in book 52, page 174, of the records of the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, the land herein anthorized to be so conveyed being assessed among the records of the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia, the land herein anthorized to be so conveyed being assessed among the records of the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia, as parcel 156 sub 38 and parcel 156 sub 39, reserving, however, so much of said land as is in the judgment of said commissioners necessary for alley purposes, the portion of land so reserved not to be included in said sale: Provided, That the entire proceeds of such sale by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. Let the bill go over. Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will not insist that the bill shall go over. My recollection of the situation is that there was a parcel of land set aside 40 or 50 years ago for a school site in the District, which has never been used. A street was laid out through it, leaving some small portions on either side of the street which are not suitable for school purposes. The territory all around has been built up, and there is every reason why this property should be disposed of. It can not be used for school purposes; it never has been used for school purposes; and it ought to be disposed of. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. WARREN. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The bill (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "cadets," to strike out the period and all down to and including the words "additional cadets," in line 8, so as to make the bill read:

read:

Be it enacted, civ.. That whenever, following any regular entrance examination, the number of candidates authorized under existing law to report for admission to the United States Military Academy from any State is not sufficient to fill the quota of cadets authorized from that State, a sufficient number of qualified alternates therefrom, not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected in their order of merit established at such examination, to fill said quota shall be admitted and charged to that State as additional cadets: Provided, That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment otherwise authorized by law, and that if by the operation of this or any other provision of law the Corps of Cadets shall exceed its maximum authorized strength the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced below its authorized strength. authorized strength.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WARREN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CON MURPHY.

The bill (S. 1737) for the relief of Con Murphy was next in order, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Con Murphy, for personal injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duty as janitor in the Custodian Service, Federal Building, Cheyenae, Wyo.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection, if the Senator desires to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I happen to know about this case, because it is for the relief of a man who was formerly an employee of mine. He took a place as the custodian of public property, and was injured about a week before the passage of the act providing

Mr. KING. I observe that he tripped over a little carpet some one was tacking down, and he claimed to have been hurt, and possibly was hurt

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is looking at some other bill. This is a very worthy case. A bill for his relief passed the Senate before, but failed to pass the House, because it was reached too late. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what salary the man was drawing?

Mr. WARREN. I do not now recollect.
Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation should be for an amount equal to the annual salary he was drawing.

Mr. WARREN. That has not been the rule in cases of this kind, where a man is very badly hurt. This occurred prior to the passage of the general law covering cases of this kind.

Mr. SMOOT. He should not get any more than those who are compensated under the existing law.

Mr. KING. This does not seem to me to be a meritorious case, and I insist on my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ISAIAH STEPHENS.

The bill (S. 937) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster of McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,070.58, the same to be in payment of certain money and postage stamps taken from the post office at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., November 12, 1910, by unknown persons

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. S. BUZZERD.

The bill (S. 938) to reimburse S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., for cash stolen was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120.30, the same to be in payment for certain cash taken from the post office at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., on February 13, 1914, by unknown persons.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the consideration of the calendar.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the first amendment of the committee that was passed over, which will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 8, line 14, amendment of the committee, passed over at the instance of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], where the committee proposed, in the item for "Transportation and recruiting," under the Bureau of Navigation, to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,500,000."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not sure that I am advised as to the character of the pending amendment, but I am Mr. POMERENE. anxious to submit a few observations upon another feature of the bill, and I may as well make them now.

I have been very greatly disappointed at the report made by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I was led to believe when this Congress convened that we would have a program of economy. I recognize that we can not always do the things we would like to do. I would not only be willing to vote for this bill, with its vast appropriations, if it were necessary to the defense of our country, but I would be willing to double the amount appropriated, or treble it, or quadruple it, if it were necessary

I am one of those who have been hoping that we might arrive at some plan of adjustment of international differences without resorting to war. I think I have a little more faith that this can be brought about than some of my brethren in the Senate. In any event, I am willing that an effort shall be made.

When I recall the treaty of Versailles I remember very distinctly that in one of the covenants we provided for a scheme for disarmament. Forty-two nations ratified that treaty and pledged themselves to it. The United States did not see fit to ratify the treaty. But I can not forget the fact that for years the leaders of both political parties in this country have been talking about disarmament, and now, in the face of all of our professions in that behalf, we are exerting ourselves as never before in the history of our country to increase our armament.

We are told by those who are friendly to this measure that it is simply carrying out a program which was adopted in 1916.

I am well aware that in 1916 we adopted a scheme or program, but let me remind Senators that was in the midst of the great World War. While in 1916 I was hoping against hope almost that we might not be drawn into that maelstrom, it seemed to me as one day followed another we were getting nearer to it. I have no doubt that when this program was first submitted by the Navy Department, and afterwards adopted by the Senate and by the House, it was with the thought that we might be drawn into that war, and hence the great plan of preparation which we laid out.

But, Senators, the adoption of that plan was in the midst of the World War, though we were not a party to it then. the situation is different, and to-day we are not in the war, and in my humble judgment we are not likely to be forced into another war, at least for years to come. The nation, I think, that was feared generally throughout the world was Germany, but Germany as a naval power for the next 10 years lies prostrate, and there are only two other nations that are ever dreamed of in connection with possible war. Great Britain; the other Japan. It may be I am a little overenthusiastic, but I can not conceive it to be possible that the two great English-speaking nations of the world are likely to go at each other's throats. When that happens the doom of civilization will have been sounded. I have no more fear of a war with Great Britain than I have this day of a war with Canada. Does anyone dream of war with Canada, with a boundary line 3,000 miles in length, without a fort anywhere, without anyone even knowing where the imaginary line is? We never think of war, and there is no more danger of a war with Canada to-day than there is of a war between the State of Ohio and the State of Pennsylvania; so that whether Great Britain has a navy in excess of ours or not does not disturb me in the least.

The other nation is Japan. I recognize the fact that there are men in the United States as well as in Japan who are constantly talking about the possibility of war, and because now perhaps there is a little controversy over the little Isle of Yap there are some good people who become seized with a fit of hysteria and constantly tell us that we are going to have war over a little island that is of no value whatsoever, except as a station for a commercial cable. Already Italy and France have declared themselves in favor of the position of the United States, and I think I am correct when I say that Great Britain likewise has so declared. But whether I am right or not, I am convinced of this, that, Yap question or no Yap question, there is not going to be war in the immediate future between Japan and the United States.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has presented an amendment which simply requests the President to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference in order to ascertain whether or not they can agree upon some plan of disarmament, and, if so, to submit it to our Government.

I have presented another amendment having for its purpose the same object, in which I desire to make it discretionary with the President as to whether he shall suspend building operations for a period of six months to ascertain whether or not we can bring about some agreement for disarmament.

The two proposed amendments do not conflict. Mine, as I construe it, is simply complementary to that of the Senator from Idaho. Why should not the one or both be adopted? What is to be lost by it? Why is there objection to it?

I have heard it said on the floor of the Senate that disarmament relates to our international affairs, and it is perhaps encroaching upon the power of the President. Not so. The question of furnishing the funds with which to build and maintain a navy is not an international question, it is a domestic question, and whether we will or not we can not shirk the responsibility for these great appropriations at this particular time.

Again I hear the objection made that already the contracts for most of these ships have been let, that the contractors will sustain damage if we do not continue the building of the vessels in accordance with the scheme we adopted in 1916. Senators, admitting that the United States will suffer some financial loss by reason of that fact, the financial loss which we will suffer will not be one-half the moral loss we shall sustain if we do not adopt some plan which will look to negotiations for a reduction of our naval armament.

Senators, we have a long record of professions in behalf of disarmament, but now, when there is absolutely no danger from any known source, we even refuse to take the first step looking toward disarmament when we can do it with entire safety to When President Wilson joined with the other ourselves. powers in favor of a scheme for disarmament, and after 42 nations have approved it and have substantially said to the world that they desire to disarm, what position is the United States of America in when we profess to be in favor of disarmament, and when it comes to our performances we are not only in favor of armament, but we are in favor of the greatest armament in all the world? No; if we are going to pass the pending bill without an amendment attached to it something like that of the Senator from Idaho or like the one which I have presented, we have practically closed the door to all hope on behalf of the world in favor of disarmament.

Mr. President, let me take a few moments of the time of the Senate to call attention to the present condition. I have before me a comparative statement of the navies of Great Britain, the United States, and Japan. This is a statement submitted to the Senate at the last session by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], who has charge of the pending bill. He first gives the present strength of the several navies. Next he gives a statement as to what will be their condition in 1923, and next he gives the relative positions when the final program is completed in 1927. These figures relate to the larger ships only.

At present, according to this statement, the United States has 16 first-line battleships and battle cruisers, Great Britain has 26 first-line battleships and battle cruisers, and Japan has just 10 first-line battleships and battle cruisers. In 1923 the United States will have 27 battleships and battle cruisers, Great Britain 28, and Japan 16, and when the final program is completed in 1927 we shall have a grand total of 144 ships of the type contained in the statement, Great Britain 180, and Japan 63. In other words, with our completed program we shall have more than two ships to Japan's one.

I ask that the whole statement from which I have read be incorporated in the RECORD, at the end of my remarks, for reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Nicholson in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, let me present some figures, which are based upon tonnage. I take the figures from the Navy Year Book, Document 302, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session: Great Britain, on November 1, 1919, had a total tonnage, built and building, of 2,829,661 tons; the United States, 2,067,478 tons; Japan, 980,426 tons; France, 799,873 tons; Italy, 434,724 tons; Russia, 524,324 tons; and Germany, 116,886 tons. In other words, on the basis of tonnage alone we had on November 1, 1919, more than two tons to Japan's one. We had almost as much tonnage as Japan and France and Italy put together.

As bearing upon the same subject, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Naval Affairs Committee of the other House, made on April 22, 1921. The bill to which it relates provided appropriations for a Navy of 100,000 men. The

The number appropriated for will permit of keeping in full commission at least 384 vessels, which is 32 vessels more than we had altogether in the Navy in 1916. A larger number of men would simply provide for keeping in full commission a greater number of small craft. For example, since 1916, 279 torpedo-boat destroyers either have been built or are in course of construction. The force appropriated for will permit of keeping 96 torpedo-boat destroyers in full commission.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that this is a reasonably strong Navy under present circumstances, but the friends of the pending measure insist upon adding to it all the while and adding to our burdens. What is to be gained by it? Anything? I am sure nothing will be gained from the standpoint of American satisfaction; nothing from the standpoint of the taxpayer; nothing from the standpoint of the world's peace.

Mr. President, on yesterday I picked up the Sunday Star, of Washington. I was very much interested in an article by the former Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels.

I think he has been one of the ablest Secretaries of the Navy we have had, and I have a sincere affection for him as a friend. In the midst of the consideration by the Senate of the raval appropriation bill I was impressed with two or three statements which he makes in this article. In the beginning of the article he asks the questions:

What is to be the fighting craft of the future? Must the dreadnaughts be scrapped? Have the submarines and the aircraft revolutionized warfare?

was to be the method of naval warfare in the future. Then the honorable ex-Secretary, in concluding his statement, says:

The Secretary of War joined me in asking the joint board of the Army and Navy to work out plans by which the experiment should be conducted in a way to truly test whether the airplane has put the dreadnaught out of business. The plans were perfected and the test will be made.

A little later he says:

Nobody can predict what the ship of to-morrow will be. We can not foresee the developments of flight or the full possibilities of the submersible. Every new weapon of destruction calls forth its counterweapon. My own advice would be—if the advice of an "ex" is ever wanted—"wait until the big experiment is pulled off at Hampton Roads before deciding what the ship of the future is to be. And then—in spite of Lord Fisher's cocksureness that the big ship is headed for innocuous desuetude—do not scrap any weapon that sails on the sea, dives under the sea, or flies in the air. All three are safer than dependence on any one alone."

I dare say his statement is the result of his constant touch for a period of eight years with the great naval experts of the United States, aye, of the world. I think Mr. Daniels goes further in this matter than I would; but an experiment has been arranged the purpose of which is to determine what kind of warcraft we shall have at sea. That experiment is to take place in a month or two; but, no; the expenditures from the National Treasury, if the Naval Affairs Committee shall have its way, must continue. We must build the very craft the usefulness of which we do not know, although we can get some definite information regarding that question in a very short while.

Mr. President, I received the other day, as I have no doubt other Senators received, a copy of a letter which Mr. John Hugh O'Neill, a mechanical engineer, wrote to the President under date of May 5. He calls attention to the revolution in warcraft. I want to read a paragraph or two from the communication written by him:

munication written by him:

Airplanes have become of revolutionary importance through the accomplishment of interference-proof radio control for guiding airplanes, explosive and gas bombs, speed boats and torpedoes. Other distance control devices have been used successfully. Control up to the moment of impact removes the uncertainty of aim from self-propelled or gravity-propelled explosive carriers.

What would an admiral in command of a fleet do if, with no enemy visible, he should receive a report that the undersea listening devices had detected many torpedoes coming toward his ships? Could he run from the torpedoes? They travel 60 miles per hour. Could he avoid them? Their aim would be corrected up to the moment of impact from airplanes above. Would the blisters save the battleship and battle cruisers? The torpedoes would be set to run under the unprotected bottoms and there detonate by magnetic influence. Could his shallow-draft destroyers escape?

The magnetic detonation would be as fatal to them. His fleet would be destroyed without his having any opportunity to flee, to defend himself, or to strike the enemy.

These long range torpedoes with the magnetic detonation may be discharged from submarines and controlled and guided by radio from either the submarine or an airplane overhead. They may also be dropped from airplanes and guided in the same way, while the guiding plane may be 10,000 to 20,000 feet in the air. The only possible defense against such an attack would be by superior air force, but that can not be relied upon during conditions of poor visibility or at night.

I refer to this letter because it demonstrates conclusively the uncertainty of the present science of naval warfare. Of course it may be answered in part that there will be constant improvement, constant development, constant invention. I admit all this, and I agree that, if there were any reasonable prospect of a war in the near future, we should be guided by the present state of the science of naval arfare and not by possible future developments; but it is because of the fact that there is, as I see it, no such danger that we should haste a little slowly before we place upon the shoulders of the already overburdened taxpayers the enormous amount provided for in

Mr. President, it is true that during the war enormous sums of money were expended by the United States for aircraft, a part of which no doubt was wasted, but during that period we knew that the aircraft science was changing every three or four months. I take it that no one to-day would insist upon voting the large supplies for aircraft that were voted during the years of the war before we became actually engaged in it.

What objection can there be to our suggesting to the President that he call a conference? Has any objection been made on the floor of the Senate that appealed to even the Senator who made it? Shall we go on and incur all this expense, and it may be in the next year or two learn that if we had attempted to bring about a conference it would have resulted in partial disarmament?

The question is simply this: Shall we make an effort for disarmament before the expenditure or shall we make it afterwards? It seems to me there is only one side to that proposition. If we make a reasonable effort to agree to some plan of These very questions were answered pro and con by Senators at the last session to the best of their ability; but not one of them was able, I dare say, to satisfy his own mind as to what complete our program. Aye, we can go further, and we can say, if need be, that we will have a fleet that shall surpass even the greatest of the fleets of the sea.

Mr. President, let us look for a few minutes to the financial side of this question. I have been amazed as I have scanned the appropriations which have been made for naval purposes during the past 10 years or more. They are as follows:

For the fiscal year 1910 we appropriated $136,935,199.05. For the fiscal year 1911 we appropriated $131,510,246.01. For the fiscal year 1912 we appropriated $126,478,338.24. For the fiscal year 1913 we appropriated $128,908,196.96. For the fiscal year 1914 we appropriated $141,050,643.53. For the fiscal year 1915 we appropriated $145,503,963.48.

For the fiscal year 1916 we appropriated $149,763,563.45. For the fiscal year 1917 we appropriated $312,888,060.25.

For the fiscal year 1918, when we were already in the war, we appropriated $516,607,387.08.

For the fiscal year 1919 we appropriated $1,888,765,691.01. For the fiscal year 1920 we appropriated $616,096,838.88. For the fiscal year 1921 we appropriated $433,279,574.

The House provides in the pending bill, in round numbers, for the appropriation of $400,000,000, and the Senate committee adds another $100,000,000 to it, making $500,000,000 now, a sum almost equal to the appropriations for 1918 and only surpassed by the appropriations for naval purposes in the years 1919 and

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curus in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator. Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, there was a deficit in the fiscal year 1921 of $61,980,372.94, which was allowed, so that the aggregate was $495,259,946.94; and there were other deficits, which swell the totals which have been given by the Senator through a term of years.

Mr. POMERENE. I am obliged to the Senator for that information. It simply confirms what has been my view; and I dare say that before the end of the fiscal year 1922 there will be another $100,000,000 of deficit added to this bill.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator object to my stating the grand total for 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920?

Mr. POMERENE. I should be glad to have the Senator incorporate it in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. It is $5,397,895,197.33.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, Mr. President, let us look further into the finances of the country for a few minutes.

Before we entered the late war our total public debt was a fraction over $1,000,000,000. At the present day, as a result of the war, our total public debt is, in round numbers, $24,-000,000,000. It will require almost a billion dollars to pay the interest on that debt every year. The Finance Committee is constantly searching for new sources of revenue. The Appropriations Committee, when it comes to small appropriations, is constantly crying out for economy; but when it comes to great appropriations for the military or the naval branches of the Government, we hear nothing about economy.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Referring to the statement the Senator has just made, I have wondered why that was. I notice that members of the Appropriations Committee, who are generally objecting to appropriations, do not object to anything in this bill, and do not seem to pay much attention to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from Iowa has completed his question-

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I am through.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to say that possibly one reason why they are not objecting is that although a number of the ablest Members of this body have interested themselves in opposition to various features of the bill, not one of them has furnished to the Senate a single particle of information as to undue cost in the case of any item that is in the bill, or any extravagance in the carrying out of the authorizations that are provided. I have waited with a good deal of interest to receive some aid and some instruction upon that point, and I suppose the members of the Appropriations Committee have.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. I am not saying that the Committee on Naval Affairs is paying too much for steel, too much for equipment, or too much for supplies. I do not know. I am objecting to the whole program of new construction at this time. That is the difference between the Senator from Washington and myself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator. Mr. POINDEXTER. The Committee on Naval Affairs has never undertaken to fix the price of steel or to supervise the construction of buildings. It is necessary to leave those matters to a very large extent with the executive branch of the Government. The Committee on Naval Affairs is peculiarly interested in finding out whether the money that is appropriated for those purposes is well used, and in a number of instances it has undertaken to correct practices on the part of the executive branch of the Government in the way of the extravagant expenditure of money.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not intend to say for one moment that the Naval Affairs Committee has passed judgment on the price of supplies or the price of these ships. Perhaps it ought to. The only objection that I have to the Committee on Naval Affairs is that when some man in gold lace steps into the room of the Naval Affairs Committee and whispers "Yap!" straightway every member of that committee gets naval hysterics.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to say that the remark of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], that he has waited with some degree of solicitude for some evidence of extravagance with regard to these appropriations, indicates that the able Senator is discussing one phase of the matter, or has one phase of it in mind, and that we who are opposing the bill have an entirely different phase of it in mind.

As said by the Senator from Ohio, I do not contend that the Naval Affairs Committee has knowingly indorsed the payment of money for something which it is supposed to get which it is not getting, or that it has indorsed the payment of extravagant prices. I concede to the Naval Affairs Committee entire integrity of view with reference to the manner in which the appropriations shall be expended. What we do say, however, is that although you may be getting your steel at the lowest figure, and although you may be building your ships at the lowest figure, and although you may be doing all that you are doing at the est figure, and you may be doing all that you are doing at the lowest possible figure, you ought not to do those things at this time; that that of itself constitutes an extravagance.

Let me call the Senator's attention to this fact: He is from the West. He has had some experiences like the rest of us Westerners have had. Let the Senator wait until an appropriation bill comes along here carrying an appropriation to reclaim some of the arid lands of the West and find out where the members of the Appropriations Committee are. They will not be absent from this Chamber. It would not make any difference if you could show that you were building reclama-tion projects for one-half what you ought to pay the farmers of the West for their teams; they would object to building them at all, because they would say: "We can not afford it." Now, by reason of the fact that we are expending this tremendous sum of money, we are starving almost every enterprise which has to do with the building up of this country. Those things which bring relief, which will enlarge production and aid the citizen in his enjoyment of life, are being starved and stunted because we can not afford the money.

You can take the cost of one battleship here, $40,000,000. and make hundreds and thousands of homes throughout the West for people who are now actually home hungry and land hungry for the purpose of making themselves places where they may live as respectable citizens. When that kind of enterprise is presented here, the Senator from Washington knows well that it is not a question of whether or not you are paying a proper price for it, but the contention is that "we must not do it now; we have not the money."

Take another instance: The soldier boys who came back to this country physically incapacitated went into places where you would not keep your horse overnight, which they called hospitals. I have visited them and seen them under conditions that I actually thought were a discredit to this country; and we were told that the Government was in such condition reference to its finances that we could not afford at this time to expend the money! That is what we say is extravagance, to wit, to spend money for destruction and death when you have not the money to properly care for the Nation's brave soldiers. Mr. KING. Mr. President-field to the Senator from Utah?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator. Mr. KING. I want to go a little further than the Senator from Idaho, and accept the friendly challenge which has been submitted by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I think there have been pointed out upon the floor of the Senate numerous instances in which various items have been swollen to proportions that are absolutely indefensible.

I stated the other day that the overhead of maintaining the Navy Department was entirely too great. We are maintaining too many employees. For a Navy of 100,000 or 127,000 men the expenditures are entirely too much. I challenge those expenditures, the number of the civil employees in the department, in the various camps, and in the navy yards. I challenge the expenditures for oil and for coal as being entirely too much. I challenge the expenditures which have been made for steel and for the various supplies which have been purchased for the Navy, and say that they are entirely too much. I think it is discreditable to the United States and to the Navy Department that the cost of maintaining the Navy approximates the tremendous figures that are found in this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there is great force in what the Senator from Utah said about these overhead expenses; but they are only a bagatelle compared with the amount involved in this appropriation bill.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] has referred to what could be done with this vast sum of money to ameliorate the condition of the American people. He has only referred to three or four or five instances in which we could improve the mental, the moral, and the physical well-being of the people of this country. There are many other projects, such as good roads, to which I might advert. I felt the necessity of econoroads, to which I might advert. I felt the necessity of economizing to so great an extent during the last session that when it came to the road building program, though I am a friend of Federal aid for road building, I voted against it; and I am not now going to be put in the inconsistent position of voting against an appropriation for road building to put the money into some ships that would be out of date in five or six or seven or eight years.

Mr. President, the able Secretary of the Treasury, on April 30, 1921, addressed a letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House bearing upon the state of the I am afraid that a good many Senators have not even read that letter. The situation, from a financial standpoint, is appalling. The expenditures during the coming year will amount to nearly five billions of money, and where are we going to get it?

We can economize. The Secretary of the Treasury calls attention to the fact that of the expenditures about $850,000,000 will be for the War Department, $500,000,000 for the Navy Department, about $600,000,000 to the railroads, and about $650,000,000 interest on the public debt for nine months of the year. The estimate of the expenditures of the War and Navy Departments for the year 1922 will aggregate $1,350,000,000. Where are we going to get it?

The estimated collections of internal taxes for the year 1922 are $3,700,000,000, based on the provisions of existing law. This estimate is $850,000,000 less than the estimated collections for 1921, due to the shrinkage in business.

That revenue was largely derived from income taxes and excess-profits taxes. I think everyone concedes that the amount of revenue we are going to get from excess profits, even if the tax is continued as it now is, is going to show a great shrinkage as compared with the revenue from that source last year. The same may be said of the income taxes. Where are you going to get this money? You must provide additional sources of revenue or borrow. You must go to the one source or to the other.

Mr. President, if there ever was a time in the history of this country when our expenditures should be kept within the revenues it is now, when business everywhere is staggering Many of our friends from the South and the under the load. West speak of the condition of the farmers, and I share their concern for the deplorable condition in which the farmers find themselves. But the farmers are in no worse condition than are the manufacturers of the country or the laborers. The laborers are in a worse condition than either the farmers or the employing manufacturers. Out in the great State of Ohio, which I have the honor in part to represent, I am constantly hearing reports to the effect that at least 40 per cent of the men are out of employment. What relief is there for them? Is it to be found in great appropriation bills? You can not have great appropriation bills without adding to the taxes which burden us, and you can not add to the taxes without adding to the cost of living, and when the man who is out of work or his wife goes to the grocery store or the dry goods store for the necessaries for their family and is told that the prices at least are kept from coming down because of conditions at Washington, what answer are we to make?

Mr. President, is there any likelihood of our entering into an agreement to disarm? Does anyone doubt the fact that Great Britain would be glad to have an agreement? I am told authoritatively, as I believe, that during the last year or two she has not even laid a bottom for a new ship, unless it is within the last few weeks.

Is Japan eager to go on with her armament proposition? The Japanese people are in the same condition, industrially and financially speaking, as are the people of the United States, and the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] at the last session of Congress called attention to an interview which was given by Count Ishii in Switzerland, to the effect that the Japanese people would be only too eager to enter into some agreement looking to disarmament, but that Japan was compelled to go on with her program because of what we were doing here.

Senators, we can talk disarmament to the world, but what is to be the influence of our talk when here in the Senate Chamber every thought of this committee is to add to the armament?

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not I can be pardoned for an observation I am going to make. When our great President, Mr. Wilson, was in Paris talking about world peace and disarmament, here in the United States of America we were talking about universal military training, about adding to our Navy, about adding to : Il our military forces. Consistency ought to be a jewel in Government circles as well as elsewhere.

Mr. President, we can go throughout the country and we can put the question in this wise to the people, "There is great danger of war with Great Britain; there is great danger of war with Japan. Do you no: think we had better have a big Navy?" And every one who is frightened, as the Naval Affairs Committee are when gold lace appears and says there is danger, will say "Yea."

But I submit this observation: If we put the question up to the American people to-day and say, "Do you want to provide a big Navy now, or do you think that before attempting a big Navy we should attempt to get an agreement for disarmament first, before incurring the expenditures?" nine out of ten of the men and women of this country would vote in favor of negotiating for some disarmament agreement first, before adding to our Navy.

Mr. President, yesterday the New York Times printed a part of the address made by former Senator Elihu Root before the American Society of International Law, and in the course of that address, in referring to present world conditions, he said:

The weakness of the practice hitherto has been in the fact that no one had a right to insist upon a conference; no one was under obligation to attend a conference. The step in advance, plainly indicated as the natural development of this most useful practice into a systematic institution, is to establish an administrative agency whose duty it shall be to call such a conference in time of threatened danger on suitable request, and to place all nations under obligation to attend the conference when called.

That is our difficulty. When war approaches, and the neutral nations seek to get a conference, no one is compelled to attend. But there is no war now. Statesmen throughout the world are saying, "Let us have disarmament," but the Senate of the United States chokes when you talk about any agreement, aye, any negotiation even, for disarmament.

Suppose the great President of the United States should tomorrow send a note to Great Britain or to Japan and ask them, in diplomatic language, to send representatives to confer with our representatives on the subject of disarmament. Does any Senator here believe that either Great Britain or Japan would refuse to honor that request?

No; both of these nations are aware of the fact that if there is any one nation that can afford above another to have a great navy, it is the United States of America. It will not impoverish us as much to build it as it will impoverish Great Britain or Japan. But some one will say that is the reason why we should go on. No; that points our vantage. I do not want our people to be in the position of the people of Great Britain or of Japan. I want this Nation to continue to be the first nation looking to the possible solution of the great international problems of the world.

Mr. President, in 1916, I believe, in the naval appropriation bill, the American Congress expressed its view at that time as to what we should do in connection with the solution of international difficulties. I read that statute in part:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its international disputes through mediation or arbitration, to the end that war may be honorably avoided. In view of the premises the President is authorized and requested to invite at an appropriate time, not later than the close of the war in Europe, all the great Governments of the world to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of formulating a plan for a court of arbitration or other tribunal to which disputed questions between nations shall be referred for adjudication and possible settlement.

We have not represend that tratistic Mean would have the

We have not repealed that statute. No one would have the effrontery to present a joint resolution to repeal it. The pending amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and my own go one step further. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho asks, in substance, that the President shall be requested to invite a conference. My own amendment suggests that the President, in his discretion, may suspend this expenditure for new development for a period of six months in order to give a chance to regulate a plan to disarm. That is all; and yet the Committee on Naval Affairs wants this appropriation of $500,000,000 to go through without any disposition to bring about any plan of disarmament. There is only one interpretation that I can place upon their attitude toward the proposed amendment, and it is that they are not in favor of disarmament.

The time to save money is before it is expended and not afterwards. The time to take a step looking to peaceable solution of international affairs is before we have the engines of war; not after we have them. If we are going on to complete our naval program, Great Britain will not be outdone if her finances hold out, Japan will go on, and we will have less likelihood of having adopted a program for disarmament after they are all armed than we have now.

Mr. President, it is not very often that I run counter to the wishes, thought, and judgment of a great appropriation committee, but I feel very deeply upon this subject, and without any mental reservation whatsoever I say to the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs that they are making the mistake of their lives if they refuse to take this short step toward disarmament.

What are the suffering citizens of the United States going to say when, burdened as they are, we add to their troubles instead of trying to relieve them?

Mr. President, for the reasons which I have thus attempted to state I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Idaho as well as ask the Senate to vote upon the amendment which I have proposed. Even with those amendments added, if the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs are going to insist on adding another $100,000,000 to the House bill, I have not yet made up my mind whether I shall vote for it or not. Let us all be true to the pledges which we made, whether we are Democrats or Republicans, and cast a vote once at least in this administration for economy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee which was passed

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I demand a yea-and-nay vote on the pending amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BORAH. I think we had better have a quorum before we vote. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CURTIS. May the amendment be stated to the Senate so that we may understand what it is, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the

The READING CLERK. On page 8, line 14, the Committee on Naval Affairs reports an amendment to strike out "$3,500,000" and to insert "$4,500,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for nearly two hours,

Mr. BORAH. I understand that it is desired to have an executive session.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield the floor at this point for the day, as I understand there is a desire for an executive session.

Mr. HALE. Is there any particular hurry about having an executive session?

Mr. NORRIS. Then let us adjourn without it.
Mr. HALE. I do not see any reason for adjourning now. I think we can keep on for a while.

Mr. LA FOLLHTTE. I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. HALE. I hope the Senate will not adjourn.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 17, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 16, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have been in Thy holy keeping. Thou hast clothed us with the gifts of life as a garment. Open Thy window and hear us again from the temple of Thy fatherhood, as we are cheered by Thy promise which is with us:

As far as the East is from the West, so far has He removed our transgressions from us. Like as the father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.

Set upon us this day the seal of Thy approval and in Thine own good time bring us into the Father's house, which is the haven of eternal summer. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 13, 1921, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, on a recent occasion a pilgrimage was made to the tomb of Lincoln at Springfield, at which the Hon. Federico Pezet, the ambassador to the United States from the Republic of Peru, delivered a very notable and very brief address. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting it in the RECORD. It is the first address ever delivered by a South American in honor of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing the address delivered by Ambassador Pezet. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PENSIONS.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted a report on the bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my own remarks on the subject of the curtailment of naval armament.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming makes a similar request.

Mr. GARNER. These are to be, as I understand it, your own remarks?

Mr. MONDELL. The remarks I desire to publish are some remarks that I made myself in the city of Philadelphia on Friday evening

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF RAINEY AGAINST SHAW.

The SPEAKER. The papers in the contested-election case of Rainey against Shaw have been received, and the Chair refers them to the Committee on Elections No. 2.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4075) to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1479. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS-EINSTEIN THEORY.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, if it is not too late to ask unanimous consent, I would like to ask such consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the nonpolitical subject of the Einstein theory of relativity,
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the theory of relativity. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, ordinarily we confine matters that are to appear in the Record to things that one of average intelligence can understand. Does the gentleman expect to get the subject in such shape that we can understand the theory?

Mr. KINDRED. I will say to the gentleman that I have been laboring earnestly with this theory for three weeks, and am beginning to see some light.

Mr. WALSH. What legislation will it bear upon?

Mr. KINDRED. It may bear upon the legislation of the future as to its general relations with the cosmos. [Laughter.]

I dislike very much to object.

Mr. KINDRED. I trust the gentleman will withhold an objection. If I can satisfy the gentleman in any other direction and apply it to the relativity of the political parties, I shall also make that request.

Mr. WALSH. Oh well, with that qualification I will not object.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman might save that for his speech on the tariff.

Mr. KINDRED. I accept the suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED]? [After a pause,] The Chair hears none.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day is unanimous-consent day, and the Clerk will call the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTOMAC RIVER.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2218) granting the consent of Congress to Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this a measure for which a bill has come over from the Senate?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; and that bill is identical with Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman going to ask that the Senate bill be laid before the House?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Then I think action should be deferred until the gentleman asks that the Senate bill be laid before the House, whereupon this bill will be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is this identical with the Senate bill?
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that could come up by unanimous consent, or come up some other day.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1479 be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill in place of the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause,] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1479) granting the consent of Congress to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

the Potomac River.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Point of Rocks, in the county of Frederick, in the State of Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER The granting of Congress is hereby granted to the construction of the construct

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if this carries any national obligation or takes any money out of the Treasury!

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; it does not.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the House bill, H. R. 2218, was ordered to lie on the table.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws I move to suspend the rules and read the title only and pass the bill H. R. 12, entitled "A bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4. 1919," in 12,740 sections, as finally approved by the committee and printed under its direction pursuant to public resolution 24, passed December 23, 1919, a copy of which is in the possession of the Clerk

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to suspend the rules and read the title only and pass the bill H. R. 12, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LITTLE, by direction of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, moves to suspend the rules, read by title only, and pass the bill H. R. 12, entitled "A bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order upon that motion

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the motion is not in order. All that does not amount to anything. Is it proper to receive a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill by reading its title only?

The SPEAKER. It was done in the last Congress. Chair thinks if nobody demands the reading of the bill it can be done.

Mr. WALSH. I just wanted to know if that was permissible. would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a few questions. The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman from Kansas take up some time in explaining the changes that have been made?

Mr. LITTLE. We shall have about 20 minutes between us, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Moore] and myself, and perhaps some arrangement can be made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.
Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that no codification bill has ever yet been passed without involving many changes of the law. I do not like legislation of this kind. I make a point of order against it.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman will not make the point of order. This is a codification, not a revision. The House passed this bill near the end of the last session under a similar resolution.

Mr. LITTLE. Unanimously.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no change of law. This is simply codification of the law, and one that is badly needed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Can I be assured that there are no changes in the law?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman can be assured of

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Because the last codification that was passed, as I remember, during the time when Mr. Moon, of Pennsylvania, was in charge of it, from that committee, involved a great many changes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Kansas has taken a very different view of his duties and those of the committee from what the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his committee did. They have attempted to make a codification without changing the law. In the former case the committee frankly admitted that they had made important modifications.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There were a great many changes, and even when the bill was read we were unable to find out or have a full argument about it.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman can be satisfied with the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Little] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Moore] as to this codification.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If there are no changes, I have no objection.

Mr. CANNON.

This does not change or amend, but merely codifies existing law?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. If there is any change, we have been unable to find it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill represents a compilation of all of the general and permanent statutes that were in force on the 4th of March, 1919. If the bill should be enacted into law, the purpose of the committee is to bring in an independent bill, which will specify the number of copies that are to be printed and their disposition. The thought is that the free distribution ought to be quite general, so that all of the agencies of the Government may be supplied and all of the Federal courts and perhaps the courts of record in the several States. Besides, the thought is that a sufficient number of copies should be printed to enable the public to purchase the compilation at something like $5 per volume. The bill contains 12,740 sections, without taking into account the final chapter, containing 7 sections, which makes certain explanations and This final chapter corresponds with the final reservations. chapter contained in the codification of 1878, as we usually refer to it. The very fact that legislation in these days so rapidly increases in volume points to the importance and re-cessity of this work. The truth is that a compilation should long ago have been undertaken in the long period that has elapsed since the previous compilation was made.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes. Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I was inquiring about the index of these volumes which it is proposed to send out to the various departments. Has the committee a comprehensive index to the compilation?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The committee has not made an index, just as no committee of Congress ever makes an index of the Statutes at Large issued after the end of every Congress.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Does the gentleman think it will be of much service unless there is a thorough index made to these volumes that are going to be printed and circulated?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is no sort of doubt that careful index will be made.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. But it will not be in the volumes that the committee is going to ask to have circulated to the departments and to the courts at this time?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The index will appear in every volume that is disposed of after the bill is enacted into law, whether disposed of under the free-distribution process or disposed of by sale.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If, however, it is indexed before these volumes are circulated, special indexers will have to be put to work to do that job.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The indexing will be made immediately after the bill is passed. If the bill should be passed, then the codification will be indexed as a matter of course

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Has the committee authority to index them, and will they be indexed; and if so, under what

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If it is necessary to provide for the indexing by the independent bill to which I have alluded, it will be done in that way. But my understanding is that existing law provides for the matter of indexing.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. There is provision for an editor in the Department of State who does that, but there is an appropriation for that work in the library.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There will be no difficulty on that point. We have not undertaken any indexing at this time before the passage of the bill, because it would have been superfluous. As I was saying a moment ago, in modern times, when legislation increases with such rapidity, the need of codification becomes constantly more evident-codification from time to time. One of the most marked tendencies in Government in the last few hundred years has been the rapid enlargement of statute law. When the bill was under consideration last December I illustrated this by mentioning the fact that a long time ago at one session of the English Parliament only one statute was passed. That was a session held at Yarmouth, and the single statute had relation to the Yarmouth fisheries. In this country the first Congress, which set our system in motion, and was, therefore, called upon to do a great deal of work in the way of marking out the future course of the Government, enacted only 94 statutes, whereas in the last Congress there were introduced in the Senate and the House a total of 21,967 bills and joint resolutions, and 594 statutes were enacted. Of course, there is not any method of preventing the tendency to legislate being accelerated constantly. not undertake to check ourselves, as I believe the historian Gibbon says one of the Greek assemblies did. He or some one else has stated that the Locrians in their assembly had a rule providing that when a member of the assembly introduced a bill a rope should be put around his neck, with the prospect of capital punishment being at once applied in the event of the bill being defeated. Some gentlemen nod their assent to the intimation that such a rule would serve a good purpose here. One gentleman now in my eye, who seems to entertain that view, I have no doubt would be very soon strung up if that were our practice. [Laughter.]

Briefly summarized some of the main advantages of this compilation will be these: First, the people who conduct the Government will have quick means of ascertaining what the law is; second, the courts will have within reach a compilation that I included in this volume?

can not only be consulted but be admitted in evidence; and third, the general public, any lawyer, or any layman, instead of wearily searching around in a multitude of books for the law, will be able to find the law in one compact volume.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH: I have not the bill before me, but I noticed in going through it that there are a number of instances where two sections of the present Revised Statutes have been combined and made one section. Upon what theory did the committee act in following that method?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The committee has not undertaken to preserve the numbering of the statutes as contained in the Statutes at Large, or to keep the statutes necessarily separate from each other, but what the committee has attempted is to refrain from amendment, so that when two statutes appear in one section of this codification it may be safely assumed that they appear as they were enacted.

Mr. WALSH. But in some instances, I will say to the gentleman, I do not think that is so. There have been consolidations made of two sections which always heretofore have been carried as separate sections, and I wondered whether the committee had any particular rule which it followed in cases like that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The sections in this codification ordinarily preserve the original language. Sometimes it was found that clearly, and without any mere implication, one section repeals the provision of another, and in such a case the committee has thought proper to leave out the provision that is clearly repealed. I do not think, if I understand my friend's question correctly, that it can be assumed that we have made any change in doing what he says has been done, and changed the law from what it would be if this compilation had not been made.

Mr. WALSH. No; but the fact is that in consolidating two sections the consolidated matter, which heretofore has been carried as two sections, under your bill is considered in one section. The liability of error and omission is greater, it seems to me, than if the original sections were kept as they have been heretofore through all these years.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Ordinarily the consolidation has not involved any change in phraseology.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's committee is sure of that?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I believe the gentleman can take that for granted. We have been very earnest in the effort to make no substantial change in the law, but to leave the law as of 4th of March, 1919, as it then stood. Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it the purpose of the committee to have one large, cumbersome volume printed, with the old thick paper, as the sole official issue of the statute?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The committee in that regard will, of course, have to defer to Congress. When Congress provides for the way in which the printing shall be done and for the distribution of the volume, my own thought is-and I know it is the thought of others-that a number of volumes should be printed on thin paper for the use of those who will desire it in that form.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Referring to the question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], I take it that where there has been a consolidation of two sections that you write a note, probably under the new and consolidated section, giving the section and stating that it is a consolidation of two ormer sections.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is no mention made specifically of the fact that there are consolidations, but there is a reference in every instance to the original section from which the compiled section is derived. Mr. DEMPSEY. In this case there would be a reference to the two sections. Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; to the two sections.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Can any firm publish this document after it is published by the Government?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Not unless the Congress should so authorize, and my own view is that no private concern should be permitted to publish it.

Mr. DOWELL. That is my view.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The publication should be under the control of the Congress, and the sale should be under the control of the Congress, and the price put as low as possible.

Mr. DOWELL. One further matter. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that the temporary legislation is not Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The volume is confined to laws of a general and permanent nature.

Mr. DOWELL. Now, as I understood him-perhaps I am mistaken-the war-risk insurance legislation came within the temporary provisions and was not included in this volume. Is that correct, or did I misunderstand him?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That legislation was not included in the volume as originally made up, but because of the importance of that legislation it was thought best to place it in this volume, and that has been recently done. Mr. DOWELL. And it is in it now?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I just want to say to the House that I had occasion to examine the method which the committee was pursuing in the preparation of this revision, and I was very much struck with the painstaking care in which the experts of the committee were going over and over it again. High-class experts, such as were used of the prominent legal publishers of the country, were doing the work, also men who were in love with the work, who took a great pleasure in bestowing hours of work on small points to make sure to be absolutely and entirely correct. I think this revision has been done with a care that has never before been bestowed on any revision of our laws.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am very much obliged to the gentleman, and on that point it may be said that the committee has done everything that is humanly possible to insure accuracy. The chairman of the committee has given himself to the work very steadily and laboriously. The committee has had the services of very competent men who may be properly called experts. It has had the benefit of a mass of criticism from various sources. For instance, I happen to have here a letter written by a very able Federal judge—Judge Trieble, of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas-under date of March 24, addressed to the chairman of the committee, in which he says:

I am going over your act as I find time, and, confining myself solely to the title of the judiciary, I can not express my admiration for this work.

Then in addition the committee has had the benefit of a test which could not once have been employed, the test afforded by comparison of this codification with unofficial compilations made by private publishers. There has been comparison with the Thompson compilation, with the West Publishing Co.'s compilation, with the Barnes compilation. Furthermore, as the chairman of the committee has said, the matter has been referred to the departments.

The committee has had the benefit of their suggestions and advice. So there is hardly any conceivable method that has been omitted, and we perfectly recognize that the House takes upon faith to a large extent what the committee has done to guarantee the accuracy of the work so far as accuracy is humanly possible.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will. Mr. HARDY of Texas. To illustrate the advantage of conferring with the department, take the Bureau of Navigation, and that bureau has already compiled a set of statutes applicable to that subject alone, and they were consulted in the compilation of this. That illustrates the matter of consulting the departments.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That illustrates it.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. And I presume nearly every other department has issued publications for its own use.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I so understand. It may also be assumed that if we had worked for a much longer time than the two years the work has taken we could not have more completely avoided possible imperfections and errors,

Mr. McSWAIN. I think the gentleman is to be complimented. I would like to ask if it is contemplated to bring in any provision for keeping the revision up to date in the future? In other words, have you considered laying upon the Department of Justice the obligation of saying that the permanent general laws as they are enacted shall be separated and a provision reported for enactment, say, every 10 years?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have had that matter in mind. My belief is that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws ought to be expected to make a periodical codification of the statutes enacted subsequent to March, 1919. This should probably be done more frequently than every decade; it perhaps ought to be done not less frequent than every five years, a supplement being gotten out at intervals of not less than five

Now, one great advantage will attach to this compilation, if it is enacted into law, namely, that it will place the laws of report the bill.

the United States within the reasonable purchasing ability of everybody. I understand that none of the unofficial publications can be bought for less than $10. I am not sure that is the minimum figure. The maximum was beyond $100.

The SPEAKER, The time of the gentleman from Virginia

has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to express the appreciation of the House to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws for the very splendid work they have done in connection with the codification of the statutes, a work that has been much needed for a long time. Those who have had to do with the enforcement of the law for years realize the difficulty of knowing just what the law is. This codification will bring into one compact volume, or possibly two volumes, the permanent statutes, making them available and understandable.

want to particularly express my appreciation of the splendid work done by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Moore] and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE]. Those two gentlemen have given much time, earnest work, and study to this codification. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is particularly entitled to credit for the work that has been done. As chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws he might have assumed, as other chairmen have, that we could get along with the laws as they are, scattered through the session laws, and thus avoid the laborious work of codification. But he and his committee have taken their duties seriously, and this splendid codification is the result. The gentleman from Kansas has given much time and effort to this work, and he is entitled to great credit for that which he has accomplished.

If we shall enact this code at this session, as I hope we shall, it will be one of our most notable achievements, one for which the Congress will be entitled to great credit, and for which the people will, I am sure, be very appreciative. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken on the bill may be permitted to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that those who have spoken on this bill may have permission to revise and extend their remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

BRIDGE ACROSS WILLAMETTE FALLS, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2173) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a private drawbridge over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman who introduced the bill what State this corporation is organized under?

Mr. McARTHUR. I can not answer the gentleman. I presume, under the law of the State of Oregon. It is a local concern-a pulp and paper mill.

Mr. WALSH. Ordinarily in passing these bridge bills we set out in the law what State the corporation is a citizen of, and also provide that the permission or authority is given in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 23, 1906. Now, both of those have been omitted from this bill. I wondered if there was any reason for it.

Mr. McARTHUR. I can not answer the gentleman's question as to whether the corporation is organized under the laws of my State or some other State, but I assume it is organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, because it is purely a local corporation.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman have any objection to an amendment requiring that this authority be exercised under the act of March 23, 1906?

Mr. McARTHUR. None whatever. If the gentleman will offer it, I will be glad to accept it.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation and offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn, and the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2173) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a private drawbridge over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg. Be it enacted, etc., That the Crown Willamette Paper Co., a corporation, is hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War, to construct, maintain, and operate a private drawbridge, connecting the units of its industrial plant, over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg., and to use the canal right of way for abutments or other construction work.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "War," insert "and to such conditions as they may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the section. Strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the words:

In accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

That is the usual phraseology carried in bridge bills. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 2, after the word "work," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following language: "in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, on line 2, insert: "Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McArthur, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF GOVERNMENT LANDS IN HAWAII.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4598) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this matter involves the transfer of title of land in Hawaii, and it is a military matter of some importance, and I think it ought not to be acted upon by unanimous consent. I shall object, but I shall ask that it go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, as the Chair understands, objects but consents that it go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. Is there objection to its going to the foot of the calendar?

There was no objection. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, W. VA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4091) granting the consent of Congress to the Borderland Coal Corporation to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman having the measure in charge under the laws of what State was this corporation organized?

Well, Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, I would state that I think in passing these bridge bills we ought to have some uniformity in the phraseology. We always have had heretofore. It seems that there ought to be written into the law, when we give consent to a corporation, some language identifying the corporation and confining it to the corporation just specified. I did not insist on it in the case of the other bill, and I do not insist on it now. I am simply making the suggestion. I withdraw that reservation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Borderland Coal Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and at or near Borderland, in the county of Mingo, State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

BEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT RADIO STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RIGHTS OF FISHERY, PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2499) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Hawaiian Islands.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this is the identical measure that we passed through the House before?

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will permit me to answer the question, I will say that I introduced the bill. It was referred to the Committee on the Territories. It is the same bill that the House passed last term. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on the Territories then and now. I shall be glad to make such explanation as I can if the gentleman desires.

Mr. WALSH. I wish the gentleman would just refresh the recollection of the committee as to the necessity for this particular legislation before I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, this is to acquire the fishing rights in the harbor at Hawaii. The Government at an enormous expense has erected a naval station there, and I suppose it has been 12 or 15 years in securing its completion. Indeed, it is hardly completed yet. It is our naval station in the Pacific Ocean. Prior to our commencement of the station certain fishing rights were sold to corporations and to individuals in this harbor. Boats enter this harbor that we can not prevent, including fishing smacks and other fishing boats. We can not keep them out.

I want to say to my friend that I introduced this bill with some hesitation, because I did not know what it would cost us to acquire these rights. I thought there was sufficient restraint placed in the bill to allow us to safely make this survey. If we can not agree upon the figures, or even if they should agree upon the figures, the price must be reported to Congress for its ratification. Inquiry has been made for some time to learn what these rights would probably cost, but we can not discover what they will cost.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.
Mr. WALSH. Are these rights of such a nature that public vessels of the United States can not occupy the space there in the water?

Mr. BUTLER. United States vessels have the right under our agreement with Hawaii to occupy the waters, but it is for the protection of the naval base there that they desire to acquire these rights so that they may control the waters against the boats that come in the harbor and about which they can make no inquiry. During the war period we seized the rights, but at the termination of the war period any of these boats can come in and occupy these waters, approach the naval station, and it is absolutely undesirable, for military reasons, that they should have this unrestrained permission. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I hesitated somewhat about introducing the bill because we were unable to ascertain what these rights would cost. But we have a provision in the bill which you will find on page 2, that we shall retain in Congress the control until we know their cost. This bill was recommended by the former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, and it is recommended by the present Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby.

The bill was sent to me, as I said, officially, and I introduced it, when it was referred to the Committee on the Territories. Now, this is the situation. I can say this, that the military men insist that it is highly desirable, and both Secretaries of the Navy insist that it is necessary we should have control of these waters against these fishing boats that do and may come in.

Mr. WALSH. No one will dispute that. There are no foreign vessels allowed in there now and this is to keep out any of the United States fishing vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; any fishing vessel has the right to come in there. My recollection is that there is some provision under which the foreign vessels might be kept out.

Mr. WALSH. I am reading from the report.
Mr. BUTLER. The report has all the information that I I do not criticize any gentleman for being particular about this bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I notice that there is an appropriation carried in the bill of $5,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Is that sufficient to pay for all these rights?

Mr. BUTLER. That is only to pay for the expense of the survey, to ascertain about what the fishing rights will cost. I confess that I did not know there were any such rights until just before I introduced this bill. I assisted in obtaining legislation which authorized us to fortify Hawaii because I thought it was a military necessity. I suppose if I had known that these fishing rights existed I would have voted for the legislation, hoping that some way might be found to get rid of them,

Mr. McCLINTIC. Those fishing rights were conferred when the Territory became a part of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, a long time ago.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If we appropriate the $5,000, that is simply to make a survey to ascertain what the fishing rights will cost.

Mr. BUTLER. It is, and I will say that I am sorry the $5,000 will not be sufficient money to pay for the fishing rights. Mr. McCLINTIC. I am afraid we are entering on dangerous ground, because the rights continue way around the island.

Mr. BUTLER. But this is only for the fishing rights in the

Mr. McCLINTIC. We have appropriated about $7,000,000 for that island, and if they are not sufficiently patriotic to allow us

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, my friend is wrong; it is not fishing rights for us; it is a military necessity to control the waters in front of our naval base and keep these foreign fishing vessels out when we see fit. Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not criticize the gentleman for objecting, but I can not give him any further information.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I object.

TRANSFER OF ALASKAN NORTHERN RAILWAY BUILDING TO THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5222) to provide for the retention by the Government of the property in Seward, Alaska, known as the Alaskan Northern Railway office building, and its use for court

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some reason for this exchange being permitted, and why the Alaskan Northern Railroad Co. has not utilized this property.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to transfer to the Department of Justice a building formerly owned by the Alaskan Northern Railroad Co., at Seward, Alaska. The Northern Railroad was purchased by the Alaskan Engineering Commission under the act of 1914, authorizing the President to construct a railroad in Alaska. A subsequent act of July 1, 1916, provided for the sale of the property and material purchased or constructed by the engineering commission. But there is nothing in the act providing for the transfer from one department to another, so the Secretary of the Interior desires to transfer it to the Department of Justice to be used as a court building at Seward, Alaska. There is no other Government-owned building there, and when the court is held at Seward it requires rental of a privately owned building.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Will this require the expenditure of funds to fit the building for court use?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should say not, Mr. Speaker, for there are several large chambers in the building well adapted for court purposes. The court would be there only in a transient The district court is established at Valdez, and they would hold court at Seward once or twice a year in this building

Mr. WALSH. What is it that has happened that makes it no longer desirable for the Department of the Interior?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The operations of the railroad are conducted largely from Anchorage, 114 miles north, so that this building, formerly belonging to the Northern Railroad Co., is no longer required for use at this time by the commission.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, about what is the value of that building?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To-day in Seward I do not believe it would be possible to find a purchaser for it at any reasonable price. I believe the building is worth from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. PARRISH. What has been the arrangement heretofore made for holding court at that place?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On one occasion they held court in this building. Formerly they paid rental for privately owned build-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this building now belongs to the Government of the United States?

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. BLANTON. It is under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And this bill is merely to permit the Secretary to transfer it to the Department of Justice in order that another department may use it? Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why was not that stated in the text of the bill in the preamble?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know. The bill was drafted in the Department of Justice. The point of the bill is that there is no authority for a transfer. There is authority for a sale, but no authority for a transfer from one department to another under the act for the construction of the railroad.

Mr. BLANTON. And it costs the Government nothing to use

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Nothing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property commonly known as the Alaska Northern Railway office building, being situated on lots 16 to 20, inclusive, in block 16, of the town of Seward, Alaska, which was acquired by the United States under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1914, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," shall not be sold under the provisions of the act of July 1, 1916, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," or other like acts, but shall be retained by the United States for use by the officials of the United States district court and the Department of Justice.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to transfer the custody of said building to the Attorney General for use as above indicated.

All laws or parts of laws to the extent they are in conflict with the provisions of this act are repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DIKE ACROSS MUD SLOUGH, ON ISTHMUS INLET, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3018) granting the consent of Congress to H. H. Haynes to construct a dike across Mud Slough, on Isthmus Inlet, in section 23, township 26 south, range 13 west, of Willamette meridian in Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Oregon whether this is across navigable waters?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not navigable water. It is simply a slough opening from Isthmus Inlet. At high tide the water will rise probably to a foot or 18 inches over the land which is now covered with the tule reeds. It is a large, flat area, and when drained, if the dike is put across and the salt water shut out, the surrounding fresh water will wash out the salt and the land becomes very valuable agricultural land.

Mr. WALSH. If it is not across navigable waters, is the consent of Congress needed because it affects public land?

Mr. HAWLEY. It cuts off a small area of the tidal basin of the Coos Bay watershed, and for that reason the Department of War has always held it is necessary to have legislation before dikes can be constructed.

Mr. WALSH. But usually the construction work is done under the act regulating the erection of bridges over navigable waters, is it not?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; I think, wherever the water is navigable; but this water is not navigable. This was submitted to the Department of War, and they held that this kind of legislation was necessary.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean to say that he got some information from the War Department other than that contained in the report?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think possibly a letter. The report is printed. I have had several instances similar to this in other places in the district.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think it necessary to amend this bill to carry the authorization under the provisions of the act of March 23, 1906, which regulates the construction of bridges and structures over navigable waters?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think not; because this is not navigable water, and never can be. The dike is to be constructed under the supervision of the War Department, as especially provided for in the act. The legislation was sent to them for a report, and they made no such report. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce considered the matter at the last session and reported it in exactly this form, with one amendment. There is one amendment in the bill to-day not in the former

I withdraw the reservation of objection. Mr. WALSH.

The SPEAKER, Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to H. H. Haynes, and his successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a dike and approaches thereto across the Mud Slough on Isthmus Inlet at or near its mouth in section 23, township 26 south, range 13 west, of Willamette meridian in Oregon, in the county of Coos, in the State of Oregon: Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been filed with and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no dam or dike constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power nor to generate electricity.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "successors" and insert the words "legal representatives."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Oregon a question. Is there any likelihood that the adjacent landowner's property will be damaged by the construction of this dike?

Mr. HAWLEY. On the contrary, they will all be benefited. Mr. Haynes, who is to construct the dike, owns the land at the mouth of the slough. All of the property owners back of him will be benefited. They will not contribute except voluntarily. They have all asked that this be done.

Mr. PARRISH. There is no question of damages?

No. The port commission of Coos Bay has Mr. HAWLEY. strongly indorsed this construction.

Mr. PARRISH. There will be no question of damage?

Mr. HAWLEY. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Longworth). The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF POST-OFFICE SITE, BETHLEHEM, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 89) for the public sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street in the city of Bethlehem, Pa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill is to authorize the sale of this land to a bank?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. To a hotel. As far as the bill is concerned, it authorizes a public sale with an upset price. hotel people are interested in it.

Mr. BLANTON. The purpose of the bill is to enable a hotel which owns property adjoining the Government property to

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. At about $1,000 more than the Government paid for that property, I believe. Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Government bought it about 10 years ago?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In 1912.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not possible that this property is worth several thousand dollars more than the Government will obtain for it by a sale of this kind?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I doubt that very much. I do not think the conditions in the city of Bethlehem are such that for a considerable time this property can be sold to any better

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, if the Government has no use for the property it should be sold.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. BLANTON. But is there any possibility of the Government wanting a Government building here at some time in the near future?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not think there will be the slightest possibility of that

Mr. BLANTON. How close is this site to the nearest post office? Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The gentleman means this particular point of ground?

Mr. BLANTON. This particular part of the city

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I should say it was within a half a

Mr. BLANTON. And the people of Bethlehem now get their mail at a post office within half a mile?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is a new post-office building there, and in addition there is a substation in the city of Bethlehem practically just across the street from this plot.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can assure us if this bill is passed that during his term in Congress he will not be coming back here asking the Congress to appropriate money to repurchase another site in Bethlehem?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think I can very safely assure the gentleman of that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what buildings are on this plot?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There are a very few old residences.

Mr. WALSH. Are they occupied?
Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They are now occupied by tenants who are paying a small rent to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state with reference to the present post-office facilities at South Bethlehem, I believe

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is all one city now. Mr. WALSH. It used to be South Bethlehem?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Are they entirely adequate?
Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think they are entirely adequate.

Mr. WALSH. For the community? Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw my objection. Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what did the Government pay for this site?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Nineteen thousand dollars.

Mr. ROUSE. What rental does the Government pay for the substation across the street?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I can not tell the gentleman what the amount of rental is.

Mr. ROUSE. It is not equal to that sum?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Oh, no.
Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this bill came before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the last session. It was a bill introduced by Mr. Steele, of Pennsylvania. This is how it originated: There are two towns, Bethlehem and South Bethlehem, separated by a river. A few years ago the Government bought a post-office site in each of those towns, and then before they built a post office on each of those sites the two towns were consolidated under one incorporation. The Government built a post office in one town, which is sufficient to take care of all the postoffice business-the whole thing. Now the Government has one post-office site on its hands for which it has no use. Secretary Honston last session asked that this bill be enacted, as the Government had no use for the property. It has been referred this time to Secretary Mellon, and he comes back with the same report, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has twice made a unanimous report on this bill. I see no reason why it should not go through, as the Government needs the money worse than it does this site.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I will.

Mr. SEARS. How leng will the present post office take care of the business of Bethlehem?

Mr. ELLIOTT. As far as that is concerned, I assume there is an ample site there, because the Treasury Department says that it will not have any use for one of the sites, that they have ample post-office facilities for the city of Bethlehem at the present time.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that the new building costing between $100,000 and $150,000 will be ample for a long time.

Mr. SEARS. I asked the question because I have a place in my district where the building cost over $100,000, put up about 12 years ago, and now it is not half large enough, and I was wondering if that is the case in reference to Bethlehem.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. From my knowledge of the situation,

I think it will be umple for a long time.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, at the present site where the office is located are the grounds sufficiently large to permit additions to the building if they should become necessary in the future?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would like to say to the gentleman that, from my recollection, there is some ground around that building, but I am not certain as to the extent.

Mr. WALSH. How did it happen that they own this site in Bethlehem and rent this substation across the street? Were there any buildings upon it which could be utilized?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; there are only three or four very old houses there.

Mr. WALSH. How long has that substitution been built?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Ever since I remember the city of Bethlehem.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

The Clerk rend as follows:

A bill (H. R. 89) for the pablic sale of post-office site on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa.

Be it enacted, etc., that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell at public sale the post-office site and buildings thereon erected, situate on the west side of South Main Street, in the city of Bethlehem, Pa., after proper advertisement, and at such time and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, for a sum not less than $20,000, and to execute and deliver to the purchaser the usual quitclaim deed therefor, and to deposit the proceeds derived from such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Kirkpatrick, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5223) to exempt from cancellation desert-land entries in Riverside County, Calif.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to give some explanation of this matter. There have been, as I understand, two or three other acts passed for the benefit of this group?

Mr. BARBOUR. The first act was passed in 1912.

Mr. WALSH. And at what situation have they arrived that requires further legislation?

Mr. BARBOUR. There is a prospect of getting water there that can be utilized for agricultural purposes. Heretofore they have had to haul their water in there. It is desert land, and can not be improved agriculturally unless irrigated. There is a project in contemplation at this time-and the Sixty-sixth Congress authorized an investigation of it—for storing the water of the Colorado River and using it for irrigation in southern California. If that is done and the project goes through, these entrymen will undoubtedly be able to irrigate their lands, prove up on them, and get their patents under the desert-land law. At the present time they can not do it. The Secretary of the Interior points out in his letter that it is absolutely impossible to irrigate these lands under the present conditions.

Mr. WALSH. But we gave them an extension. Why did not they get this perfected during the time of the last act?

Mr. BARBOUR. They can not do it themselves. Mr. WALSH. What do they want? Do they want the Government to do it for them?

Mr. BARBOUR. No. The proposition contemplates that the Government shall do its share in reclaiming the public land.

Mr. WALSH. It always does that.

Mr. BARBOUR. It always does that; but the privately owned land will pay its part of the cost of this project and maintaining and operating it.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it that they can not get this necessary support? I presume it is financial support that they need.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know that I understand. Support of what?

Mr. WALSH. To carry out this plan.

Mr. BARBOUR. It is entirely too big a proposition for these desert entrymen. It contemplates the storage of the waters of the Colorado River.

Mr. WALSH. If it is extended until 1925, the ultimate date mentioned here, does the gentleman think they will be able to work out a plan whereby this storage can be completed?

Mr. BARBOUR. I think so. That will depend somewhat on the action of Congress. The last Congress passed legislation to appropriate $20,000 for the purpose of investigation.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Government lose anything?

Mr. BARBOUR. Absolutely nothing. Furthermore, there is nobody who can go in there and prove up on these lands, because they simply can not get the water,

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BARBOUR. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. About how many of these entrymen are there?

Mr. BARBOUR. About 800.
Mr. McKENZIE. Do they live far from this territory?
Mr. BARBOUR. Most of them live somewhere near it. They do not all live right on it. They could not.
Mr. McKENZIE. Is this land utilized for any purpose at all?
Mr. BARBOUR. No practical purpose, because it is covered with sagebrush and mesquite and small, stubby growth.

Mr. McKENZIE. Prior to 1912, was there some agitation that there was going to be a dam in there and that this land would become valuable?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know whether it was discussed at that time or not. The reclamation of lands lying along the valley of the Colorado River has been discussed in a general way for a good many years, but it has been only a desultory, general discussion of something that might take place in the future. We are now down to a definite project. The Reclamation Service is making and has made an investigation under the resolution passed by the Sixty-sixth Congress, which carried an appropriation of $20,000 for that purpose. So we are now getting down to something definite.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman that I am not opposed to this proposition, but I want to get the informafion.

Mr. BARBOUR. I understand, Mr. McKENZIE. What I want to know is whether or not the gentleman or anyone else has the information whether or not the possible construction of a dam which would make this land available for agriculture by the use of water from the dam caused 800 individuals, assuming that to be true, to go in there and enter on this land?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think there was any definite prospect of a reclamation project there at that time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Are they really bona fide entrymen who expect to develop this land, or are they men who are simply interested from a speculative standpoint?

Mr. BARBOUR. They are bona fide. In fact, the act is limited to bona fide settlers and entrymen.

Mr. McKENZIE. You are acquainted with all the facts and you are prepared to make that statement?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I may state to the gentleman from Illinois that at the time these entries were made the Department of the Interior did not require the entrymen to prove that they had a water right. The entrymen made entry of the lands expecting to get water; otherwise, of course, they would not have made application under the desert land law. But they found that it was impossible, without the cooperation of the Government in connection with the reclamation of public lands, to secure capital to construct their own project.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Idaho vield?

Mr. SMITH. Under the present construction of the desert land law no one can enter desert land unless he has an actual water supply in sight, and if this law is not passed these men will lose all they have put into it in the way of improving the land and getting it ready for the water, and any qualified person can enter the land under the homestead law.

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the gentleman tell whether or not these men have actually expended money on this land, or simply have filed on it?

Mr. SMITH. Many of them have spent considerable money preparatory to having the water placed upon it. Some of them have expended several thousand dollars, I am told.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then, it would be an injustice to these particular individuals to allow these entries to lapse?

Mr. SMITH. Undoubtedly so; and the Government would not lose anything by having the legislation enacted. It simply holds the entries intact until the water is made available, when these entrymen can come in and prove up and get title.

Mr. McKENZIE. These entries are made in good faith?

Mr. SMITH. Undoubtedly. No one would enter this land without the possibility of getting water on it.

Mr. McKENZIE. In case this dam is erected and the water supplied to the land, what can they raise on it?

Mr. SMITH. Almost anything that can be raised on irrigated lands anywhere.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says that no one would enter upon this land without the prospect of getting water?
Mr. SMITH. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. Was that prospect there when they did enter? We have passed three different acts to help them out thus far. Mr. SMITH. That is so, but this is a great undertaking, and it is not easy to get capital to carry on these projects.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman sure that capital is not hanging in the background somewhere waiting until the legislation is fixed just right, when they will come right down and take possession of this vast territory?

Mr. SMITH. That might be possible if this law is not enacted. If it is enacted these men who have gone there in good faith will get title to it to the exclusion of the speculator.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving further the right to object, I want to ask a question or two of the gentleman in charge of the bill. How many acres are included in this land?
Mr. BARBOUR. There are in the neighborhood of 800 entry-men and about 160 acres to each one. It would be about 128,000

Mr. PARRISH. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand acres?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; about that.
Mr. PARRISH. How much has been expended on this land?

About how much?

Mr. BARBOUR. I can not state definitely, but they have gone in there and attempted to build homes and otherwise improve the land. The amount expended by all those persons I can not state, but there has been a considerable amount of improvement done there. They have also paid 25 cents an acre to make their entries.

Mr. PARRISH. How many extensions have they had heretofore?

Mr. BARBOUR. They had one in 1912. I think they have had two or three extensions.

Mr. PARRISH. I notice that this bill gives the Secretary of the Interior the right in his discretion to grant them two years more after the expiration of the time extended in this bill.

Mr. BARBOUR. The reason for that is this; The Secretary of the Interior states that the only way they can improve these lands at all is to get water on them for irrigation purposes, and the only way they can get water on them for irrigation purposes is by the construction of this contemplated project. Now, it is at least possible that the project will not be completed in two years; in fact, it is very probable that it will not be completed in two years. If it is not, this bill would give the Secretary of the Interior the right without further legislation to grant an additional extension of two years.

Mr. PARRISH. As I understand the purpose, it is to hurry the final improvement of this land and make improvements final on this land, so that the land may be opened up to actual use and the country benefited by it. I was thinking that this last proviso might well go in because it would impress these people with the idea that Congress expected them to do something. If this two-year extension is left on here they will think nothing need be done for the first two years and the effect will be negligible. The fact is that Congress wants that land to be put in productive shape as soon as possible, and that impression would be given if we would leave off that last

Mr. BARBOUR. Under ordinary circumstances I think the gentleman's suggestion would be good, but the only way to get any benefit out of the land is to improve it, and the only way to improve it is to bring water from some distant place, the Colorado River. They can not do that unless they cooperate with other sections and other communities that are proposing to utilize this water of the Colorado River. It has got to be a big joint proposition.

Mr. PARRISH. Would the gentleman object if an amendment were offered cutting off these last two years?

Mr. BARBOUR. It would probably mean that in two years more we will be in here again asking for this same legislation, because this proposed irrigation project is a big proposition, and to assume that it will be completed and this land will be reclaimed inside of two years would be assuming more than I would care to.

Mr. PARRISH. If we eliminate this last provision for the two years, will it not have a tendency to give them the impression that we want to see some progress made on this project?

Mr. BARBOUR. The additional extension is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and it is assumed that he will not grant it unless there is a good reason for it.

Mr. PARRISH. I suppose they would rather deal with him than with Congress. I do not want to object to the bill, but I felt that they ought to move along with some degree of speed on these improvements.

Mr. BARBOUR. I agree with the gentleman that with the three extensions already granted they ought to be doing all that they can under the circumstances, and I believe that they are.

Mr. PARRISH. I felt when I got up on my feet that I would object unless you struck out this two-year extension, but with the explanation of the gentleman I will not object.

Mr. BARBOUR. It has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKenzie] that these entrymen can not take the initiative in the proposed reclamation project because included in it is Government land and also privately owned land. It is a big proposition. To hold them solely responsible for the inaction of other people would not be doing exact justice. are giving them an opportunity for two years. Then, if the project is incomplete or not far enough along so they can complete their proofs, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant them two years more. Frankly, I do not think it can be completed in two years.
